Thus, if there is congressional agreement in support of such a freeze in fiscal year 1986, funds would not be authorized under this bill for fiscal year 1986; if, on the other hand, no such agreement is reached, the first-year authorization would remain fiscal year 1986.

In future years, it would be my intention to seek reductions in spending in other areas to offset any new funds appropriated for this program. This approach would allow us to continue to address pressing areas of need in a fiscally prudent manner. Clearly, outdated, ineffective, or unnecessary programs should be eliminated or trimmed back so that new, needed initiatives can be pursued.

Given the changing demographics and the growing demand for child care services which I have outlined, this is certainly a new initiative that should be pursued in terms of the welfare of the Nation and its families. We cannot halt all programs in attempting to address these types of issues, but we can and must proceed in a fiscally prudent manner. This obviously means making decisions about existing programs so that there will be room in the overall Federal budget for new initiatives. And those decisions need not be confined just to the domestic side of the Federal budget. Certainly, some of the trade-offs can come from pruning back some unnecessary spending in the defense budget so that we can enhance our national security by investment in the future of our Nation—our children.

OTHER INITIATIVES

Mr. President, as we move forward in our efforts to develop a comprehensive framework for child care services along the lines envisioned in S. 4, there are certain other steps that can and should be taken to make child care services more readily available and affordable.

Mr. President, as I indicated at the outset, I have been exploring with the cosponsors of S. 4 and others concerned with child care issues, the possibilities of putting together a series of smaller child care initiatives—many of which are covered in the comprehensive approach of S. 4 but are certainly also amenable to being acted upon in separate vehicles. These separate, smaller initiatives might well have a greater likelihood of enactment in the 99th Congress than the more comprehensive approach envisioned in S. 4. Thus, although I believe that the framework provided in legislation like S. 4 would ultimately be preferable, I am prepared to do whatever I can to see some progress made in addressing the child care needs of millions of American families, while at the same time continuing to work toward developing a sound and coordinated overall approach in this area.

CONCLUSION

Mr. President, I believe that the proposed "Child-Care Assistance Act of 1985" addresses an important—and ever-growing—need in this country for a comprehensive, coordinated approach to child care. There is simply no question that the demand and need for child care will continue to grow. If we take steps today to design an efficient and cost-effective mechanism for meeting those needs, the ultimate savings will far outweigh the short-term expenditure.

Indeed, child care itself is both a short-term and a long-term investment in the future. Short-term expenditures may be almost immediately offset by increased tax revenues derived from parent earnings and reductions in governmental subsistence and other expenditures necessitated by the effects of lack of adequate child care arrangements. Some longer term social costs such as juvenile vandalism, delinquency, and child abuse and neglect may also be reduced by prudent and cost-effective investments in child care today.

Mr. President, I am deeply grateful to the many individuals and organizations that have provided their insights, guidance, and encouragement in the development and formulation of this legislation. I very much hope that by introducing S. 4 again, we will move closer to enacting meaningful child care legislation, legislation sorely needed and so long awaited. I look forward to working with my colleagues and interested individuals and organizations toward that end.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of S. 4 be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 4

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "Child-Care Assistance Act of 1985".

STATEMENT OF FINDINGS AND PURPOSE

SEC. 2. (a) The Congress finds that—

(1) the number of children living in homes where both parents work or where children are living with a single parent who works has increased dramatically over the last decade;

(2) the number of licensed child-care openings is far short of the number required for children in need of child-care services;

(3) existing child-care programs are frequently filled to capacity and often have long waiting lists for admission;

(4) the lack of available child-care services results in many children being left—some all day—without adequate supervision;

(5) the rise in school vandalism, juvenile alcoholism, and serious juvenile crimes has been accompanied by an increase in the number of school-age children with working parents and without resources for after-school supervision;

(6) many parents are unable to afford adequate child-care services and do not receive any financial assistance for such services through any established program;

(7) the years from birth to age six are especially important in the development of a child and the care children receive during this period is critical to the developmental process;

(8) making adequate child-care services and alternatives available for working parents and parents seeking employment or to develop employment skills promotes and strengthens the well-being of families and the national economy; and

(9) there is a lack of coordination among existing child-care programs receiving Federal and State assistance and among such programs and other programs providing services to children and their families, and an absence of a coordinated administration of child-care programs and services at the Federal level.

(b) Recognizing that the parent is and must continue to be the primary influence in the life of the child and that the parent must have ultimate responsibility for decisions on how the child will be raised, it is the purpose of this Act—

(1) to provide assistance to States in improving the quality of and coordination among child-care programs and to provide additional resources for child-care services;

(2) to provide mechanisms for assessing the extent of the need for child-care services in the Nation;

(3) to promote coordination at all governmental levels of child-care programs and other services for children and their families;

(4) to promote the availability and diversity of quality child-care services for all children and families who need such services;

(5) to provide assistance to families whose financial resources are not sufficient for them to pay the full costs of necessary child-care services; and

(6) to strengthen the functioning of families by seeking to ensure that parents are not forced by lack of available programs or financial resources to place a child in an unsafe, unhealthy, or otherwise undesirable care facility or arrangement.

PROTECTION OF PARENTAL RIGHTS

SEC. 3. Nothing in this Act shall be construed to authorize any public agency or private organization or any individual associated therewith to interfere with, or to intervene in, any child-rearing decision of parents.

STATE ACTIVITIES

SEC. 4. (a) Any State desiring to participate in a program authorized by this Act shall submit to the Secretary a plan, not less often than biennially, in such detail and form as the Secretary deems necessary. Each such plan shall—

(1) specify an appropriate State agency (with the capacity to administer the programs and services authorized under this Act and to coordinate with other State and local agencies involved in the provision of services to children) to be designated or created as the State agency to act either directly or through arrangements with other State or local public agencies, act as the State agency responsible for the administration and oversight of the plan submitted under this subsection (hereinafter in this Act referred to as the "State agency");

(2) provide that the specified State agency will—

(A) make an assessment of child-care needs in the State and an assessment of the effectiveness of programs and services funded under this Act and other provisions of law in meeting such needs;

(B) develop a plan designed to meet the need for child-care services within the State for preschool children and school-age children, with special attention to meeting the need for services of migrant children, disabled children, children with limited English-language proficiency, and other groups of children having special needs;

(C) coordinate, to the maximum extent feasible, the provision of services under this Act with other child-care programs and services funded under any State or other Federal law, and with other appropriate services, including social, health, mental health, and nutrition services, available to such children under other Federal and State programs; and

(D) prepare the reports required under subsection (d);

(3) provide that—

(A) funds under this Act will be distributed within the State in accordance with the plan submitted to the Secretary under this section and will be used for services provided only by child-care providers which—

(i) are licensed in the State or have applied for a renewal of such license and are determined by the State to be likely to be approved for renewal or, if not required to be licensed under applicable State law, have otherwise met the requirements of State law; and

(ii) meet the standards prescribed under section 5(c);

(B) funds will be distributed to eligible child-care providers by contract or grant either directly or, as provided in the State plan, through grants to or contracts with public or private nonprofit agencies for distribution to eligible child-care providers within a designated geographic area, or distributed through alternative payment demonstration projects under such terms as the Secretary prescribes for demonstration projects; and

(C) priority will be given to child-care providers in the State that provide assurances that—

(i) priority for services will be given to children on the basis of child and family need, taking into account such factors as family income, family size, and the special needs of children from households with a single parent, with particular emphasis on the provision of child-care services to families where lack of child care is or would be a barrier to the continuation or commencement of employment; and

(ii) each such child-care program will, to the maximum extent feasible, provide for an economic mix of children enrolled;

(4) provide that—

(A) funds will be distributed, to the maximum extent feasible, to a variety of child-care providers in each community, including but not limited to, child-care centers and family day-care providers; and

(B) priority will be given in the distribution of funds to community-based programs providing meaningful opportunities for parental involvement.

(5) provide for the establishment of sliding fee schedules based upon the services provided and family income adjusted for family size for children receiving services assisted under this Act;

(6) provide for the establishment of procedures for data collection and evaluation designed to show (in a manner not inconsistent with guidelines established by the Secretary)—

(A) how the child-care needs of the State are being met by programs funded under this Act including information as to the numbers of children being assisted, type of child care and child-care provider, numbers of programs and child-care providers, care givers, and support personnel utilized, and such other information as the Secretary considers necessary to explain how funds provided under this Act are being utilized;

(B) the degree to which child-care needs are not being met by programs funded under this Act or other programs;

(C) the extent to which the availability of child care has been increased, including but not limited to, numbers of licensed or regulated child-care openings, the extent to which existing child-care programs are filled, and the numbers and average time associated with waiting lists for admission to such programs; and

(D) how the purposes of the Act and the objectives of the State set forth in its State plan are being met;

(7) provide, by grants to or contracts with public or private nonprofit agencies, for the support or establishment of information-and-referral services to assist in identifying existing child-care services, in providing information and referral to interested parents, and in providing information and technical assistance to existing and potential child-care providers and others concerned with the availability of child care;

(8) provide, by grant or contract, for the support of training programs for child-care personnel;

(9) establish procedures for the development and implementation of State licensing or regulating of child-care providers in accordance with the criteria prescribed pursuant to section 7(a);

(10) establish procedures for meaningful parental involvement in State and local planning, monitoring, and evaluation of child-care programs and services in the State;

(11) provide assurances that funds provided under this Act will be used to supplement, and not supplant, existing Federal funds used for the support of child-care services and related programs;

(12) provide, for each fiscal year, that the State will use for administration of the State plan for such fiscal year an amount not to exceed 10 percent of the funds distributed to such State, except that in the case of Guam, American Samoa, the Virgin Islands, the Northern Mariana Islands, and the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands, the State will use for administrative costs an amount not to exceed 5 percent of the funds distributed to such State;

(13) provide for the establishment of a State Advisory Panel in accordance with subsection (b) and specify the amount of funds to be allocated to such panel; and

(14) provide for the establishment of reasonable opportunities to be heard for any parent, child-care provider, or child-care program which has been adversely affected or aggrieved by a decision of the State agency or any program funded under this Act.

(b)(1) The State Advisory Panel on Child Care established by the State shall be composed of not less than fifteen members—

(A) of which not less than one-third shall be parents of children who are receiving or have recently received child-care services of the type funded under this Act; and

(B) of which not less than one-third shall be representatives of child-care providers and care givers within the State, including representatives of different types of child-care programs (such as public, private, private nonprofit, center-based, and family day-care programs) and individuals who are professionals in the field of child development.

(2) The State Advisory Panel shall—

(A) advise the State on the preparation, and policy matters arising in the administration, of the State plan submitted under subsection (a);

(B) review and submit comments to the State agency on the State plan; and

(C) review and evaluate child-care programs and services funded under this Act and other provisions of law in the State and the progress of such programs and services in meeting the objectives of the State plan and the purposes of this Act and make recommendations, as appropriate, on the development of State standards and policies relating to child-care programs and the provision of child-care services, and may prepare and, through the State agency, submit to the Secretary such recommendations and evaluations, together with such additional comments, as that State agency considers appropriate.

(3) Each State Advisory Panel shall meet within thirty days after the beginning of each fiscal year and establish the time, place, and manner of its future meetings, except that such panel shall have not less than two public meetings each year at which the public is given an opportunity to express views concerning the administration and operation of the State plan.

(4) Each State Advisory Panel shall be authorized to obtain the services of such professional, technical, and clerical personnel and to contract for such other services as may be necessary to enable the panel to carry out its functions under this Act. Members of the State Advisory Panel, while serving on the business of the Panel, shall be reimbursed, in accordance with standards prescribed by the Secretary, for reasonable travel, subsistence, and other necessary expenses incurred by them in carrying out their duties as members of the State Advisory Panel. The Secretary shall ensure that funds sufficient for the purpose of this paragraph are made available to each panel from funds available for the administration of the State plan.

(c) The Secretary shall approve any State plan, and any modification thereof, if (after approval of the first such plan) the State agency has complied with the provisions of subsection (d) and if such plan complies with the provisions of subsections (a) and (b), and the Secretary shall not disapprove any State plan except after reasonable notice, an opportunity to correct deficiencies in the plan, and notice of an opportunity for a hearing.

(d) For the purpose of providing information to the Secretary and the Congress to aid in their understanding of the implementation and effectiveness of programs under this Act, the State agency, not later than December 1 of each year, shall prepare and submit to the Secretary, a concise report describing activities, results, and performance in the State in meeting the objectives of the State plan and the purposes of this Act. The report submitted under this subsection shall contain the results of the data collection, reviews, and evaluations carried out pursuant to subsections (a)(6) and (b)(2)(C).

NATIONAL ADMINISTRATION

SEC. 5. (a)(1) The Secretary shall designate an identifiable administrative unit and an individual in charge of such unit within the Department of Health and Human Services to carry out the provisions of this Act, to coordinate all activities of the Department relating to child care, and to seek to coordinate such activities with the pertinent activities of other Federal agencies.

(2) The Secretary shall make available to such unit such staff and resources as are necessary to enable it to carry out effectively its functions under this Act.

(b)(1) Within six months after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Secretary shall establish within the Office of the Secretary a National Advisory Panel on Child Care Needs and Services which shall be composed of not less than fifteen members—

(A) of which not less than one-third shall be parents of children who are receiving or have recently received child-care services of the type funded under this Act, and

(B) of which not less than one-third shall be representatives of child-care providers, including representatives of different types of child-care programs (such as public, private, private nonprofit, center-based, and family day-care programs) and individuals who are professionals in the field of child development and related fields.

Not less than one-third of the members serving on the National Advisory Panel shall be individuals who are serving on, or have served on, a State Advisory Panel established by a State under section 4(b).

(2) The National Advisory Panel shall review Federal policies with respect to child-care services and make recommendations to and advise the Secretary with respect to the standards developed by the Secretary pursuant to subsection (c) and may submit to the President and to the Congress such comments as it considers appropriate with respect to the reports of the Secretary submitted under section 12.

(3) The Secretary shall make available to the National Advisory Panel such personnel and technical assistance as are necessary to carry out effectively its functions under this section.

(4) Members of the National Advisory Panel who are not regular full-time employees of the United States shall, while attending meetings and conferences of the National Advisory Panel or otherwise engaged in the business of the Panel (including traveltime), be entitled to receive compensation at a rate fixed by the Secretary, but not exceeding the rate specified at the time of such service for GS-18 in section 5332 of title 5, United States Code; and, while so serving on the business of the Panel away from their homes or regular places of business, they may be allowed travel expenses, including per diem in lieu of subsistence, as authorized by section 5703 of title 5, United States Code, for persons employed intermittently in the Government service.

(c)(1) After consultation with the National Advisory Panel, and not later than twelve months after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Secretary shall prepare and develop proposed standards to be applied to programs funded under this Act and such other child-care programs funded by the Department of Health and Human Services as the Secretary may specify. The standards developed pursuant to this subsection shall cover factors having a demonstrated impact on the quality of child care including, but not limited to—

(A) group size and composition in terms of the number of teachers and the number and age of children;

(B) the qualifications of the child-care provider;

(C) the physical environment;

(D) parental involvement; and

(E) necessary support services including but not limited to health, nutrition, and social services.

(2) After distribution for comment to each State agency and State Advisory Panel established under section 4(a)(13) and 4(b), the Secretary shall publish the proposed standards in the Federal Register.

(3) After taking into consideration any comments received by the Secretary with respect to the regulations proposed under paragraph (1) of subsection (c), but in no event later than one hundred and twenty days after the Secretary publishes proposed standards under paragraph (2), the Secretary shall publish in the Federal Register final standards to be applied to programs funded under this Act and such other child-care programs funded by the Department of Health and Human Services as the Secretary may specify.

(4) Until such time as the final standards have been adopted, programs funded under this Act shall comply with the requirements imposed upon child-care programs funded through payments made under title XX of the Social Security Act.

DEMONSTRATION PROJECTS

SEC. 6. (a) The Secretary is authorized to make grants to and enter into contracts with public agencies and private organizations to support innovative child-care demonstration projects, including projects providing nighttime care or care for sick children, migrant children, children with limited English-language proficiency, disabled children, or other special needs populations. No grant may be made under this section unless adequate funds are included in such grant to evaluate and report to the Secretary on the effectiveness of the approach of the program in meeting the child-care needs of the families being served.

(b) No grant may be made under this section unless an application is made to the Secretary at such time, in such manner, and containing or accompanied by such information as the Secretary considers necessary. Not later than six months after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Secretary shall prescribe regulations to carry out the provisions of this section.

LICENSING IMPROVEMENT GRANTS

SEC. 7. (a) Each State receiving funds under this Act shall prepare a report to be submitted to the Secretary outlining the current status of child-care licensing or regulation within the State, deficiencies, if any, in the existing licensing or regulating program (including an assessment of the adequacy of staff to carry out effectively the State program), the plan of the State for expanding its licensing program to cover all types of child-care providers (except where children are being cared for in their own homes, by a relative, or on a less than full-time basis in a noncommercial, neighborhood setting, such as a cooperative play group or occasional child-care arrangements), and the types and amounts of assistance the State requires to make improvements in such licensing or regulating program. Each such State shall submit its report under this subsection not later than twelve months after it first receives a payment under section 10. The report submitted under this subsection shall include, separately, information with respect to center-based programs and family day-care programs.

(b) The Secretary is authorized to make grants to States submitting a report under subsection (a) for the purpose of developing, improving, or implementing its child-care licensing or regulating program. No grant may be made under this section unless the State submits an application to the Secretary therefor at such time, in such manner, and containing or accompanied by such information as the Secretary considers necessary.

(c) After consultation with the National Advisory Panel on Child Care Needs and Services and with the cooperation of the National Conference of Uniform Commissioners of State Laws, the Secretary shall develop a Model State Licensing or Regulating of Child Care Providers Act to be used by the States as a guide to improving licensing or regulating of child-care providers. Not later than eighteen months after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Secretary shall publish such Model Act in the Federal Register.

TRAINING AND TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE

SEC. 8. (a)(1) The Secretary is authorized to make grants to and enter into contracts with institutions of higher education, State and local public agencies, and private organizations to provide preservice and inservice training to teachers, other care givers, and administrative personnel involved in child-care programs, to recruit and train low-income parents for child-care positions, to provide specialized training in early childhood education for certified elementary school teachers who are unemployed, to train information and referral workers, to train persons in the provision of services to disabled children, migrant children, and children with limited English-language proficiency, and to develop and improve teacher certification criteria for child-care programs.

(2) The Secretary is authorized to provide technical assistance to States in planning, developing, and coordinating child-care services, in developing, expanding, and implementing State licensing or regulating of child-care programs, and in developing and conducting teacher or child-care-provider training programs with special attention to the factors described in paragraph (1).

(b) No grant may be made under this section unless an application is made to the Secretary at such time, in such manner, and containing or accompanied by such information as the Secretary considers necessary.

ALLOTMENTS

SEC. 9. (a) From the sums appropriated pursuant to section 14(a) for each fiscal year, the Secretary shall allot not more than one percent among Guam, American Samoa, the Virgin Islands, the Northern Mariana Islands, and the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands according to their respective needs.

(b) From the remainder of such sums, the Secretary shall allot—

(1) to each State the amount which bears the same ratio to 50 percent of such remainder as the number of children living in homes in which—

(A) both parents of such child are employed or seeking employment, or

(B) the child resides with only one parent and that parent is employed or seeking employment, in such State bears to the number of such children in all States; and

(2) to each State an amount which bears the same ratio to 50 percent of such remainder as the number of children who reside in households having incomes which are equal to or less than one-half of the median income of the United States for families of the same size, as determined in accordance with criteria established by the Secretary, in such State bears to the number of such children in all States.

For the purpose of this subsection, the term "State" does not include Guam, American Samoa, the Virgin Islands, the Northern Mariana Islands, and the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands.

(c) The Secretary shall obtain from the appropriate departments and agencies of the United States the most recent satisfactory data available in order to determine the allocation provided for in subsection (b).

(d) That portion of any State's allotment under subsection (b) for a fiscal year that the Secretary determines will not be required for the period for which such allotment is available shall be available, from time to time on such date during such period as the Secretary may fix, for reallotment to other States in proportion to the original allotment of such States under subsection (b) for such year, but with such proportionate amount for any of such other States being reduced to the extent it exceeds the sum the Secretary estimates will be needed in such State and will be used for such period for carrying out State plans approved under this Act, and the total of such reduction shall be similarly reallotted among the States whose proportionate amounts are not so reduced. Any amount reallotted to a State under this subsection during a year shall be deemed part of its allotment under subsection (b) for such year.

PAYMENTS

SEC. 10. (a) From the amounts allotted to each State under section 9, the Secretary shall make a grant to each State having a plan approved under section 4 in an amount equal to the total sums to be expended by the State under the plan for the fiscal year for which the grant is to be made.

(b) Payments under this Act may be made in installments, in advance, or by way of reimbursement, with necessary adjustments on account of overpayments or underpayments.

WITHHOLDING OF GRANTS

SEC. 11. Whenever the Secretary, after reasonable notice and opportunity for a hearing to a State, finds—

(1) that there has been a failure to comply substantially with any provision or any requirements set forth in the State plan of that State approved under section 4, or

(2) that in the operation of any program or project funded under this Act there is a failure to comply substantially with any applicable provision of this Act, the Secretary shall notify such State of the findings and that no further payments may be made to such State under this Act (or, in the case of noncompliance by a particular program or project, that further payments to the State will be limited to programs or projects under the State plan, or portions thereof, not affected by such noncompliance) until the Secretary is satisfied that there is no longer any such failure to comply, or that the noncompliance will be promptly corrected.

REVIEW AND EVALUATION

SEC. 12. (a) The Secretary shall make reviews and evaluations of the programs and activities funded under this Act (to be conducted by persons not directly or indirectly involved in administration of the programs or activities to be reviewed or evaluated), and conduct studies of child-care needs for the purpose of providing information aimed at—

(1) enabling the Congress and the executive branch to seek to reach agreement upon specific, realistic objectives and expectations of achievement for programs and activities funded under this Act;

(2) determining whether the programs and activities established and carried out under this Act at the Federal, State, and local levels will be likely to achieve progress toward such objectives and expectations;

(3) ensuring that sufficient data necessary to ascertain such progress is collected and made available to the Congress and the executive branch; and

(4) improving the capability of the Congress and the executive branch to understand child-care needs in the Nation and how best to meet such needs in a cost-effective fashion.

(b) In carrying out reviews, evaluations, and studies under this section, the Secretary shall—

(1) ascertain the specific objectives and expectations for achievement regarding programs and activities carried out under this Act of appropriate managers and policymakers in the executive branch and of appropriate committees of the Congress;

(2) examine a representative sample of the actual operation and results of such programs and activities at the Federal, State, and local levels;

(3) compare the objectives and expectations for achievement with the actual operation and results of such programs and activities, including comparisons of the objectives of State plans with the actual operation and results under such plans and an assessment of the effects of increased availability of child care (including changes in the incidence of child abuse, school vandalism, and juvenile delinquency, and other relevant effects such as changes in health status, school attendance, and school performance);

(4) identify or develop programs and activities, or parts of programs and activities, that are able, or are likely to be able, to achieve in a cost-effective fashion progress toward such objectives and expectations; and

(5) determine how the results of such reviews, evaluations, and studies can best be disseminated and utilized to achieve the purposes described in subsection (a).

The Secretary shall prepare and transmit to the President and the Congress on or before March 1 of 1988 and every two years thereafter a concise report containing—

(1) a statement of specific, realistic objectives and expected progress toward such objectives over the next two years for the programs and activities funded under this Act, and a statement relating such objectives and expected progress to the purposes of this Act;

(2) the results of all comparisons made under subsection (b)(3), including comparisons necessary for judging the effectiveness with which State plans, and the objectives of such plans, are carried out at the State and local levels;

(3) the results of efforts under subsection (b)(4), including options or recommendations (or both) with respect to any legislative action that the Secretary considers necessary or desirable for achieving the purposes set forth in subsection (a); and

(4) plans for reviews, evaluations, and studies under this section for the ensuing year, including a statement detailing the programs and activities (or parts thereof) funded under this Act to be the subject of such reviews, evaluations, and studies.

(d) The Secretary shall prepare and transmit to the President and the Congress not later than four years after the date of the enactment of this Act a report on child-care needs in the Nation. Such report shall include, but not be limited to, a summary of the results of data collection under sections 4(a)(6)(A), 4(a)(6)(B), and 4(b)(2)(C) and any studies of child-care needs conducted by the Secretary under this section, a summary of other relevant research on child-care needs, and an analysis of options for more fully meeting such needs, including options for legislative action.

(e) The Secretary and the Comptroller General of the United States, or any of their duly authorized representatives, shall, until the expiration of three years after the completion of a program, project, or activity authorized or assisted under this Act, have access for the purpose of audit and examination to any books, documents, papers, and records of entities receiving grants or contracts under this Act that in the opinion of the Secretary or the Comptroller General may be related or pertinent to assistance provided under this Act.

DEFINITIONS

SEC. 13. As used in this Act—

(1) "child" means any individual who has not attained the age of fifteen except that with respect to eligibility for services, the definition of "child" may include a disabled individual who has not yet attained the age of eighteen;

(2) "parent" includes any natural parent, foster parent, or legal guardian with whom the child resides;

(3) "Secretary" means the Secretary of Health and Human Services; and

(4) "State" means each of the several States, the District of Columbia, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, Guam, the Virgin Islands, America Samoa, the Northern Mariana Islands, and the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands.

AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS

SEC. 14. (a) Except as provided in subsection (b), there are authorized to be appropriated $200,000,000 for fiscal year 1986 and such sums as may be necessary for each of the four succeeding fiscal years for carrying out the provisions of this Act. Of the sums so appropriated for any fiscal year, 75 percent shall be used for making grants under section 4, relating to grants for carrying out the State plan; 5 percent shall be used for making grants under section 6, relating to demonstration projects; 5 percent shall be used for making grants under section 7, relating to licensing assistance; 5 percent shall be used for making grants or contracts under section 8(a), relating to training programs; and 10 percent shall be used for carrying out the provisions of sections 5, 8(b), and 12, relating to national administration (including the reasonable expenses of the National Advisory Panel on Child Care Needs and Services) and training and technical assistance.

(b)(1) No funds are authorized to be appropriated for any fiscal year unless funds appropriated for the preceding fiscal year to carry out part A of title V of the Economic Opportunity Act of 1964, relating to Project Head Start, are at least equal to the funds appropriated for such part for fiscal year 1985.

(2)(A) In the event that, pursuant to title III of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974, a concurrent resolution for fiscal year 1986 is in effect which sets forth total budget outlays for fiscal year 1986 in an amount which does not exceed the sum of—

(i) the total budget outlays for fiscal year 1985 set forth in such resolution (or, if not set forth therein, as estimated by the Congressional Budget Office as of the date such resolution was adopted);

(ii) the cost in budget outlays in fiscal year 1986, as estimated by the Congressional Budget Office as of the date such resolution was adopted, of such cost-of-living increases taking effect in fiscal year 1986 in entitlement programs as Congress provides for in such resolution; and

(iii) any amount by which interest on the public debt for fiscal year 1986 was estimated by the Congressional Budget Office, as of such date, to exceed the amount of such interest for fiscal year 1985, no appropriations are authorized under subsection (a) to be appropriated for fiscal year 1986.

(B) For the purpose of this paragraph, the term "entitlement programs" means programs of benefits which the United States is obligated to pay under the laws establishing such programs to persons who meet the eligibility requirements established by such laws.

S. 5: PAY EQUITY ACT OF 1985

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, on January 3, my bill, S. 5, the proposed "Pay Equity Act of 1985," was introduced. This legislation is virtually identical to S. 1900, the bill I introduced, during the 98th Congress. It is aimed at helping bring an end to what is one of the most devastating economic problems facing millions of American women and their families and one of the most pervasive forms of employment discrimination in our society—the refusal of many employers in both the public and private sectors to pay female employees fair and equitable wages for the work they perform.

I was joined in sponsoring this measure by the distinguished Senator from Montana [Mr. MELCHER] who also cosponsored S. 1900 in the 98th Congress. Similar legislation was introduced in the House on January 3—H.R. 27 and H.R. 375—by Representative MARY ROSE OAKAR with whom I have worked closely on this issue as well as on the Social Security earnings-sharing legislation, S. 3, also introduced on January 3.

Mr. President, this type of discrimination against female employees has persisted despite applicable State and Federal laws and directives and court decisions outlawing gender-based wage discrimination. Unfortunately, the existence of these laws and court decisions has not been translated into elimination of these unlawful practices. What is clearly needed is a strong national commitment to ending once and for all the practice of paying certain employees lower wages because those employees are female.

S. 5 is intended to stimulate those Federal agencies responsible for enforcement of our Federal equal employment opportunity laws to begin an aggressive campaign to enforce these laws and help bring about an end to wage discrimination.

THE PROBLEM: THE WAGE GAP

Mr. President, I am sure that every Member of this body is acutely aware of the enormous gap between the average earnings of female workers and the average earnings of male workers. In the 1950's, full-time female workers earned 64 cents on the average for every dollar earned by a full-time male worker. For the past decade, the ratio of male-to-female earnings has hovered around the 60-percent mark.

According to the most recent available data—1983—the median earnings—representing the point below and above which fall an equal number—for fully employed female workers—those working 50 or more weeks per year and 35 or more hours per week—was $13,915; for similarly employed males, it was $21,881. This represents a ratio of 63.6 percent. However, it is important to note that the mean, or average, earnings for this group was $12,758 for the female workers and $21,090 for male workers. This represents a ratio of 60.5 percent in terms of mean or average earnings, as compared to a ratio of 63.6 percent when dealing with median income data.

The difference in earnings for minority women, as compared to all male wage earners has consistently been even wider. For example, in 1983, the median earnings for black women in this category was $12,690; for Hispanic women it was $11,664. These represent a ratio of 57.9 and 53.3 percent, respectively, as compared to the median earnings for all male workers in this category.

In 1982, the median earnings of all fully employed male workers was $21,077; for similarly situated women, it was $13,014, representing a ratio of 61.7 percent. For black women in this category, the median income was $12,132, representing a 57.6-percent ratio as compared to median earnings for all male workers in this category; for Hispanic women, it was $11,112, representing a 52.7-percent ratio. Although these statistics show some progress in closing the wage gap over the past several years, it remains large.

The disparity between the average wages earned by female workers and those earned by male workers exists today in every profession, occupation, or field of employment and at every level of experience. It persists in male-dominated fields. It persists in female-dominated fields. It persists in the new occupational fields that have not yet become sexually stereotyped.

For example, female college professors and lawyers receive only 71 percent of what their male counterparts earn; female engineers earn only 86 percent of the salary of male engineers. Although 60 percent of the retail sales clerks are female, they earn only 67 percent of what male clerks earn. Average starting salaries for female Harvard MBA's are reported to be $2,000 less than those paid to male MBA's. Entry-level male college lecturers average $13,577; females, $11,870. Sex bias in wages have even appeared in the computer field. In 1981, the median weekly pay for female computer operators was $355; for males, $488. A study of the careers of 1972 graduates of Harvard's Schools of Law, Dentistry, Design, Divinity, Education, Public Health, and Arts and Sciences 7 years after students were awarded advanced degrees found that women graduates had consistently lower salaries regardless of marital or family status. This study, for example, found that the average salaries of graduates of the Harvard School of Public Health were $37,860 a year for men and $21,300 for women.

Mr. President, the overall wage gap has been closely and repeatedly studied by researchers. Variables such as attachment to the work force, level of experience, education, job commitment, and similar factors have been examined in various studies. These studies attempting to "explain" the difference in earnings between male and female workers have been able to account for generally less than one-fourth and never more than one-half of the earnings differential on the basis of different labor-force participation patterns of male and female workers. Virtually every researcher has concluded that there remains a large gap which can be explained only by the existence of discriminatory employment policies.

PAY EQUITY: EQUAL PAY AND COMPARABLE PAY

Mr. President, two distinct forms of wage discrimination contribute to the earnings gap. The first involves the problem of equal pay for equal work. The second involves the problem of comparable pay for work of comparable worth.

The first—equal pay for equal work—is relatively simple to understand and has clearly been unlawful since the passage of the Equal Pay Act in 1963. That law provides that it is unlawful for an employer to discriminate between employees on the basis of sex by paying lower wages than those paid to employees of the other sex for equal work. Prior to the enactment of the Equal Pay Act, many employers openly paid female workers lower wages for performing the same work as male workers.

Unfortunately, this practice continues today, albeit in more subtle forms. Employers no longer argue—as they did prior to 1963—in favor of lower pay for female workers on the grounds that women "need" less than male workers. Instead, they have developed creative rationalizations for paying women less than men for substantially identical work. The Federal Equal Pay Act actually encourages this type of "creativeness" since it provides four defenses which an employer may raise when a violation of the act has been alleged. For example, the fourth defense—that the discrimination was based upon a factor "other than sex"—invites employers to develop arguments that the apparent discrimination is actually based upon a factor other than sex. For example, employers have argued that the willingness of female workers to work for lower wages constitutes a factor "other than sex" which would justify setting their wages below those of male workers who would refuse to work at the lower wages. Fortunately, the courts have, for the most part, rejected these thinly disguised discriminatory practices.

It is clear, however, that although it has been more than 20 years since passage of the Equal Pay Act, equal pay for equal work has not yet been fully achieved. Indeed, even more vigorous enforcement activities are needed today to deal with the more subtle and devious tactics used to justify the continuation of Equal Pay Act violations.

But, Mr. President, it is generally agreed that denial of equal pay for equal work is no longer the major factor contributing to the earnings gap. The major factor today is the concentration of female workers in a limited number of job classifications where the wages are lower than the education, training, skills, experience, effort, responsibility, or working conditions involved would otherwise warrant. The conclusion is virtually inescapable that a primary reason that wages are lower in these jobs is because they are filled predominantly by women. This problem, often referred to as the comparable worth issue, must be dealt with forcefully if we are ever to achieve equitable pay for all workers.

COMPARABLE PAY FOR WORK OF COMPARABLE WORTH

Mr. President, the concept of comparable pay for work of comparable worth stands for the relatively simple notion that the wages a worker earns should be based upon the value of the work performed, not the sex of the employee. Unfortunately, it is widely recognized that the wages paid in jobs and occupational fields dominated by female workers are lower than the wages paid in those jobs and occupational fields dominated by male workers that involve comparable education, skills, training, education, effort, responsibilities, and working conditions.

In the now classic case of Lemons v. City and County of Denver, 620 F.2d 228 (10th Circuit), the nurses in the city of Denver public hospitals were paid less than the men who trim the trees in the city parks, not because of any greater intrinsic value of the work done by the tree trimmers or greater difficulty in finding individuals to trim trees, but simply because the tree trimmers were predominantly male and the nurses were predominantly female.

There are many other examples of this type of inequity. In Montgomery County, MD, clerks in the county-operated liquor stores were reported to earn more in 1979 than teachers in the county schools. Secretaries at the University of Washington in Seattle with 2-years experience were paid between $847 and $1,085 while university truck drivers received a starting salary of $1,168 to $1,289. In New York and Wisconsin, the salaries for State parking lot attendants were considerably higher than the wages paid to State clerical employees. A study in San Jose, CA, found the salaries of librarians below those paid to street-sweeper operators. In a dictionary of occupational titles, a dog pound attendant and a zookeeper were rated more highly than a nursery school teacher or a day care worker.

In each of these examples, one difference emerged: The higher wages were paid where employees were predominantly males and lower wages were paid where employees were predominantly females. In many cases, the employer's own numerical job-evaluation system gave the male-dominated jobs and the female-dominated jobs similar ratings; yet, the wages for the female jobs were nonetheless set lower than the male-dominated jobs.

Mr. President, although the phrase "comparable pay for work of comparable worth" has been useful in helping to understand the circumstances involved, the underlying issue is really simply one of wage discrimination based upon the sex of the employee. Hence, the term "pay equity," which also includes the better understood concept of "equal pay for equal work," is a more accurate description of the effort which is ongoing to help reduce that portion of the wage gap which is attributable to discrimination. Although for clarity sake, I have used the "comparable worth" phraseology, I concur with the view that "pay equity" is a more accurate and preferable term.

OPPONENTS OF COMPARABLE WORTH

Mr. President, those who oppose elimination of wage disparities based upon the devaluation of work that is performed predominantly be female workers make three basic arguments in opposition to these efforts. First, they argue that it is impossible to compare different jobs and establish their relative worth. Second, they contend it is not discrimination, but the invisible and neutral hand of the marketplace at work in creating these wage disparities. Third, they argue that even if it is discrimination, the cost of eliminating the inequities would be too great. Each of these arguments has an inherent weakness.

First, with respect to the so-called apples-and-oranges argument—that you can't compare different types of jobs—the fact is that different jobs are compared all the time by employers in establishing wage rates. Objective job-evaluation techniques have existed for many years, and they are widely used by employers in both the public and private sectors. The National Academy of Sciences' Committee on Occupational Classification and Analysis in its important study, "Women, Work, and Wages: Equal Pay for Jobs of Equal Value," commissioned by the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission, noted the widespread use of such job-evaluation plans. As I will discuss in a few moments, these job-evaluation techniques provide an objective method of determining the value of different jobs and a promising approach to eliminating discriminatory wage-setting practices and the resulting wage differentials.

Second, the short answer to the argument that it is the marketplace, not discrimination, that determines wage rates, is that the so-called free marketplace has been radically altered by the presence of discrimination. Historical wage discrimination against female workers, once not only prevalent but acceptable, continues to distort the marketplace to depress the wages of women and to devalue the work performed by women. Only in the past 20 years has it become unacceptable—legally and otherwise—to pay women less than men for precisely the same work or to exclude women from certain jobs or occupations. The effects of this de jure discrimination against female workers were built into most wage structures, and these effects continue to be felt. The argument that the marketplace is a neutral determinant of job value is clearly specious. A pure marketplace does not exist, given historical wage discrimination.

Moreover, our Nation has already made the decision as a matter of social policy that workers will not be left to whatever fate a so-called free market resolves for them. Protective labor laws do not permit employers to pay workers less than the minimum wage, even though some desperate workers might work for less, nor do they allow employers to set wages lower for minority workers, even though high unemployment rates among many minority groups might drive some of these workers to accept lower wages.

In short, a civilized and humane society does not countenance the exploitation of its workers. Women, like other classes of vulnerable workers, are entitled to the protection of the law against unfair exploitation.

COST IMPLICATIONS

Mr. President, the arguments that eliminating the wage difference would destroy the economy and cost billions and billions of dollars are vastly exaggerated. First, many of these estimates are based upon elimination of the entire wage gap. The studies I mentioned earlier have found that a certain portion of the gap—between one-fourth and one-half—is probably attributable to nondiscriminatory factors, including differences in female-worker labor-force participation patterns. No one has ever asserted that the entire gap is caused by discrimination.

Second, as to that portion of the wage gap that is attributable to discriminatory practices, it is not anticipated that the resulting inequities could be eliminated overnight. Even with the most vigorous commitment to eliminating wage inequities, the task is likely to be a long and tedious one. Indeed, in the more than 20 years since passage of the Equal Pay Act, those inequities have not been eliminated. Attainment of full pay equity is likely to be gradual and incremental.

Finally, Mr. President, the dire predictions of economic disaster simply haven't been borne out where voluntary wage adjustments to achieve pay equity have taken place. Although most of the opponents point to the size of the judgment awarded in the case brought in Washington State, American Federation of State, County, and Municipal Employees versus State of Washington, what has taken place in the State of Minnesota is a much more instructive example of how a pay-equity policy can be implemented in a fiscally responsible manner.

The Washington State case involved a situation where State officials failed for years to act after a 1974 State-commissioned study had shown that State employees in traditionally female jobs received about 20 percent less on the average than State employees in traditionally male jobs of comparable value. It was not until after a lawsuit was filed in 1983, that the State legislature took any action to eliminate the pay disparities. In 1983, it appropriated $1.5 million for this purpose. The Federal district court characterized this action as "belated" and a "token" representing at best a change in attitude by the State. Under the court's judgment, the plaintiffs were awarded backpay adjustments to September 1979. It was this backpay award, not simply the correction of the undervaluation of the women's jobs, that created the size of the judgment in the Washington State case.

In contrast, the Minnesota Legislature moved quickly to respond to the results of a report from a State-established task force on pay equity. In 1983, the Minnesota Legislature passed a bill providing for a phased-in equalization over 4 years. The annual cost of the pay-equity increases currently amounts to $26 million, or about 4 percent of the State's payroll budget, and 0.3 of the total State budget. Similarly, not considering the backpay award, it is estimated that the cost for future pay equity adjustments in Washington State will amount to 5 percent of the annual payroll, or approximately $75 million per year.

New York State, following the Minnesota example, is currently implementing a pay-equity study which will include several options for carrying out phased-in pay-equity adjustments.

Local government efforts in this area have been numerous. In my own State of California, pay-equity adjustments have been negotiated for municipal workers in San Jose, Los Angeles, Long Beach, Pismo Beach, Anaheim, Fremont, Hayward, Berkeley, and Woodland. None of these municipalities have gone bankrupt as a result. The increases have been moderate and phased-in over time. For example, librarians in Long Beach won a 5-percent comparable-worth adjustment. In San Jose, a 2-year agreement for pay-equity adjustments in 60 female dominated classifications resulted in 5- to 15-percent increases for these categories over a 2-year period, costing a total of $1.4 million. Clerical workers in the city of Los Angeles negotiated pay-equity increases of between 1 and 8½ percent.

Obviously, voluntary and mutual efforts to identify and eliminate pay inequities through wage adjustments phased-in over reasonable periods of time are far preferable to accumulating large back-pay judgments. The costs, while not insubstantial, are clearly manageable when they are approached in this fashion.

Finally, whenever the issue of costs is discussed, it is important to remember that the costs of pay inequities are already being borne—by the underpaid workers. The price is being paid by the increasing feminization of poverty and the cost of Government assistance to those underpaid workers and their families who cannot survive on the meager wages produced by discriminatory employment practices. Society is also paying in terms of the loss of productivity and reduced consumer spending that results when workers are denied fair wages.

OTHER OPPOSING ARGUMENTS

Mr. President, some of the opponents of efforts to eliminate these types of pay inequities have also attempted to portray such activities as leading to the Federal Government setting the wages for all workers. This is clearly a distortion and scare tactic designed to avoid entering into a serious dialog about the problem and how to remedy it. There is absolutely nothing in the comparable-worth issue that would lead to such a result, any more than passage of the Equal Pay Act or title VII led to Government control of wage-setting practices. Former Secretary of Labor, Raymond Marshall, has aptly stated:

A remedy for pay discrimination does not require that wages be equalized for men and women, only that the jobs be valued on a nondiscriminatory basis. This does not lead to central planning or Government wage fixing; the Government does not have to fix wages to eliminate discrimination.

Mr. Marshall has written a very thoughtful and comprehensive paper discussing the debate surrounding the comparable-worth issue.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that this paper, entitled "The Employment and Earnings of Women: The Comparable Worth Debate," be reprinted in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks following the reprinting of the text of the bill and a letter to the General Accounting Office.

Mr. President, implementing pay equity means nothing more than requiring employers to eliminate discriminatory wage-setting practices. There are certainly legitimate issues for discussion regarding the concept of comparable worth, but dragging out the specter of big government control of wages does not contribute to a responsible discussion of those issues.

IMPORTANCE OF RESOLVING THE COMPARABLE-WORTH PROBLEM

Mr. President, there are some who may argue that rather than attempting to resolve the difficult issues surrounding the comparable-worth problem, we should be focusing our attentions on eliminating the earnings gap by encouraging young women to enter nontraditional, male-dominated fields where the wages are likely to be higher and the advancement opportunities more open.

I believe we must do both.

I have long been deeply committed to opening up every occupational or professional field to women. The barriers which have blocked women seeking to enter male-dominated fields must be eliminated. Our educational systems must be encouraged to do a better job in preparing young women for the world of work and educating them about the jobs that will be emerging out of the new technologies. Their horizons should not be limited in any fashion by sexist stereotypes about what is or is not an appropriate field of employment for women or by false perceptions about the workforce.

But at the same time that we are seeking to break down those barriers which have kept many women in job ghettos where the wages are low and the opportunities for advancement limited, it is important to recognize that the work performed in many of these female-dominated fields is important both to our economy and to our society. If we force our creative and talented teachers to leave our schools in order to get adequate compensation, or our nation's nurses all to become doctors in order to gain the recognition and compensation they deserve, what would happen to the quality of our schools or our hospitals? We need good teachers as well as good nurses, regardless of their sex.

Moreover, Mr. President, whatever opportunities may exist for young women just entering or about to enter the work force, those women who have already acquired years of education, training, and experience in fields like teaching or nursing should not be required to abandon those career investments in order to earn a decent wage.

Finally, unless we resolve once and for all the ambivalence about the value of female workers that underlies the comparable-worth problem, the inequities are not likely to end. Indeed, as more and more women enter a new field, the wages there are likely to become depressed. History has already demonstrated this to be true. For example, bank tellers were once universally male. The job then represented a relatively well-trained position on the career ladder to higher management in the banking field. Today, bank tellers are predominantly female and the wages and advancement opportunities have been curtailed accordingly. The value of a job shouldn't decrease just because more women fill the position.

GUNTHER VERSUS COUNTY OF WASHINGTON

Mr. President, until 1981, there was some disagreement as to the interrelationship of the Equal Pay Act, with its scope limited to matters relating to equal pay for equal work, and the broader coverage of title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 with respect to discrimination on the basis of sex in all aspects of employment, including compensation. Some argued that the Bennett amendment to title VII limited its coverage to only those instances of wage discrimination which would be covered by the Equal Pay Act. Others, noting the broad purposes of Congress in enacting title VII, argued that an employer violated title VII when the wages of female workers were set below those paid to male workers even though the jobs were not identical.

The issue was definitively resolved in the landmark decision of the Supreme Court in Gunther v. County of Washington, 452 U.S. 161 (1981).

Mr. President, the facts in the Gunther case are interesting because they show how blatant much of the wage discrimination against women can be. In Gunther, the employer evaluated the worth of both male and female correction guards and determined that the female guards should be compensated at a rate 95 percent that of the male rate. Notwithstanding that determination, the county set the female wage rate at only 70 percent of the male rate while paying the male guards the full 100-percent value established in the job evaluation.

In Gunther the Supreme Court held that it would be a violation of title VII for an employer to set the wages of female workers below the value determined by the employer's own objective job evaluation while setting the wages of male workers at the full value. The Court correctly concluded that Congress intended title VII to prohibit "all practices in whatever form which create inequality in employment opportunity due to discrimination on the basis of race, religion, sex, or national origin" and to "strike at the entire spectrum of disparate treatment of men and women resulting from sex stereotypes."

Mr. President, wage discrimination—in situations where jobs involved are different as well as where they are similar—is now clearly unlawful under title VII following Gunther. What remains to be settled is how this rule will be applied in particular fact situations and what evidence will suffice to demonstrate unlawful discrimination.

In the much discussed Washington State case, the court found there was overwhelming evidence of "historical discrimination against women in employment in the State of Washington, and that discrimination has been, and is, manifested by direct, overt, and institutionalized discrimination." Although the State's refusal to correct discrimination identified by a job-evaluation study was one part of the evidence produced, the record also showed such discriminatory practices as deliberate segregation of occupations—evidenced by classified ads in "male only" and "female only" columns—equal pay violations, and admissions by top State officials of discriminatory practices.

Litigation involving these issues is, of course, going on throughout the country, and where the evidence demonstrates that the wages of particular categories of employees have been depressed because of their sex, it is clear that a remedy exists under title VII. At the same time, however, numerous voluntary efforts are underway in both the public and private sectors to identify and eliminate wage discrimination.

STATE, LOCAL, AND PRIVATE INITIATIVES

Mr. President, it has been estimated that in the past 4 years over 100 governmental initiatives have taken place in the area of comparable worth. These activities have included actions by State legislatures, city councils, county commissions, school boards, Governors' offices, and State administrative agencies. I ask unanimous consent that a summary of State and local-pay equity/comparable-worth initiatives that was included in the testimony of Nina Rothchild, commissioner for employee relations of the State of Minnesota, at the U.S. Civil Rights Commission consultation on comparable worth (June 1984), be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

APPENDIX TO TESTIMONY OF NINA ROTHCHILD, COMMISSIONER OF EMPLOYEE RELATIONS, STATE OF MINNESOTA

STATE PAY EQUITY LEGISLATION

State, Year, and Description

ALASKA

1980: Adds specific comparable worth (CW) language to fair employment practices (FEP) law.

CALIFORNIA

1981: Establishes CW as policy for State workers, requires annual reports.

1983: Prohibits local government ordinances or policies which preclude consideration of CW.

1983: Creates commission on status of women task force on CW.

1983: Adds specific CW language to FEP law. (Pending as of 5/1/84.)

CONNECTICUT

1979: Pilot study for State workers.

1981: Full job evaluation (JE) study for State workers.

HAWAII

1981: (Resolution) Urges employers to adopt CW policies.

1982: Requires report and recommendations on CW for State employees.

IDAHO

1977: Provides for JE study on State employees.

ILLINOIS

1982: Requires pilot CW study for civil service; $10,000.

1983: Requires comprehensive JE study for civil service. (Pending as of 5/1/84.)

1983: Includes CW standard in State equal pay act. (Pending as of 5/1/84.)

IOWA

1983: Establishes CW policy, requires JE study of civil service, appropriates $150,000 for study.

KENTUCKY

1982: Allocates $14,000 for JE study.

MASSACHUSETTS

1983: Requires JE study of civil service, appropriates $75,000 for study.

MICHIGAN

1982: Amends wage and hour law to prohibit wage secrecy policies.

MINNESOTA

1982: Establishes CW policy and process for civil service.

1983: Appropriates $21.8 million for CW increases.

1984: Requires local governments to implement CW.

MISSOURI

1983: Requires report and recommendations on CW for civil service; establishes CW policy.

MONTANA

1983: Requires "work toward the goal of establishing equal pay for comparable worth," study and annual report.

NEBRASKA

1978: Requires preliminary civil service study.

NEVADA

1983: Requires preliminary civil service study.

NEW JERSEY

1984: Establishes task force to study civil service; appropriates $150,000. (Not yet signed by Governor as of 5/1/84.)

NEW MEXICO

1983: Appropriates $3.3 million in salary increases to lowest paid State workers.

OREGON

1983: Requires JE/CW study for civil service; appropriates $300,000 for study.

PENNSYLVANIA

1983: Adds CW language to FEP law. (Pending as of 5/1/84.)

VIRGINIA

1984: Requires research on CW.

WASHINGTON

1977: Requires biennial update of 1974 JE study that had not yet been implemented.

1983: Establishes CW policy for civil service and sets up a 10-year implementation plan.

1983: Appropriates $1.5 million for salary increases to lowest paid workers.

WISCONISN

1977: Establishes CW policy for civil service.

Other State-level Activity

ILLINOIS

1983: AFSCME wins pay equity increases for word processing operators through arbitration.

HAWAII

1983: AFSCME wins pay equity increases for nurses through arbitration.

CONNECTICUT

1983: AFSCME negotiates pay equity increases for clerical workers.

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, Ms. Rothchild, in her testimony also reviewed in detail the experience of the State of Minnesota in addressing and implementing a pay-equity initiative. Observing that Minnesota had gone further than other States in actual implementation of pay equity, she stated, "We now have the experience to show that implementation need not be extremely costly, chaotic, or controversial."

In addition to these activities with respect to State and local public employees, pay equity has become a major issue at the bargaining table. On November 14, 1984, I placed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD (S14644, daily ed.) a report issued by the Communications Workers of America entitled "Closing the Wage Gap." This report not only provided a comprehensive overview of the pay-equity problem, but it also described some of the efforts made by this particular union to help close the wage gap through collective bargaining efforts. Although most of the activities that have taken place have been in the area of public employees, labor-management negotiations on pay-equity issues in the private sector, for example, between AT&T and the Communications Workers, have also been instituted.

Clearly, Mr. President, these voluntary initiatives to identify and remedy pay inequities ought to be encouraged. S. 5 contains provisions directing the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission to develop and implement an education and information program aimed at assisting those employers seeking information on the various techniques that can be used to identify and eliminate pay inequities.

FEDERAL ENFORCEMENT ACTIVITIES

However, despite the considerable activity taking place in the States and in the courts, Federal efforts in this area are at a virtual standstill. Prior to the Reagan administration, the two agencies with primary responsibility for enforcement of Federal equal employment opportunity laws and directives—the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission [EEOC] and the Office of Federal Contract Compliance Programs [OFCCP] in the Department of Labor—has begun activities in the comparable-worth area. EEOC filed an amicus curiae brief on the side of the plaintiffs in the Gunther case and commissioned the study I mentioned earlier by the National Academy of Sciences. In August 1981, shortly after the Gunther decision, EEOC, then under the acting chairmanship of J. Clay Smith, issued interim guidelines to its field offices to assist in identifying and processing cases in light of the Gunther decision. Similarly, OFCCP included in regulations published in December of 1980 language clarifying that the prohibition against employment discrimination by Federal contractors encompassed wage differentials based upon comparable-worth principles.

However, the Reagan administration immediately suspended those regulations and under the Reagan-appointed EEOC, work on comparable-worth cases appears to have ceased, thereby effectively sabotaging the guidelines issued after Gunther. At the House hearing in 1982, the current chairman of the EEOC, Clarence Thomas, defended his agency's inaction by saying that the Commission was in the legal arena, without specific guidance and he was unsure whether the agency had authority to process certain of these cases. The situation at EEOC does not appear to have changed since that statement.

Mr. President, EEOC is specifically charged with the responsibility of providing leadership in matters relating to equal employment opportunity. If the agency is not able to exert that leadership, then Congress must provide the push that is needed. S. 5 would help provide EEOC and OFCCP with the specific guidance which seems to be necessary in order to get these agencies to enforce fully and aggressively the Federal laws and directives relating to unlawful employment practices.

Mr. President, I must note, however, that while the EEOC, the agency responsible for equal employment opportunity law enforcement activities has remained mute on the subject, the Chairman of the Civil Rights Commission, Clarence Pendleton, has gone out of this way to attempt to ridicule the very serious efforts to deal with the problems of comparable worth. His recent characterization of this issue and debate as looney has not contributed to efforts to approach the problem in a responsible fashion.

JOB-EVALUATION TECHNIQUES

Mr. President, before I describe the specific provisions of S. 5, I want to take a few moments to discuss a specific issue related to the elimination of unlawful wage discrimination—utilization of objective job-evaluation techniques.

As I indicated earlier, objective job-evaluation techniques have been utilized for many years by employers in both the public and private sectors as a basis for determining job classifications and wage rates. Job-evaluation techniques provide, through numerical rating systems, standards and measures of job worth that are used to estimate the relative worth of jobs. It has been reported that almost two-thirds of the adult working population are already paid on the basis of a job-evaluation scheme, and that virtually every large employer, including Federal and State governments, uses some objective job-evaluation system to determine the relative worth or grade level of each job classification.

In a job-evaluation plan, pay ranges for a job are based on estimates of the worth of the jobs according to such criteria as the skill, effort, and responsibility required by the job and the working conditions under which it is performed. Pay for an individual, within the pay range, is set by the worker's individual characteristics, such as credentials, seniority, productivity, and quality of job performance. Job-evaluation systems vary from employer to employer, both in terms of the criteria used and the relative weights. However, the concept of numerical rating and comparative measurement of different jobs is common to all job-evaluation systems.

The National Academy of Sciences in its 1981 study, "Women, Work and Wages: Equal Pay for Jobs of Equal Value," observed:

> • • • job evaluation plans provide measures of job worth that, under certain circumstances, may be used to discover and reduce wage discrimination for persons covered by a given plan. Job evaluation plans provide a way of systematically rewarding jobs for their content—for the skill, effort, and responsibility they entail and the conditions under which they are performed. By making the criteria of compensation explicit and by applying the criteria consistently, it is probable that pay differentials resulting from traditional stereotypes regarding the value of women's work or work customarily done by minorities will be reduced.

Mr. President, the National Academy of Sciences study went on to state that existing job-evaluation techniques were by no means perfect. Many incorporated into them factors associated with sex, race, or ethnicity, and many utilized actual wages to figure into the computations, thereby perpetuating existing inequities. Other problems in applying these plans universally were also raised. The Academy concluded, nevertheless, that statistical techniques exist that may be able to generate job worth scores from which components of wages associated with sex, race, or ethnicity have been at least partly removed. The Academy urged that these techniques be further developed.

It is also important to note that in many cases, where the employer has utilized a job-evaluation plan to establish the comparative worth of different jobs, the employer has simply chosen not to apply the results of its own evaluation to the wages of the female workers. For example, as I mentioned earlier, in the Gunther case the employer arbitrarily paid the female workers 25 percent less than the employer's own job evaluation had determined was the comparative worth of the jobs. The law is clear that employers must abide by the results of their own reasonable job-evaluation systems. What is needed is for the law to be enforced.

Finally, Mr. President, it should be noted that the failure of an employer to utilize a job-evaluation system to set wages can give rise to an inference of intentional discrimination. In one case brought under the Equal Pay Act, Taylor v. Charley Brothers, 25 FEB Cases 602 (W.P.Pa. 1981) a Pennsylvania Federal district court found that an employer's intent to discriminate against female employees could be inferred from the fact, among other things, that it had not undertaken any evaluation that would have indicated the value of jobs held by either men or women. Employers seeking to avoid the impact of the Gunther decision by refusing to do their own objective job evaluations certainly run the risk of thereby providing evidence of intentional discrimination.

CONGRESSIONAL ACTION DURING THE 98TH CONGRESS

Mr. President, during the last session of Congress, several developments occurred with respect to pay-equity legislation.

First, on June 28, 1984, the House of Representatives, by an overwhelming vote of 415 to 6, passed legislation, H.R. 5680, authored by Representative MARY ROSE OAKAR, who chairs the Subcommittee on Compensation and Employee Benefits of the House Post Office and Civil Service Committee, providing for a study of the Federal job classification system to determine if the wages paid in job classifications filled predominantly by female workers are set lower than the wages paid in job classifications filled predominantly by male workers, because of the sex of the employees, rather than on the basis of any intrinsic differences in the relative value of the work performed, the qualifications required for the job, or the working conditions. The study called for in the House-passed bill was similar to that provided for in section 4(d) of my bill, S. 1900.

Shortly after H.R. 5680 was approved by the House as a substitute for a Senate-passed bill dealing with civil service matters, S. 958, on July 25, 1984, I urged the Senate to accept the House-passed provision in conference (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, S9113, daily ed.). Unfortunately, however, the Senate leadership left the bill at the Senate desk in a legislative limbo and refused to appoint conferees or take any steps toward convening a conference to resolve the issue regarding the pay-equity study. Because of this refusal to let the matter come to a vote in a regular manner, on October 3, 1984 (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, S12995-13003, daily ed.), I offered an amendment to the fiscal year 1985 continuing resolution which would have compelled the Director of the Office of Personnel Management to carry out the study. Although my amendment was defeated on a procedural vote, it was clear that there was substantial support for the underlying merits. Thereafter, the distinguished Senator from Alaska (Mr. STEVENS), chairman of the Senate Subcommittee on Civil Service, Post Office, and General Services of the Committee on Governmental Affairs, and I others entered into an agreement set forth in a colloquy I had with Senator STEVENS on October 10, 1984 (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, S14003-4, daily ed.) regarding a plan for and a timetable for carrying out, a series of events to bring about the necessary review of the Federal classification system.

First, in order to lay the ground work for the actual pay-equity study, it was agreed that a joint request would be made to the General Accounting Office to provide, not later than March 1, 1985, to the House Committee on Post Office and Civil Service and the Senate Committee on Governmental Affairs, a detailed report on the options for carrying out a pay-equity study of the type which would have been mandated under the House-passed legislation and the amendment I had offered to the continuing resolution. That letter, which I signed along with a number of members of the Senate Governmental Affairs Committee, as well as the chairman of the House Post Office and Civil Service Committee and the chairman of the House Subcommittee on Compensation and Employee Benefits, was sent to the Comptroller General of the United States on November 15, 1984. I ask unanimous consent that a copy of this letter be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks following the text of the bill.

Second, the Senator from Alaska agreed that, not later than the week following the Easter recess, he would convene subcommittee hearings on the GAO report and the outline for the study to be conducted.

Third, following that hearing, the Senator from Alaska, agreed to assist in efforts to develop legislation to facilitate carrying out such a study, unless a decision was reached that GAO itself should carry out the study, and seek to have such legislation considered in committee and on the floor in a timely fashion.

Fourth, and finally, in the event that efforts to reach agreement on such legislation following the GAO report were unsuccessful, the Senator from Alaska promised to do his best to provide us with an opportunity to have a vote on the merits of the issue on an appropriate vehicle.

Mr. President, I am pleased to report that the GAO activities are well underway and we have been assured that the report will be submitted by the March 1 deadline. In the meantime, the Senator from Washington (Mr. EVANS) who has been a true leader in the area of pay equity and participated in the development of the agreements I have just outlined, has indicated (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, October 11, 1984, S14497, daily ed.) his plans for developing legislation providing for a pay equity study of the Federal classification system which can serve as the vehicle for incorporating the relevant findings of the GAO report. It is my intention to work closely with the Senator from Washington in this effort.

OUTLINE OF LEGISLATION

Mr. President, as I indicated at the outset, S. 5 is aimed at compelling those Federal agencies responsible for enforcement of Federal equal employment opportunity laws to begin an aggressive campaign to enforce those laws and help bring about an end to wage discrimination against female workers. Certainly this could be accomplished by the executive branch without a congressional mandate. The law already prohibits wage discrimination. But the law is not self-executing.

Unfortunately, under the current administration it is highly unlikely that such actions will take place voluntarily. Nevertheless, Congress has the power and the authority to direct these agencies to take appropriate action. Enactment of this legislation would provide the congressional mandate that is evidently necessary to bring about Federal action in this area. I do not believe that it is fair or appropriate to rely solely upon private litigants to enforce that law. The Federal Government has a role and responsibility to fulfill. It's time it did so.

SUMMARY OF PROVISIONS: "PAY EQUITY ACT OF 1985"

Mr. President, I would like to outline the provisions of the bill:

Section 1 would establish the short title of the bill as the "Pay Equity Act of 1985."

Section 2 would set forth the findings and purposes of the Act. The findings pertain to the existence of the earnings gap between male and female workers, its causes and impact upon individiuals and our economy, and the failure of appropriate Federal agencies to enforce applicable laws and directives. The expressed purpose of the act is to help eliminate discriminatory wage-setting practices and resulting discriminatory wage differentials by, first, providing for the development and utilization of equitable job-evaluation techniques to promote the establishment of wage rates based upon the work performed rather than the sex of the employee and thereby ensure that all employees, irrespective of sex, or race, or ethnicity, will receive comparable pay for work of comparable worth; second, directing the Federal agencies charged with the responsibility for enforcement of Federal equal employment opportunity laws to help eliminate discriminatory wage-setting practices and discriminatory wage differentials; third, encouraging public and private employers to use equitable job-evaluation techniques in order to eliminate discriminatory wage-setting practices and discriminatory wage differentials; and, fourth, bringing the Federal Government's wage-setting practices into compliance with the purpose of the proposed act and the provision of the 1978 Civil Service Reform Act which provides that equal pay should be provided for work of equal value performed by Federal employees.

Section 3 would set forth definitions of the various terms utilized in the act.

Section 4 would set forth specific actions to be taken by the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission [EEOC]. First, the Commission would be directed to issue guidelines for the identification and elimination of discriminatory wage-setting practices and discriminatory wage differentials.

Mr. President, the EEOC is charged by Executive order with the responsibility for providing leadership within the Federal Government on matters relating to the equal employment laws. Its nonaction on the important and urgent issue of pay equity is inexcusable. Employers are entitled to some guidance from the Commission to enable them to identify and eliminate discriminatory wage-setting practices. In the past, the Commission has made many important contributions to the development of equal employment opportunity law; for example, its early guidelines on employment testing issues contributed to the development and utilization of validated testing procedures. It should be fulfilling a similar role with respect to the development and utilization of equitable job-evaluation techniques. Instead, the Commission's policy seems to be to sit back and await the piecemeal development of this body of law by private litigants and the courts. This is an abrogation of executive branch responsibility under title VII.

In order to assure appropriate coordination between the Commission and the Department of Labor's Office of Federal Contract Compliance Programs [OFCCP], the office responsible for enforcement of equal employment opportunity rules with respect to Federal contractors and subcontractors, section 4 of the bill would specifically require consultation with OFCCP in the promulgation of the Federal guidelines. Section 4 also would direct the Commission to develop and carry out a continuing program of education, information, and technical assistance with respect to the elimination of discriminatory wage-setting practices and discriminatory wage differentials and the development and utilization of equitable job-evaluation techniques.

Mr. President, in order to ensure adequate congressional oversight, section 4 contains provisions directing the Commission to make annual reports to the President and Congress on the steps it has taken and plans to take to carry out the proposed act. A self-evaluation of the effectiveness of the Commission's efforts is to be included in the report along with inclusion of such recommendations for statutory changes or administrative action, or both, as the Commission considers necessary to effectuate the purpose of the proposed act. The requirements with respect to this report have been made rather detailed in light of the fact that the Commission has shown no willingness voluntarily to take any action in this area.

Finally, section 4 would require the Commission, through a contract with a private consultant selected with public input, to undertake a study of the Federal system for establishing pay grades for Federal employees to determine whether that system satisfies the definition of an equitable job-evaluation system as proposed in the bill. In 1978, in enacting the Civil Service Reform Act, the Congress explicitly provided in section 101(a) of that act—5 U.S.C. 2301(b)(2)(3)—that equal pay should be provided for work of equal value in the Federal work force. Yet, at the House hearings in 1982, the Director of the Office of Personnel Management—OPM—admitted that the system being used had not been reviewed for sex bias. Numerous other witnesses testified at those hearings as to the inherent bias in the Federal classification system, which is derived from the system in existence in 1923.

The Commission was given the responsibility for enforcement of equal employment opportunity laws within the Federal work force in the 1978 EEO reorganization. But, in view of its last 4 years of inactivity on comparable worth, it is unclear at this point which Federal agency would be most appropriate to carry out or oversee this study. As introduced, S. 5 would leave the responsibility with EEOC—but require that the study be carried out by an independent private contractor. However, once, the GAO report has been submitted, we will be better able to make final decisions on how this study should be conducted. As I indicated previously, I plan to work closely with the Senator from Washington [Mr. EVANS] on this issue.

Section 5 would set forth directives to the Secretary of Labor, acting through OFCCP, with regard to Federal contractors. One primary way in which the Federal Government has sought to eliminate discrimination in employment is to obligate Federal contractors to ensure nondiscrimination with regard to employment practices and to take affirmative steps to provide equal employment opportunities throughout all of their activities as a condition of the contract. Executive Order 11246, promulgated by President Johnson in 1965, provides this basic directive and requires that Federal contractors meet these requirements. The lead agency for enforcement of this Executive order is the Department of Labor, through OFCCP.

Section 5 would specifically direct the Secretary of Labor, acting through OFCCP, to issue guidelines to require Federal contractors to identify and eliminate discriminatory wage-setting practices and discriminatory wage differentials. Those guidelines would be issued after and should be consistent with the guidelines that would be required to be issued by EEOC under section 4. Section 5 also would require that such OFCCP guidelines also provide that Federal contractors required to submit written affirmative action plans or updates of existing plans include in such plans or updates—within a year after the guidelines are issued—a review of the employer's wage-setting practices, an identification of any discrimination in those practices, and a plan of action to correct such discrimination. Section 5 would also strongly encourage these contractors to use equitable job-evaluation techniques by requiring pay-equity compliance reviews for those who fail to do so.

Currently, OFCCP guidelines provide generally that Federal contractors with more than 50 employees and a contract of more than $50,000 must submit a written affirmative action plan and require annual updating of such plans. Section 5 would thus require those contractors to include in their written affirmative action plans additional material relating to discriminatory wage-setting practices and discriminatory wage differentials. Although the guidelines would not require every Federal contractor to adopt an equitable job-evaluation system for use in setting wage rates, they would provide a strong stimulus to do so.

Section 5 would further require the Secretary of Labor to submit to the President and Congress annual reports describing in detail the activities undertaken by the Department to carry out the provisions of the proposed act. Again, this reporting requirement is designed to give Congress adequate information to exercise its oversight responsibilities.

Section 6 would provide that each Federal agency required under section 717 of the Civil Rights Act to submit an equal employment opportunity plan must include in such plan or update of an existing plan information on its wage-setting practices and wage differentials. Again, this is a written plan already required to be prepared under section 717; this legislation would simply add to what that plan is required to include new information with respect to discriminatory wage-setting practices and discriminatory wage differentials. The required information must be submitted within 1 year of the date of enactment.

Finally, Mr. President, section 7 would require the EEOC to provide the President and Congress with a detailed report on its enforcement activities relating to the Equal Pay Act. The statistics relating to the average earnings of women indicate a continuing failure to achieve equal pay for equal work. Congress needs a clear understanding of what the Commission has been able to do since responsibility for Equal Pay Act violations was transferred to it in 1978 and of what was done by the Department of Labor prior to the transfer. Section 7 also would require submission to the Congress of the Department of Labor's comments on the Commission's report.

CONCLUSION

Mr. President, pay equity is a matter of fundamental fairness. It is also a matter of economic necessity.

Our Nation has increasingly been experiencing what is graphically described as the feminization of poverty. Two out of three adults in this Nation living in poverty are women. As the National Advisory Council on Economic Opportunity has noted, "Poverty among women is becoming one of the most compelling social facts of this decade."

Lack of comparable pay for work of comparable worth is a primary factor in producing this poverty rate.

For men in our society, poverty often comes as a consequence of joblessness and the way out of poverty is through employment. But many women live in poverty even though they already have jobs and are working full time; their jobs just do not pay a living wage. In 1983, 57 percent of the fully employed women earned less than $10,000. In 1983, the poverty level for a four-person family was $10,180. The poverty rate for families headed by a full-time working woman is more than double that for households headed by full-time working men.

The National Advisory Council on Economic Opportunity also concluded that if working women earned the same wages that similarly qualified men now earn, the number of families living in poverty would be cut in half.

Mr. President, the elimination of discriminatory wage-setting practices that deny female workers a fair return for their labor should be of paramount importance to every American. The issue of wage discrimination is not a woman's issue or a special interest issue. It is a national issue. It goes to the very heart of our national commitment to the eradication of poverty, our commitment to a just society, and our commitment to revitalize our economy. Pay inequities must end. We cannot afford the enormous societal costs—in low morale, lost productivity, increased Government support payments and perpetuation of injustice—of allowing them to persist.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the legislation be printed in the RECORD at this point followed by the letter previously described and the Marshall article.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 5

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "Pay Equity Act of 1983".

STATEMENT OF FINDINGS AND PURPOSE

SEC. 2. (a) The Congress finds that—

(1) the average earnings of full-time female workers are significantly lower than the average earnings of similarly situated male workers;

(2) this average earnings difference arises, in significant part, because wages paid in occupational fields or job classifications held predominantly by female workers are lower than those paid in occupational fields or job classifications held predominantly by male workers, and this differential results, in significant part, from wage-setting practices based on the sex of the employees, rather than any intrinsic differences in the comparable worth of the job as measured by the education, training, skills, experience, effort, responsibility, or working conditions required for the job;

(3) because of these discriminatory wage differentials resulting from discriminatory wage-setting practices, many female workers are underpaid and undercompensated for their work efforts and thereby denied equal employment opportunities;

(4) these discriminatory wage-setting practices and discriminatory wage differentials result in depressing the wages, devaluing the work, and lowering the living standards of many female workers and contribute to the increasing number of women and children living at or near the poverty level and a consequent increase in their need for various forms of government assistance;

(5) the contributions of female workers are vital to our economy, and the continued existence and tolerance of these discriminatory wage-setting practices and discriminatory wage differentials prevent full utilization of the talents, skills, experience, and potential contributions of female workers and result in the exploitation of those workers;

(6) these discriminatory wage-setting practices and discriminatory wage differentials persist despite applicable State and Federal equal employment opportunity laws and directives;

(7) the Federal agencies charged with the responsibility for enforcement of Federal equal employment opportunity laws and directives have failed to take action, pursuant to applicable such laws and directives, to seek to eliminate discriminatory wage-setting practices and discriminatory wage differentials; and

(8) objective job-evaluation techniques now exist which are utilized by many public and private employers to determine the comparative value of different jobs through a system which numerically rates the basic features and requirements of a particular job, and additional efforts should be made to develop, improve, and implement these techniques so as to help eliminate discriminatory wage-setting practices and discriminatory wage differentials.

(b) Recognizing that the elimination of discriminatory wage-setting practices and discriminatory wage differentials is in the public interest, the purpose of this Act is to help eliminate such practices and differentials by—

(1) providing for the development and utilization of equitable job-evaluation techniques that will promote the establishment of wage rates based upon the work performed rather than the sex of the employee and thereby help ensure that all employees, irrespective of sex, race, ethnicity, age, disability, receive comparable pay for work of comparable worth;

(2) providing to those Federal agencies charged with the responsibility for enforcement of Federal equal employment opportunity laws and directives specific guidance and direction to help eliminate discriminatory wage-setting practices and discriminatory wage differentials;

(3) encouraging and stimulating public and private employers to eliminate discriminatory wage-setting practices and discriminatory wage differentials through the development and utilization of equitable job-evaluation techniques in setting wage rates; and

(4) bringing the Federal Government's wage-setting practices into compliance with the purpose of this Act and section 2301(b)(3) of title 5, United States Code, which provides that equal pay should be provided for work of equal value in Federal employment.

DEFINITIONS

SEC. 3. As used in this Act, the term—

(1) "Commission" means the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission established by section 705 of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 (42 U.S.C. 2000e—4);

(2) "Secretary" means the Secretary of Labor;

(3) "Federal agency" means any agency of the Federal Government or the District of Columbia, including any executive agency as defined in section 105 of title 5, United States Code, the United States Postal Service and the Postal Rate Commission, and the Library of Congress, the General Accounting Office, and the Office of Technology Assessment;

(4) "discriminatory wage-setting practices" means the setting of wage rates paid for jobs held predominantly by female workers lower than those paid for jobs held predominantly by male workers although the work performed requires comparable education, training, skills, experience, effort, and responsibility, and is performed under comparable working conditions;

(5) "discriminatory wage differentials" means different rates of compensation resulting from utilization of discriminatory wage-setting practices;

(6) "job-evaluation technique" means an objective method of determining the comparative value of different jobs utilizing a system which rates numerically the basic features and requirements of a particular job, including such factors as education, training, skills, experience, effort, responsibility, and working conditions; and

(7) "equitable job-evaluation technique" means a job-evaluation technique which, to the maximum extent feasible, does not include components for determining the comparative value of a job that reflect the sex, race, ethnicity, age, or disability of the employee.

EQUAL EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITY COMMISSION ACTIVITIES

SEC. 4. (a)(1) Not later than nine months after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Commission, in consultation with the Secretary (acting through the Office of Federal Contract Compliance Programs in the Department of Labor), shall publish in the Federal Register, for public review and comment, proposed guidelines for the purpose of identifying and eliminating discriminatory wage-setting practices and discriminatory wage differentials. Such guidelines shall include recommendations for utilization of equitable job-evaluation techniques in setting wage rates for employees.

(2) Not later than one year after such enactment date, the Commission, in consultation with the Secretary (acting through the Office of Federal Contract Compliance Programs), shall publish final guidelines for the purpose described in paragraph (1).

(b) In order to effectuate the purpose of this Act, the Commission shall develop and carry out a continuing program of education and information, under which, among other things, the Commission shall—

(1) undertake and promote research into the development of equitable job-evaluation techniques;

(2) develop a program for maximum dissemination and utilization of such equitable job-evaluation techniques; and

(3) develop and implement a program for providing appropriate technical assistance to any public or private entity requesting such assistance to eliminate discriminatory wage-setting practices and discriminatory wage differentials.

(c) On February 1, 1987, and annually thereafter, the Commission shall submit to the President and the Congress a report describing in detail the activities of the Commission during the preceding fiscal year to carry out the provisions of subsection (b). Such report shall include an evalaution of the effectiveness of such activities, a description of the Commission's plans for carrying out the provisions of subsection (b) and effectuating the purpose of this Act during the fiscal year in which the report is submitted, and such recommendations for statutory changes or administrative action, or both (other than any measure which would result in a reduction in the rate of pay payable for any position), as the Commission considers necessary to effectuate such purpose.

(d)(1) The Commission shall provide for the conduct, by a private consultant selected upon recommendation of a nine-member advisory committee (including not less than six individuals who are representatives of labor organizations representing Federal employees or Federal employee organizations composed primarily of female employees), of a study of the wage-setting practices and wage differentials within and between the Federal Government's position-classification system under chapter 51 of title 5, United States Code, and the job-grading system under subchapter IV of chapter 53 of such title, using equitable job-evaluation techniques, for the purpose of determining whether any discriminatory wage-setting practices or discriminatory wage differentials exist within or between such systems. The private consultant selected to conduct the study shall meet the advisory committee on a regular basis and keep it advised as to the progress of the study. The study shall be completed eighteen months after the date of the enactment of this Act.

(2) Not later than twenty-four months after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Commission shall submit to the President and the Congress a report on its findings, in light of the final guidelines published under subsection (a)(2), with respect to the study undertaken pursuant to paragraph (1) and shall provide a copy of this report to the Director of the Office of Personnel Management. The report shall include such recommendations for statutory changes or administrative action, or both (other than any measure which would result in reduction in the rate of pay payable for any position), as the Commission considers necessary to effectuate the purpose of this Act.

(3) Not later than ninety days after receiving a copy of the report pursuant to paragraph (2), the Director of the Office of Personnel Management shall submit to the President and the Congress a report commenting on the Commission's report and specifying its intentions and the reasons therefor (and, as appropriate, the timetable) to carry out or not carry out the Commission's recommendations.

(4) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Director of the Office of Personnel Management and the head of each Federal agency shall cooperate in all respects with the Commission (and its consultant) in connection with the conduct of the study required under this subsection and shall provide to the Commission (and its consultant) such data, reports, and documents in connection with the subject matter of such study as the Commission (or its consultant) may request.

FEDERAL CONTRACTS

SEC. 5. (a)(1) Not later than thirty days after the date of the publication of final guidelines under section 4(a)(2), the Secretary (acting through the Office of Federal Contract Compliance Programs) shall publish in the Federal Register proposed guidelines for the purpose of requiring all contractors of the United States to identify and eliminate discrimination wage-setting practices and discriminatory wage differentials. Such guidelines shall—

(A) include provisions to encourage all such contractors to develop and utilize equitable job-evaluation techniques in setting wage rates for employees;

(B) provide that each such contractor that is required by Federal law or directive to submit a written affirmative action plan shall (i) with respect to each such plan or update of each such plan submitted after the date of the publication of the final guidelines published pursuant to paragraph (2), include in such plan or update a review and identification of any discriminatory wage-setting practices and discriminatory wage differentials within such contractor's labor force and a plan of action to eliminate any such practices and differentials, or (ii) if such contractor does not submit such plan or update within one year after such publication date, submit, within such one-year period, an amendment to its existing plan which shall include the information described in subclause (i); and

(C) provide for compliance reviews of any such contractor that has failed to utilize equitable job-evalution techniques in setting wage rates for employees.

(2) Not later than sixty days after the date of the publication of the proposed guidelines under paragraph (1), the Secretary shall publish final guidelines for the purpose described in paragraph (1).

(b) On February 1, 1987, and annually thereafter, the Secretary shall submit to the President and the Congress a report describing in detail the activities by the Office of Federal Contract Compliance Programs pursuant to subsection (a) undertaken during the preceding fiscal year and to be undertaken during the fiscal year in which the report is submitted. Such report shall include such recommendations for statutory changes or administrative action, or both (other than any measure which would result in a reduction in the rate of pay payable for any position), as the Secretary considers necessary to effectuate the purpose of this Act.

FEDERAL DEPARTMENTS AND AGENCIES

SEC. 6. Each Federal agency responsible for submitting an equal employment opportunity plan pursuant to section 717 of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 (42 U.S.C. 2000e-16) shall include, in each such plan or update of such plan submitted to the Commission after the date of the enactment of this section, a review and identification of any discriminatory wage-setting practices and discriminatory wage differentials with respect to its labor force and a plan of action to eliminate any such practices and differentials. Any such agency which does not submit such plan or update within one year after such enactment date shall, not later than one year after such enactment date, submit an amendment to its existing plan which shall include the information described in the preceding sentence.

EQUAL PAY ACT REPORT

SEC. 7. (a) Not later than January 1, 1986, the Commission shall submit to the President and the Congress a report describing in detail the activities of the Commission with respect to enforcement of the provisions of the Equal Pay Act of 1963 (29 U.S.C. 206(d)) since the date of transfer of authority for Equal Pay Act enforcement activities to the Commission pursuant to Reorganization Plan Numbered 1 of 1978. Such report shall include with respect to such activities—

(1) information on the number of complaints received and processed by the Commission, their disposition, and the allocation of Commission resources to Equal Pay Act enforcement activities;

(2) a comparison of the disposition of, and allocation of resources to, these cases by the Commission to the disposition of, and allocation of resources to, similar cases by the Department of Labor prior to the transfer of such responsibilities to the Commission; and

(3) any recommendations for statutory changes or administrative action, or both, as the Commission considers necessary to carry out the provisions of such Act and effectuate the purpose of this Act.

(b) Not later than ninety days after the date of the submission of the report required by subsection (a), the Secretary shall submit to the President and the Congress a report commenting on the Commission's report and containing such recommendations for statutory changes or administrative action, or both, as the Secretary considers necessary to carry out the provisions of such Act and effectuate the purpose of this Act.

CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES,
Washington, DC, November 15, 1984.

Hon. CHARLES A. BOWSHER,
Comptroller General of the United States, U.S. General Accounting Office, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. COMPTROLLER GENERAL: During the 98th Congress, much interest was expressed in both the House of Representatives and the Senate regarding the issue of wage-based sex discrimination in the federal government. The House passed legislation mandating a study of the federal pay and classification systems to determine if they discriminate in wages on the basis of sex. In the Senate, similar legislation was introduced but not passed.

In the 99th Congress, both the House Post Office and Civil Service Committee and the Senate Subcommittee on Civil Service, Post Office, and General Services intended to continue the work begun in the 98th Congress regarding pay and classification disparities which may exist in the federal system, as indicated in discussions relating to this issue on both the House and Senate floors on October 10, 1984 (H11768-70 and S14003).

On December 10, 1982, the House Subcommittee on Civil Service, Human Resources, and Compensation and Employee Benefits requested the General Accounting Office to study and report on the principal systems for classifying federal and non-federal civilian personnel in order to provide background information for evaluating sex bias in federal classification systems. The first phase of your report, dated July 13, 1984, was helpful in describing how various federal classification systems operate. We anticipate that phase two of the report, which will analyze non-governmental job classification systems, will be equally informative.

In addition to your efforts to complete this report, we believe that a report presenting various options for selecting an appropriate scope and methodology for a thorough pay equity analysis of federal executive agencies' pay and classification practices (to determine whether job classifications held predominantly by female workers are underpaid in contrast to job classifications held predominantly by male workers although the job qualifications, working conditions, and requirements are comparable) would be very useful to the appropriate House and Senate Committees.

We, therefore, request that you prepare such a report and that the report include:

(1) An evaluation and analysis of the advantages and disadvantages of various methodologies that could be used in a study to accurately and effectively determine whether and, if so, the extent to which sex-based wage discrimination exists in the federal pay and classification systems (including but not limited to those methodologies used in all of the studies underway or completed in the various States, with a description of follow-up action which may have resulted from such studies in those States), with particular emphasis on which of these methodologies would be suited to be used to evaluate accurately and effectively the federal pay and classification systems. In particular, we ask that you address the methodology described in the enclosed excerpt from the House Committee report (98-832).

(2) An estimate and analysis of the time that would be involved in conducting such a study.

(3) Estimates of the cost of conducting such a study on a contract basis or directly by a branch of the federal government.

(4) An analysis of the advantages and disadvantages, in terms of conducting an objective and thorough study, of having the study done by a private contractor selected by the Office of Personnel Management, by a private contractor selected by the General Accounting Office, by the General Accounting Office alone, or by the Office of Personnel Management alone, or under some other suitable arrangement that you might also believe should be considered.

(5) A determination of the relationship of the current Office of Personnel Management review of the classification process to be completed by the end of the year to the objectives of the pay equity analysis that we are asking GAO to address in this request.

We also request that your Office consult with federal employee organizations, job evaluation experts, and the Office of Personnel Management throughout the preparation of the report.

In order that the information be reviewed in a timely fashion by appropriate Members of the House and Senate, the report should be completed not later than March 1, 1985.

We appreciate your attention to this matter and look forward to receiving your report.

With warm regards,

Cordially,

The Employment and Earnings of Women: the Comparable Worth Debate

(By Ray Marshall* and Beth Paulin†)

INTRODUCTION

The increasing labor force participation of women is perhaps the most important labor market development of this century. Women have always worked, of course, but in the preindustrial society the family was the basic producing unit, and the work of women was an integral part of that unit. Industrialization caused an expansion of the labor market and made economic activity increasingly external to the family. In the new division of labor, women were considered to be peripheral and temporary participants in the male-dominated market economy. Decisions concerning wages and other conditions of employment were made on the assumption that men would be the main wage earners. Hence, market values gave inadequate attention to the importance of home work. This "traditional model" described the dominant features of labor market patterns in the United States until the 1960s.

The increased labor force participation of women has changed the character of the work force: women are no longer peripheral but integral parts of the work force, most women spend more time working than they do bearing children, and male and female expectations about self-realization from jobs and careers are converging. Unfortunately, conditions of employment have not changed to reflect the new realities.

The tensions and relationships produced by the dichotomy between the conditions of employment and the increased labor force participation of women have very important social and economic implications. The way traditional labor, management, and governmental institutions respond to these new realities will affect their institutional strength as well as the conditions of women and men and, indeed, the health and stability of the entire society.

Discrimination against women, both overt and institutional, has, therefore, become an important policy issue. Overt discrimination occurs when decisions are made to deny women certain jobs or pay them less than men on the assumption that women are either not "suited" for certain jobs or are worth less than men who do similar work or work of equal value to the employer. Institutional discrimination is a more subtle and intrasigent form of discrimination. Institutional discrimination is deeply embedded in social institutions where it is naturally assumed that men and women will do different kinds of work and receive different compensation. In general, the job and pay assignments reflect the belief that women are "inferior" participants in the work force and, therefore, the higher status and higher paying jobs are reserved for men. Women as well as men adjust to these institutional patterns, thereby perpetuating this form of discrimination.

Employers can use institutional discrimination to cover overt discrimination. One way is through what is sometimes called "statistical" discrimination, where employers recruit from sources where one race or sex predominates because of the assumption that the probability of finding qualified workers from those sources is higher. In addition, if employers are really biased against women for certain jobs, they can use screening procedures that appear to be bias free, but that actually yield results compatible with their biases. The result is occupational segregation.

The issue of pay equity precipitates directly from the phenomenon of occupational segregation in which predominantly female jobs are paid less then male jobs of equal value to the employer in terms of such factors as skill, effort, and responsibility required in those jobs. The main purpose of this paper is to explore this issue of pay equity or what is popularly called comparable worth. We first examine the evidence with respect to male-female employment and earnings patterns and then analyze the pros and cons of the pay equity or comparable worth issue.

THE PATTERN

The increased labor force participation of women is likely to continue, though at a declining rate; women are expected to constitute two-thirds of the growth in the labor force during this decade. In 1950, 70 percent of American households were headed by men whose income was the sole source of family income: in 1984, less than 15 percent of families fit this "traditional" model, even though many of our employment policies assume it still to be pervasive. The evidence also indicates that the labor force participation of women is increasing for minorities as well as whites and that younger women have higher labor force participation rates than their mothers and grandmothers (see table 1). [Deleted.]

There also is a trend toward convergence in male-female occupational distributions and attitudes toward work. A paid job has become an important symbol of self-worth and personal independence for women, even though most women work for economic reasons. The mechanization of household work and increasing life expectancy have created much more time for women to pursue careers. Around 1900 the average life expectancy for all women was 47 years, 18 of which were spent childbearing; today, life expectancy is 77 years, only 10 of which are devoted to childbearing (although more is devoted to childbearing). Because minorities have different life expectancies, the impact of trends can be seen more clearly by looking at the experiences of white women. In 1900 the life expectancy of a white women was about 64 years. She could expect, on the average, to be widowed at 52 and die before her last child left home. In 1980 a white women who married at 22 could expect to live about 79.4 years and to stop having children at age 30. Her last child would leave home when whe was 48. However, there was a 47.4 percent chance that her first marriage would end in divorce. Davis and van den Oever (1982) observe:

"Underlying demographic changes thus force women to reduce the importance of marriage in their lives. The prospect is that two-thirds of their adult years will be spent without children in the household and half to two-thirds without a husband."

Women's employment patterns influence, and are influenced by, declining fertility rates. The average birth rate has declined from 22.3 per 1,000 in the 1935-55 period to 19.5 per 1,000 between 1955 and 1978 and is expected to be 15.8 for 1975 through 1995 to 2000.[1] These declines in birth rates reflect changing employment and lifestyles for women. They make it possible for more time to be devoted to work outside the home.[2]

Related to the decline in fertility rates is the fact that young women are also delaying marriage. In 1960 only 28 percent of 20-24-year-old women had never married; by 1980 this proportion had increased to 52 percent, and it expected to be 55 percent by 1995.

The trend toward convergence in male-female occupational distributions can be attributed in part to education. To the extent that occupational distributions reflect educational attainment, there should be a convergence of male and female job patterns, especially for younger people. The median educational levels of all women and men are about equal and have been since 1970; the medians for both were 12.2 years in 1970 and 12.6 years in 1979. There have been marked declines in the proportion of women and men in the labor force who have completed less than 4 years of high school [3] and marked increases in the proportion who have completed 4 years of college.[4]

Data on the proportions of men and women who have had 4 or more years of college indicate significant differences for age groups. Table 2 shows that young women 18-24 years of age are more likely to have completed 4 or more years of college than men in the same age group. In the older age categories, men constitute the larger proportion of labor participants with 4 or more years of college. It should also be noted that a larger percentage of men than women did not complete 4 years of high school in every age category.

Although a large percentage of women remained in traditional occupations, there were significant increases in nontraditional areas like medicine, law, and accounting. In 1970, 60 percent of all female professional and technical workers were in the traditional occupations of nursing and precollege teaching; by 1979 this percentage had dropped to about 52 percent; however, 80 percent of women were in occupations where women constituted 70 percent or more of total employment.

Table 3, [deleted] using data from the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission, shows the proportions of the total professional labor force represented by different groups. As the data show, white women have made particularly impressive gains in broad professional occupations. However, as will be seen later, there is still considerable job segregation within these broad classifications.

Although conclusive proof is not available, there is little doubt that a major factor responsible for the integration of nontraditional occupations has been pressure from the Federal Government to enforce antidiscrimination legislation and the affirmative action requirements of government contractors. Surveys suggest that women in managerial positions, particularly, feel that discrimination is the main barrier to their advancement and that during the early 1980s, "businesses sense less federal pressure to hire and promote women as part of affirmative action requirements." [5]

Although women have made impressive gains in professional jobs, the main determinants of future employment growth for women will be the growth of nonprofessional occupations because this is where most of the jobs are. These will, in turn, depend on general economic conditions and the extent to which women are able to break into nontraditional occupations.

EARNINGS

At the beginning of the 1980s, despite some occupational upgrading, women had about the same earnings relative to men that they had at the beginning of the 1970s. Women who worked full time earned about 60 percent as much as men. Although women almost achieved earnings parity in some newer occupations like computer science, they ordinarily were concentrated in lower paying jobs in each occupation. In 1978 white women earned 55.6 cents for every dollar earned by white men, while black women and Hispanic women fared even worse, 52.3 cents and 48.2 cents for every dollar earned by white men, respectively. (For 1979 data see table 4.) [Deleted.]

The real wage gap for young white men and women actually appears to be widening when other things are held constant. A 1984 study by Gordon W. Green, Jr., a senior official of the Census Bureau, found a growing real wage gap for young (average age 21 or 22) white men and white women full-time workers who entered the job market for the first time in 1980. Table 5 displays the wage gaps. [Deleted.]

The average wages for white women, as a proportion of the average for white men, were 86 percent in 1970 and 83 percent in 1980. For black men, the average wages as a proportion of the average for white men were 80 percent in 1970 and 88 percent in 1980; for black women, the figures were 77 percent in 1970 and 79 percent in 1980.

Some might argue that these earnings differentials can be partially explained by the quality of education. However, a study by Susan Bailey and Barbara Burrell (1980) examined the careers of 1972 graduates of Harvard's schools of law, dentistry, design, divinity, education, public health, and arts and sciences 7 years after students were awarded advanced degrees and found that women graduates had consistently lower salaries regardless of marital or family status. For instance, the average salaries of graduates of the Harvard School of Public Health were $37,800 a year for men and $21,300 for women.[6]

COMPARABLE WORTH

Two basic facts stand out from the preceding analysis of labor market patterns. First, on average in 1980, full-time women workers earned only about 60 cents for every dollar earned by men. Second, about 80 percent of all women workers were concentrated in occupations in which women constituted 70 percent or more of the work force.[7] Even though the absolute number of women breaking into nontraditional, male-dominated occupations is on the rise, the occupational distribution of men and women workers has changed very little since 1900.[8] And according to Meyer and Maes (1983), the patterns of occupational segregation are likely to persist as the new generation of women workers follows closely in the occupational mold, despite the convergence of education and labor force participation patterns of men and women.

That the male-female earnings gap and occupational segregation have proven to be stable labor market phenomena in the face of dynamic economic change leads one to question the equity and efficiency of the labor market's allocative and remunerative forces. Are women underpaid for their work, or do they merely hold those jobs that are worth relatively less? This is the crux of the comparable worth controversy.

ARGUMENTS AGAINST COMPARABLE WORTH

Those who oppose the concept of equal pay for work of comparable value usually base their convictions on a model of the labor market that is quite different from those who favor comparable worth. The former believe that the labor market operates in accordance with the competitive forces of supply and demand: women's labor is akin to any commodity that is for sale on the market. If women's wages are low, it is because market forces deem that they should be low.

Holding firmly to this scenario, Gary Becker (1957) "proved" to the world that discrimination cannot persist in a free market economy modeled in accordance with the neoclassical tradition.[9] Given all to the assumptions inherent in the neoclassical, general equilibrium model—profit maximization, perfect mobility of resources, unbridled competition, etc.—the existence of discrimination is said to be a temporary aberration of an otherwise smoothly running labor market. Given time, market forces will eradicate this market imperfection. Thus, the argument is made that without the long-term threat of discrimination, there is no need for corrective action to be instigated outside the market.

In theory this simplistic view of a self-adjusting labor market may be logically sound, but in practice it leaves many questions unanswered. For example, if discrimination is only temporary, how is one to account for the existence and longevity of occupational segregation and the male-female earnings gap? If discrimination is not the cause, what is? Can neoclassical theory adequately explain these labor market phenomena? If so, we can then conclude that this theory is correct in its view of discrimination and that those who hold to it are correct in opposing comparable worth. If not . . . .

Becker's original theory of discrimination has proven to be incapable of explaining the earnings gap and occupational segregation. According to one group of theorists, led by Becker himself, this does not make the theory wrong, but merely incomplete. Whereas Becker's first approach was demand oriented, the situation calls for an analysis of labor supply, which is provided by the human capital school.

Human capital theory has a commonsense appeal. Generally speaking, one would naturally assume that education, occupational status, and wages are positively correlated. The same should hold true for other human capital factors, such as the level of experience, specialized training, and so forth. The key here is the presumed connection between human capital attainment and productivity. Both general and specialized training are said to increase one's productivity. According to the marginal productivity theory of wages, other things equal, the higher a worker's productivity, the higher will be his or her wages.

What does all this have to do with the earnings gap and occupational segregation? According to the human capital school of thought, both can be explained by differences in human capital accumulation among men and women. As previously stated, the level of individual earnings is assumed to depend upon individual productivity, which is assumed to be a positive function of the amount of human capital embedded in an individual. Thus, if it can be shown that (1) human capital investment determines earnings, (2) human capital investment is significantly different for men and for women, and (3) earnings differentials can be explained by these differences in human capital accumulation, then we can dismiss the charge of wage discrimination.

The first empirical tests of human capital theory fell far short in their attempt to explain earnings. Even though it was well documented that men in general had "more" human capital than women, human capital factors were found to explain only up to one-third of the earnings differential. Not only did their equations lack decent correlation coefficients, but human capital theorists also had to explain such facts as why a woman with a college degree made on average only as much as a man with an eighth grade education.

Faced with this dilemma, human capital theorists were quick to point out the difficulties associated with measuring productivity. Years of schooling was an imperfect measure of general education, since it was believed that quality of schooling was also a factor. There was a similar problem with age as a proxy for experience. Not only was measuring productivity a problem, but there was also the possibility that something was "left out" of the equation.

Undaunted, human capitalists held their ground. The explanations turned from a direct explanation of wage differentials to an indirect one via occupational segregation and the resulting excess supply of women for "women's" occupations. Those who take this approach argue that occupational segregation and wage disparity have their roots in lifetime optimizing behavior. Women are said to freely segregate themselves in low-wage occupations because this is optimal for them. (This is known in the field as "rational" behavoir.)

Solomon Polachek has done much work in this area, using choice as an explanation of occupational segregation. According to Polachek, all labor force participants choose their occupations based on some lifetime optimizing behavior. They choose that occupation with the highest benefit-cost ratio, discounted accordingly. Occupational differences among participants arise from the different costs and benefits each expects to confront in his or her lifetime.

Of particular consequence for men and women is the fact that women's occupational choices vary from men's because expected lifetime labor force commitment varies. Men expect to remain in the labor force their entire working lives. Women, on the other hand, expect that their patterns of labor force participation will be characterized by intermittency due to childbearing responsibilities and other familial obligations.

It also is observed that the characteristics of occupations vary in such matters as the level of responsibility required, flexibility allowed, overtime demanded, and skills and education needed. What is of particular interest to Polachek and others is the way occupations vary (1) in their rate of depreciation, the rate at which the skills required depreciate or atrophy when not in use, and (2) in their rate of appreciation, the rate at which new skills are learned (assumed to be a function of occupational longevity). Those occupations with low appreciation rates (jobs that allow for very little or no skill enhancement) have relatively flat earnings curves. Wages rise very little as one's experience in that occupation increases. Those occupations with high appreciation rates have steep earnings curves. Because of the costs associated with training, wages are relatively low at the beginning of the work experience. Skills are enhanced with experience and wages respond accordingly.

Now, because women exhibit optimizing behavoir and because, on average, their labor force commitment is best described as intermittent, they will choose to enter those occupations that have a minimal cost associated with that intermittent labor force participation. These occupations will be those with low depreciation rates and those with the highest starting salaries, whose payoff come quickly, not at some future date when they likely will be out of the labor force. These are the jobs with the lowest appreciation rates such as elementary school teaching, operative and sales work, and household work.[10] Thus, because women have little life-cycle labor force commitment, they choose to segregate themselves in a select group of occupations that are limited in number.

Conversely, men choose occupations with high rates of appreciation and high future payoffs because this is optimal given their strong lifetime commitment to the labor force. In addition, men are not constrained by depreciation rates, a factor that women must consider because of their intermittent behavior. Therefore, since labor force commitment is different for each sex and the costs of labor force intermittency vary among occupations, the natural and optimal outcome is occupational segregation.

Human capital theorists link this analysis to earnings in two ways. One is through the previously mentioned relationship between human capital accumulation and earnings: because of their expected intermittent behavoir in the labor market, women do not find it optimal to invest in as much on-the-job training as men or in as much education (not only in terms of years of schooling, but in quality of schooling, the latter being reflected in the different college majors chosen by women).[11] Their payoff period is shorter, increasing the probability that costs incurred will be greater than the expected future benefits. If women do not invest in as much human capital, they should not expect to earn as much as men.

The second link between occupational segregation and the earnings differentials is through the interaction of supply and demand: because women choose to enter a limited number of occupations, supply exceeds demand, resulting in downward pressure on wages. Thus, claim the human capital theorists, it is erroneous to attribute low wages in women's occupations to discrimination when it is really women themselves who, by their rational behavior, are bloating supply and keeping their own wages low.

If Polachek's twist to human capital theory were correct, the labor market would reveal several facts;

(1) If women with little labor force commitment choose to enter those occupations that have a minimal cost associated with intermittency, we should find that women who choose predominantly female jobs will be penalized less for the time they spend out of the labor market than those women who choose "men's jobs."

(2) Women who have more continuous employment patterns should be more apt to be in men's jobs than women with less commitment to the labor force.

(3) As women's labor force participation patterns and educational characteristics become more like men's (as they have over time), we should expect to see the sexual occupational distributions converge.

Paula England (1982) investigated the validity of these logical outgrowths of Polachek's theory. Curiously, she found that the NLS (National Longitudinal Survey) data used by Polachek do not show that women in women's jobs are penalized less for their intermittent labor force participation than are women in men's jobs. Women lose relatively little from labor market withdrawal and recoup their earnings relatively fast when they reenter the work force. Similarly, she found no significant correlation between increased continuity in the labor market and the probability of a woman choosing a man's job.

These findings cast serious doubts on the validity of human capital theory's explanation of occupational segregation and the earnings differential. This should not be so surprising given the theoretical and logical defects of human capital theory: women do not invest in human capital because they do not expect to earn high wages given their intermittent labor force participation and because they do not invest in human capital they do not earn high wages. Tautology has never proved itself to be solid reasoning.[12]

Similarly, Corcoran and Duncan (1978) investigated the underlying causes of wage differentials betweeen the sexes, differentiating by race. They included variables in their equations that quantified absenteeism and self-imposed restrictions on work hours and locations, along with the traditional human capital factors relating to work history and on-the job training.[13]

As expected, the data revealed a number of differences between women and men and blacks and whites that are said to affect productivity. Women worked less and had shorter continuity in work experience. Women's absenteeism was slightly higher than that for men, and more women had self-imposed employment limits than men.[14]

Even though differences exist between men and women, and blacks and whites, no conclusion can be reached concerning the reasons for these wage differentials until it is determined that the measured factors do, in fact, determine earnings and it is shown that these factors account for a significant portion of the wage gap. Corcoran and Duncan found that the productivity-related factors affect the earning of all four subgroups in a similar way. This implies that all receive almost identical marginal payoffs for identical skills. But they also found that the constant terms differed substanitally among the four subgroups, suggesting that white men earn more than women or blacks at any given skill level. There is a premium paid for being both white and male.[15]

Finally, Corcoran and Duncan combined the information on differences in the amounts of education, work experience, and work commitment with the estimated effects of these factors on earnings to see how well they would account for earnings differences between white men and the other three groups of workers. Differences in work history are most important for white women, while educational differences also play a large role for black women.[16] Significantly, however, a very large part of the wage differentials cannot be explained, suggesting that sex earnings differentials are attributable more to labor market discrimination and employment policies and less to choice by women than implied by the human capital studies.

ARGUMENTS FOR COMPARABLE WORTH

Advocates of comparable worth can point to numerous studies to discredit those who refuse to admit that discrimination—both racial and sexual—plays an active role in wage and occupational determination. When examined more closely, theories that may "look good" on paper turn out to be inconsistent with both the data and common sense. The problem is that opponents of comparable worth base their arguments on a theory of the labor market that might fit neoclassical, general equilibrium models, but that does not fit well with reality and, therefore, is an inadequate guide to policy.

As noted in the previous section, the comparable worth controversy is based on two different perceptions of the structure and functioning of the labor market. On one side is the emphasis on the forces of supply and demand. The other side gives greater weight to internal labor markets, a subject to which we now turn.

One way to describe an internal labor market is to say what it is not. It is not a place where workers are continually searching for better jobs at higher wages and employers are continually searching for workers who will take a lower wage. It is not a place where workers compete amongst themselves for job openings by offering to accept a lower wage. It is not a place where job vacancies are known about or open to all workers. It is not, in short, a place where external labor market forces of supply and demand have much direct effect on the rules governing compensation and the assignment of people to jobs. This is not to argue, of course, that what happens outside the enterprise has no effect on internal wages and occupational structures; rather, the argument is that the effects of external demand and supply are sufficiently imperfect to leave room for discretion, i.e., discrimination.

In contrast to the traditional perception of the labor market, the internal labor market is a place where most jobs have elements that are unique to a particular enterprise and, thus, are not subject to competition from "outside" supply and demand pressures. Job allocation is a routinized process whereby job vacancies are filled by moving up the job ladder one step at a time. Relative wages are set by custom and are rarely changed for fear of internal disruption in the work lives of employees.

To be more specific, the labor market consists, in part, of many internal labor markets. These "markets" are found within sizable firms and workplaces, in both the public and private sectors. It has been estimated that approximately 80 percent of the labor force works in these internal labor markets.[17]

Internal labor markets developed within firms, corporations, and other public and private organizations because of job uniqueness. Job uniqueness and the resulting demand for firm-specific skills introduced on-the-job training as a necessary prerequisite to a smoothly operating establishment. For on-the-job training to be carried out properly, those who train their replacements must have the security of knowing that they will be adequately compensated. Giving up knowledge is akin to giving up one's power. Job security becomes an important issue, as does relative remuneration. Thus evolved the customary laws of the internal labor market. These laws solidify the relationships between the workers themselves and between workers and the employers in regard to job allocation and relative wages, providing security for all involved.

In order for an individual to enter the internal labor market, one must typically be hired into a job that is properly termed a "port of entry." These entry jobs require little or no firm-specific skills and often are at the bottom of promotional ladders or are professional and managerial jobs that tend to be standardized across industries. Market forces act more strongly on these jobs as their characteristics are representative of many of the traditional assumptions made by neoclassical wage theory. (For instance, the jobs are often well advertised, especially since the advent of antidiscrimination laws and Executive orders, and wages are more sensitive to the market than other jobs in the internal labor markets.)

Once in the internal labor market, promotions and earnings are tied to seniority, custom, and tradition brought into the market from the community. Since internal labor markets reflect societal customs and social order, so too will the allocation of women's labor within those markets and the relative payments made for that labor. Thus, the knowledge that communities have historically ranked women inferior to men (at least in the labor market) goes a long way towards explaining women's present position. Women have been denied certain jobs because of their "inferior status." Women have been denied promotions and have been paid less than men for doing exactly the same work. Women have also been paid less than men for doing work of equal value but different in nature, again because of their inferior status.18

The practice of paying women's jobs less than men's jobs, even though both are of equal value to the organization, is embedded in internal labor markets and integral to "maintaining order." To suggest that the elimination of discrimination in internal labor markets is optimal for the profit-maximizing firm is to misunderstand the importance of order (and security) is the efficient operation of the production process in these markets. As Doeringer and Piore tell us:

"In almost all cases the full effects of . . . discrimination cannot be remedied without costs being imposed on the incumbent work force in terms of job security and promotion opportunities. This in turn is often perceived as a threat to the entire rule and equity structure of the internal labor market."

Anything that upsets the balance of job allocation and payment mechanisms hinders the productive potential of the internal labor market participants. The reliance on on-the-job training underscores the importance and power of information. When workers feel their security is threatened by a change in the status quo, they will exist what power they have to show their displeasure. They will withhold information; not the type of information found in job manuals, but the kinds of information gathered by working with particular machines and particular people—knowledge of what makes them work better and harder, of what makes them run most efficiently. Without this type of information, the smoothly running firm can become an unproductive quagmire.

Employers who operate in internal labor markets, thus, have little or no reason to eliminate discrimination once it is embedded in the operational scheme. Contrary to popular belief, eliminating discrimination will not necessarily increase profits.

It is often asked why women employees do not go elsewhere if they feel they are being treated unjustly. Why do they not get jobs at a port of entry where there is a probability of moving up the ladder? Since many do not, can it not be concluded that women are fairly compensated for their work?

Questions such as these elicit two responses. First of all, alternative employment is just not that easy to find. Quitting a secure, but underpaid job for one at an entry-level position where promotion is uncertain is quite a risk to take. And considering the fact that two-thirds of women who work do so because of economic necessity, taking such a risk may be too much to ask. Even if one does take the risk, as long as society considers women's place as subordinate to that of men, the internal labor market will reflect this. Many men will resent women bosses. Women will not be given that information "missing" from the company manual. This will hinder their productivity, and they will likely be passed over for promotions. Order and security are too important to be taken lightly.

Secondly, those who argue that women choose the jobs they can get into not only are involved in circularity, but also ignore the reality of "institutional" discrimination. Institutional discrimination originates in specific overt acts of discrimination rooted in community beliefs and customs and personal prejudices of decisionmakers. Women adjust to these patterns (just as blacks did) because it takes more power than most individuals have to change the system. This does not, however, mean that society is not damaged by discrimination against them (most do perceive discrimination); it merely means that as individuals they have limited power to change the system. Moreover, since institutional discrimination is deeply embedded in community customs, women rarely have role models for nontraditional jobs and are rarely counseled to aspire to those jobs.

Occupational discrimination benefits employers if there are many women with positive attributes with limited options. Employers can get more productive labor by paying a wage that is lower than the contribution those who are not discriminated against could make in those occupations. There is evidence, for example, that employers can get better qualified women at lower wages than they would have to pay men—which probably is one of the reasons that Greene's study cited earlier found a widening real wage gap (between 1970 and 1980) between white men and women with similar labor market attributes.

Similarly, although women might have "chosen" traditional occupations, they do not choose to be paid lower wages than men for work of equal value to the employer or to be discriminated against in periodic wage adjustments. It is no answer to say that those women who already are in predominantly female jobs could solve their problem by applying for men's jobs—it is not very practical for women who already are established in their careers to be told they should train for and seek to enter predominantly men's jobs. More women will enter nontraditional jobs as we break down overt and institutional discrimination, but that is no argument against ending pay discrimination against women who (1) already have made their career choices or (2) really want to be in "traditional" women's jobs. Not many women or men want to have their choices restricted; occupational discrimination restricts choices for men and women.[19]

SOME MISPERCEPTIONS ABOUT COMPARABLE WORTH

Many of the arguments against comparable worth are based on misinformation about what the comparable worth concept is all about. Germanis,[20] for example, defines comparable worth as "equal pay for jobs requiring similar levels of training, responsibility, and other employee characteristics." Comparable worth does not intend to compare employee characteristics. The concept is equal pay for jobs of comparable worth. If an organization, through job evaluation or whatever system is used, determines that a man's job is as valuable to the firm as a woman's job, then the employees in both these jobs should be paid equally even though the jobs themselves are different.

Germanis[21] also states that "under this doctrine, pay would be based on the opinion of an 'objective' government board or similar body, whose decisions would derive from an estimate of the skill, effort, and responsibility involved in one job relative to another." George Hildebrand makes a similar point.[22] "The proposal leads directly to administrative wage control for the entire American economy."

Again, these statements reveal a misinterpretation. Comparable worth is a concept that is to be instituted at the level of the firm.[23] Advocates of comparable worth do not ask that the government establish wage rates for the entire labor market or for any geographical region of that market. Comparable worth requires only that the firm's evaluation of jobs be unbiased and that pay scales be set up accordingly. The government would not tell enterprises what to pay, any more than they do under other nondiscriminatory measures; the government's requirement is and should be only to see to it that whatever system the company uses not be discriminatory. Of course, if courts find after trial that employers have discriminated, then they appropriately require certain wages to be paid as a remedy—just as is currently done in discrimination cases.

Germanis[24] also argues that "[u]nder comparable worth wages would no longer be based on productivity and initiative." Quite the contrary! Comparable worth requires that wages be based on "productivity" as measured by whatever techniques employers use to measure the value of a job to them—not as measured by the sexual makeup of an occupation. If women's and men's jobs are determined to be equal value, i.e., equally "productive," they should be paid accordingly.

Daniel Seligman[25] makes the claim that "comparable worth is just the latest dodge in the neverending effort of interest groups to get a better deal than the market is giving them." The problem is that the market is giving women a raw deal. Women's work is undervalued in the market—historically because of overt discrimination and now because of institutionalized discrimination. Women have been channeled into jobs that were considered to be "appropriate" for them, which ordinarily meant an extension of their nuturing home duties, such as teaching, social work, and nursing. Because home work was (and is) considered less valuable than men's market work, jobs that are seen as an extension of home work, women's jobs, are undervalued also.

Many researchers challenge comparable worth on the grounds that it cannot be proven that women's jobs are undervalued. These arguments assert that an earnings gap between men and women does not "prove" sex discrimination.

June O'Neill:[26] "The existence of a wage differential does not prove the existence of discrimination any more than the absence of a wage differential proves the absence of discrimination."

O'Neill:[27] "There is no firm evidence that pay is lower in women's occupations because of undervaluing these occupations." Referring to a previous study,[28] O'Neill argues that "being in a more female dominated occupation was associated with somewhat lower pay. But it could not be ascertained whether this effect was capturing an unspecified characteristic of the job or whether it simply reflected transitory market phenomena."

Then there are the other explanations of the earnings differential:

Germanis:[29] "Closer examination of these factors[30] reveals that the relatively lower earnings obtained by women actually reflect their own preferences and productivity—not systematic sex discrimination by society." Elaborating on this, Germanis lists several reasons for the differential:

1. A large proportion of women are in entry-level positions due to the large influx of women into the labor market.

2. Men work more hours than woman during the week and also work more weeks during the year.

3. Women are tied to their husbands and thus are restricted to a limited geographical region in their search for a "high-wage" job.

4. Women have higher turnover rates than men. "If an employer believes a woman is more likely than a man to leave the firm—the woman is likely to be hired only if she accepts a lower wage than a man with identical credentials to compensate the firm for the additional risk."[31] (Again, this shows his confusion with employee characteristics and job characteristics.)

5. Women are lacking in "human capital" relative to men.

6. The characteristics of men's jobs require that they be paid a premium. "Since male-dominated jobs are more closely linked to fluctuations in the economy, part of the wage gap between the sexes can be explained by the wage premium paid men to compensate them for the greater risk of job loss."[32] Along the same lines, he argues that "women trade off wages for better working conditions, such as good hours and pleasant surroundings. . . . Many male-dominated professions, on the other hand, are characterized by less agreeable and more dangerous surroundings."

7. Our tax system with its high marginal tax rates "creates an economic disincentive for women to pursue a demanding career."[33]

June O'Neill also argues that human capital factors and women's preferences, high turnover, and other "female" characteristics are the major reasons for occupational differences and hence earnings differences.

Again, these arguments reveal some misconceptions. Advocates of comparable worth do not base their claims simply on the fact that an earnings gap exists between the sexes. It is that when analyzing the underlying causes of this phenomenon, they are able to make the charge that women's work is undervalued. Sure, there are differences in the amount of "human capital" men and women have. There are also well-documented differences in other general characteristics between men and women that are expected to affect productivity and in turn affect earnings. But the fact is that all these factors cannot explain why the gap is what it is. Besides, when we are comparing jobs, we must assume that the human capital requirements for those jobs would be equal regardless of sex. Human capital differences might explain the differences between compensation of workers, but not the jobs they accept.

Opponents of comparable worth will respond with statements like the following: "Studies that do not attribute the whole wage differential to economic factors cannot assert that the differential is due to sex discrimination—only that reliable statistics on certain factors are difficult to assemble."[34] "The residual is a measure of our ignorance, not of discrimination."[35]

But the residual is evidence of discrimination. It is not perfect, but it provides some evidence, which must be supplemented with additional supporting logic and data. The residual is not a perfect measure in part because the labor market does not operate according to the assumptions implicit in those kinds of tests and in part because of measurement and data problems. Regressions assume workers are paid the value of their marginal product; i.e., job allocation and wage remuneration result from perfectly competitive forces of supply and demand. Wage payments and job allocations are not carried out in this way. They are carried out in imperfect external and more imperfect internal labor markets. In internal markets, wages are insulated from the external forces of supply and demand, except for the "ports of entry," where workers are hired from the external labor market. Job evaluations are used extensively—often to justify the existing wage relationship; i.e., discriminatory wage practices.

This view of the labor market is in striking contrast to the one presented by opponents of comparable worth. In their world, the whole system runs on the profit motive with firms continually competing with each other for a bigger share of the market by striving to reduce costs so that they can lower product prices. This neoclassical model of the labor market precludes the existence of wage discrimination. "The wage setting process is the result of two conditions, neither of which the employer controls: (1) Wages are limited from above by the worker's productivity in the job and (2) supply considerations prevent an employer from paying to workers of a given productivity a wage that makes working for that employer less attractive than working for other employers. To do so invites these workers to seek employment elsewhere."[36] "What is true of the product market is equally true of the labor market. Prices are determined by demand and the marginal cost of production."[37]

"If discrimination did exist, non-discriminating and profit seeking firms would simply hire females for lower wages, thereby lowering production costs and enabling them to bid business away from discriminating firms by charging lower prices."[38] Thus, "[t]he market has a built-in mechanism to eliminate discrimination: the profit motive."[39] O'Neill[40] agrees: "The firm would of course like to pay less than the value of productivity. It is the existence of alternatives and the workers' power to quit that keep the wage from falling below productivity. Discrimination is one factor that can lead to an employer paying more for some workers than they are worth while others are paid less or not hired at all. In the case of discrimination, an employer's prejudices against a worker (or group of workers) is sufficiently great that the employer is willing to forgo profits (by overpaying the favored workers) rather than employing the disliked group. Because such inefficient behavior is penalized in a competitive market, there are powerful forces working against discrimination."

This "inefficient behavior" may be penalized in a competitive labor market, but the fact remains that the labor market is not perfectly competitive in the neoclassical sense. Workers do not continually search for jobs with higher pay. They make investments in the jobs they currently hold; they establish relationships. Nor do workers compete amongst themselves for jobs by lowering their asking pay. And employers do not fire someone just because they found someone who will work for less. Again, investments are made and relationships established. Moreover, it is more likely that employers will underpay those discriminated against or segregate them into certain occupations than that they will "overpay" preferred workers. In a competitive market, it is difficult to see why employers would pay white males more, especially in a world characterized by unemployment where white males could be hired at the going wage. Finally, most of the comparable worth cases have arisen among public employees, where the critical assumption of profit maximization is not appropriate.

Because on the way in which internal labor markets work (and these are the markets at which comparable worth is aimed), discrimination, i.e., "inefficient behavior," is not so unprofitable. Actually, as noted earlier, from the employers' perspective the elimination of discrimination is likely to be "inefficient behavior" in these markets.

Although the competitive forces of supply and demand do not operate with much precision in the internal labor market, it must be admitted that some jobs are impacted by their influence. A problem that has been uncovered, however, is that this does not always apply in women's occupations. Take nursing, for example. The nursing profession is made up predominantly of women. The nursing profession has for years and years been suffering from a perceived labor shortage. And yet, wages have not risen enough to correct the situation.

Moreover, the neoclassical model assumes away the importance of group decisions by assuming that conduct is based on individual maximizing decisions. It cannot handle decisions made by groups and classes of workers—white workers, black workers, unions, etc.—that have very important influences on wage and employment decisions.

Finally, we must look at the arguments against comparable worth that are based on economic consequences. These arguments are similar to those historically raised against regulation of labor market activities and range from assertions that comparable worth will lead to unemployment and inflation to total economic chaos.

"There are three ways comparable worth will increase unemployment and along with it poverty and welfare dependency. . . . It will raise the price of low-productivity workers without improving their productivity. . . . In consequence, employers will be induced to lay part of the group off to hold down the enforced rise in their costs. . . . For the low-paid women working in the numerous small or even tiny firms, the imposed rise in labor costs will bring about either much bankruptcy or voluntary closure. Disemployment of these workers will follow. . . . In larger firms the imposed increase in labor costs will create an incentive to substitute capital and to revise plant or shop organization to replace low-paid women or alternatively, to raise hiring standards so that fewer workers of either sex who are more productive can replace them." [41] In addition. Hildebrand asserts that "[t]here will be some withdrawal of discouraged women workers from the labor force, precisely because official policy will have destroyed their jobs for them, despite their own efforts to be productive and self-supporting citizens." [42]

O'Neill [43] objects to comparable worth on the grounds that it will subvert the role of affirmative action. "Comparable worth could distort the price signals that have been the impetus for men and women to enter particular occupations. It would lock women into the traditional women's occupations and in the long run would work to the disadvantage of women." Germanis agrees with this asssessment, arguing that comparable worth will distort wages and make male jobs less attractive. Curiously, he sees another problem: "It could also encourge some men to enter the traditionally female occupations, generating greater competition for the jobs in these sectors." [44]

Opponents of comparable worth warn that governments, too, will have additional problems: Higher wages for women will force public officials either to increase spending or cut services in order to be able to pay. Taxes will then have to be raised if the first option is chosen while public sector workers will be laid off if government opts for the latter. Either way, the public loses.

Germanis argues that comparable worth will also have adverse effects on unions by preventing them from winning the best possible terms for their members—the reason being that wages would no longer be a product of collective bargaining. "Unions [will] be reduced to toothless watchdogs, ensuring that management paid the wage rates determined by the board of evaluation." [45]

He also argues that economic growth will slow down as a result of worker apathy. "Wages determined by wage boards [will] mean an end to pay increases reflecting productivity increases. As such, workers [will] have less incentive to develop their skills if they [feel] that a point system [will] not reward them sufficiently." [46]

Finally, it is argued that comparable worth will accelerate inflation, hurting the economy through both its domestic and international effects. One estimate of the total cost is $320 billion.[47]

There is as much disagreement over the economic consequences of comparable worth measures as there is over their need. Listening to the opponents of comparable worth, one would get the impression that if comparable worth were to be instituted, the U.S. economy would be thrown mercilessly out of "equilibrium," resulting in unemployment, inflation, and numerous bottlenecks in production. Does the American public need to fear comparable worth as these arguments suggest?

Doubtless, there will be some "losers" if comparable worth takes its rightful place in the U.S. economic system,[48] but it is doubtful if the economy will lose more than it will gain by paying women what they are worth. However, since women are not paid the value of their marginal product, as opponents of comparable worth erroneously assume, arguments like those above should not receive much weight.

First of all, it will be admitted that raising women's wages will have some substitution effects. Of this there can be no doubt. The question is, however, is this so bad? Even granting the validity of neoclassical analysis, paying a factor of production less than the value of its marginal product implies that resources are being used inefficiently. Thus, to the extent that comparable worth will correct the misallocation of resources, we must conclude that this is a gain for the economy.

Secondly, eliminating discrimination also would increase the firm's costs. Profits might fall, some firms might struggle, and consumers might pay higher prices. However, if the firm extracted monopsony profits because of its ability to discriminate against women, or operated under imperfectly competitive conditions, it could increase wages without raising prices. Even if there were "losers," is it fair to make women subsidize firms so that profits can remain high, marginal firms can survive, and consumers can benefit from lower prices?

Third, unemployment among women might rise, but it is highly unlikely where discrimination exists (because the wages of women were less than comparable pay for men) that paying women what they are worth would lead either to the displacement of women or to the substitution of men for women.

Fourth, as noted, increasing the pay for women's jobs doubtedly will entice more men to enter these occupations. We view this as a positive outcome—the net effects will be to increase the pay and options for women and the options—if not the pay—for men.

Lastly, the estimated cost to the economy of $320 billion is just that—estimated. If it is true that $320 billion is being withheld from women's paychecks as a result of discrimination, then the extent of discrimination should be enough to convince all that the problem is important enough not to be brushed aside.

SUMMARY AND CONCLUSIONS

The arguments for and against comparable worth can be summarized as follows:

(1) The wage differentials between men and women are not based on discrimination, but merely reflect the forces of demand and supply.

The problem with this argument is that it assumes a model of the labor market that is very different from the way wages actually are determined. The forces of demand and supply are important, but they function very imperfectly, leaving much room for discretion, i.e., discrimination.

Few would argue that discrimination is the only reason for the pay gap, but few objective analysts could argue that there is no discrimination against women in the labor market. Numerous efforts to account for the pay gap by a variety of techniques usually have a sizable residual that cannot be accounted for by so-called human capital factors.

However, several points should be made about these general, economywide studies. The first is that regression equations cannot prove discrimination or the absence of it—they merely constitute one piece of evidence to be used in arguments over whether or not discrimination exists. Other evidence ordinarily is required to make the case. Secondly, these arguments have little to do with comparable worth, which refers to the pay scales attached to jobs in a particular organization, not to the wages paid to men and women in the economy or a given external labor market. Of course, there should be some relationship between job requirements and human capital attributes, but people and jobs are not matched perfectly, and many factors affect earnings besides the wage rates attached to the job.

Comparable worth relates to specific jobs in particular enterprises. The basic question to be answered in determining discrimination in wage rates for jobs is: Do the jobs where men are concentrated have higher rates of pay attached to them than the jobs where women are concentrated in terms of the value of those jobs to the employer, on the basis of a standard job evaluation procedure, or the employer's own evaluation system—whatever that is?

Of course, job evaluation techniques are not "precise." They are inherently judgmental. But so are all compensation systems. There are few, if any, perfect markets for labor, or even markets like stock and commodity markets that approximate auctions. As noted, this is particularly true of internal labor markets where jobs are enterprise-specific and where custom, equity, and discretion play a major role in compensation systems as well as in assigning people to jobs. Job evaluation techniques have become well-established mechanisms for bringing some order and objectivity to internal labor markets. It is surprising that labor relations professionals who have dealt with job evaluation systems for years would argue against them in comparable worth cases. It was especially disingenuous for the State of Washington to argue against its own job evaluation system, which suggested discrimination in pay based on points assigned to jobs.

Again, however, these job evaluation techniques leave latitude for discretion. We are persuaded, though, that most job evaluation techniques that have been used to show a pay gap between predominantly male and female jobs probably understate the margin for discrimination because they use factors that are more likely to predominate in men's jobs or that are more common among men than women.

Indeed, the sex bias in job evaluation techniques is a proper concern for antidiscrimination agencies. If it is assumed, as we do, that there is discrimination in external labor markets, then importing the bias into the internal labor market through wage surveys is no defense against discrimination. This is particularly true for governments, where most of the comparable worth cases are likely to originate. It can be argued that the market is more important to a profit-maximizing private firm where the demand for labor is a derived demand, but what does the government's labor demand schedule look like? What is the marginal product of a government employee?

Governments typically assign wage rates to jobs on the basis of wage surveys that reflect structures in the external (mainly private) market. The evidence suggests that these markets are more discriminatory than public markets, where political power can offset some of the effects of market discrimination (see tables 6 and 7 from Joel Popkin & Co., based on census data for 16,000 workers using multiple regression analysis based on 68 variables that explain almost 60 percent of the variation in wages; 50 of the variables are significant at the 5 percent level). [Deleted.]

(2) It is sometimes argued that comparable worth is like attempting to return to the obsolete medieval concept of "just price." The trouble with this argument is that "just price" or equity still plays an important role in wage determination in internal labor markets, especially in government employment. Governments typically make surveys, but do not translate the results into wage changes, arguing that such survey results are "too high" or in some cases "too low." Similarly, most organizations preserve hierarchies of wage payments based on status considerations—as when it is determined that Federal employees should not be paid more than Cabinet officers or Members of Congress; that State employees should not be paid more than their supervisors or Governors; or that wages in one occupation should retain established relationships to other occupations or there will be morale problems; or that no wages should be cut, regardless of survey results. These are perfectly valid considerations for wage and salary administration, but they are not the automatic consequences of the forces of demand and supply.

Unfortunately, these traditional job hierarchies also contain the consequences of traditional attitudes about "men's" jobs and "women's" jobs. In most cases, discrimination was blatant enough before the Equal Pay and Civil Rights Acts that direct relationship probably can be established between the internal wage structure and specific overt acts of discrimination that established those structures. Intentional discrimination can be established where employers perpetuate internal structures they know to have had discriminatory origins, as was done in the Washington State case.

(3) This background makes it possible to deal more quickly with typical arguments against comparable worth (see Hildebrand, Germanis, and Seligman for examples):

(a) The wage gap is due to things other than discrimination. We agree, but most studies leave a residual unexplained by "other things."

(b) Comparable worth would require the government to force employers to pay equal wages for unequal work. A variant of this argument is that comparable worth would lead to government wage fixing. The government would not force employers to do anything except not to discriminate in whatever compensation system the organizations uses. The government would not fix wages, though courts might order specific wages where discrimination has been proved.

(c) Acceptance of the comparable worth principle would be very disruptive and expensive. Response: who knows? It would depend on the evidence in each case. Some critics assume comparable worth means the elimination of wage differentials between men and women: this is absurd—not many argue that all of the differential is based on discrimination.

As noted, however, the evidence of discrimination in compensation must be judged in each case. If much discrimination in pay can be demonstrated to the satisfaction of courts or administrative agencies, there could be some disruption, but that is the price for correcting serious problems of discrimination. If the critics of comparable worth are correct and discrimination cannot be demonstrated, there will not be much disruption.

We have noted, however, that the theoretical and general arguments used by most of the critics prove nothing. If you assume perfectly competitive labor markets and equilibrium conditions, then any intervention would be disruptive by definition. If on the other hand, you assume markets to be imperfect and discrimination to be a reality, interventions that might distort a perfect market will improve an imperfect one by reducing discrimination that should not exist.

It also should be noted that most critics of comparable worth assume discrimination to be mainly a matter of specific overt acts of discrimination and ignore the institutional patterns, which they assume not to be a concern of public policy. This assumption is in keeping with the highly individualistic assumptions underlying neoclassical economics. It is this assumption that makes it possible for critics to dismiss occupational segregation on the grounds that "women chose those conditions for rational reasons," even though most of the so-called "rational" reasons are not supported by careful analysis of the data. Discrimination is at least as much a social and group as an individual phenomenon. Social action, therefore, will be required to overcome institutional discrimination.

In conclusion, therefore, whether or not there is discrimination in pay must be determined on the basis of the facts in each case. A remedy for pay discrimination does not require that wages be equalized for men and women, only that the jobs be valued on a nondiscriminatory basis. This does not lead to central planning or government wage fixing; the government does not have to fix wages to eliminate discrimination. It is true that comparable worth is based on some elements of "just price" or equity, but in the absence of auctions for labor, a sizable equity element is inevitable in labor markets. Similarly, job evaluation is not precise—it is inherently judgmental, but it is an established technique, and comparable worth cases would involve no more judgment than ordinarily is involved in wage and salary administration.

[3] Between 1970 and 1979, the proportion of women in the labor force who completed less than 4 years of high school declined from 30.6 percent to 27.7 percent. The analogous figures for men were 37.3 percent and 26.4 percent.

[6] Of further significance is the fact that only 1 percent of women graduates of Harvard Law School were partners in law firms, in contrast to 25 percent of men graduates.

[7] These occupations tend to be those with lower pay and little or no opportunity for advancement. Also note that the percentage of women making up an occupation can increase while the percentage of all women who are in that occupation (as opposed to other occupations) does not have to change.

[8] Hartmann and Reskin, 1983, 1. Even within integrated occupations, women are segregated into separate jobs, noticeable at the lower end of the wage spectrum. In addition, most women in "men's occupations" are found in the lower profit, lower wage firms.

[9] Strangely enough, Becker purported to explain discrimination and yet assumed that it was exogenous.

[13] It is believed that because women are absent from work more than men (they are the parent more likely to stay at home when the kids are sick, etc.), they are denied promotional opportunities. Some even postulate that women refuse positions with more responsibility and thus higher wages, because they do not want to be tied to the job if something "comes up" at home. Being in menial positions, they supposedly can get time off more easily and without much hassle.

[14] Employers apparently structure jobs for women to accommodate this pattern and provide less opportunity for on-the-job training leading to higher paying jobs. However, the experience factor is becoming more favorable to women because the main reason for their increased labor force participation rates (LFPR) is that experienced women are reentering or never leaving the work force (Barrett, 1980).

[15] They also found that the coefficients on the work continuity and labor force attachment variables were small and insignificant. Note that these findings, like those of England, are in contrast to what Polachek and others would have us believe.

[16] Differences in educational attainment for the four subgroups are as follows: white male, 12.85 years; white female, 12.73 years; black female, 11.75 years; and black male, 10.96 years.

[18] The first three of these phenomena have been recognized as discrimination and made illegal by Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 and the Equal Pay Act of 1963 (although there is evidence that these forms of discrimination still exist). The last, a variation of the first three, is still widely rejected as being a form of discrimination, and until quite recently employers who practiced it were immune from prosecution.

S. 6—VETERANS' ADMINISTRATION HEALTH-CARE AMENDMENTS OF 1985

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, as the ranking minority member of the Committee on Veterans' Administration Health-Care Amendments of 1985, introduced on January 3. This bill has as its basic purpose the continued maintenance and improvement of the VA's ability to meet the needs of our Nation's veterans and their dependents.

As a preliminary matter, I want to note that an overriding concern for me during this Congress will be seeking out ways in which to reduce the enormous, burgeoning Federal deficit. Hence, I will be extremely reluctant to advocate any new spending by the Federal Government. Although I believe that our national obligation to those who answered the country's call to arms in its hours of need is an obligation of the highest order, I do not view all efforts relating to veterans as sacrosanct. Nor would it be realistic to expect that the VA can remain unaffected as we move ahead with Governmentwide efforts to reduce the deficit. This perspective is reflected in S. 6—which seeks to find ways to improve VA programs without incurring any significant new costs.

SUMMARY OF PROVISIONS

Mr. President, the nine substantive provisions in S. 6 would:

First, expand the definition of the Vietnam era for the purposes of title 38, United States Code, so as to include service in Vietnam at any time during the period beginning on February 21, 1961, and ending on August 4, 1964, the day before the starting date of the Vietnam era in current law.

Second, preclude the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs from implementing any systematic reduction of VA employee pay grades without first submitting to the Veterans' Affairs Committees a plan and justification for the proposed reduction, including a determination that, in the personnel area involved, the VA, in comparison to non-VA employers, has a disproportionate number of employees at the salary levels involved; and direct the Comptroller General to evaluate comment on any such VA plan, justification, and determination.

Third, extend for 2½ years, until the end of fiscal year 1989, which is 12 months after the centers for disease control plans to submit the results of the congressionally mandated epidemiological study, the period during which certain veterans—those exposed to dioxin or other toxic substances in Vietnam or to ionizing radiation from nuclear detonations—would be eligible to receive priority VA health-care services for disabilities not determined to be unrelated to such exposure.

Fourth, extend by 3 years, until the end of fiscal year 1988, the VA's current authority to place veterans with alcohol or drug abuse dependencies or disabilities in non-VA halfway houses and other community-based programs for treatment and rehabilitation, and require annual reports in 1986, 1987, and 1988 on the experience under this authority.

Fifth, provide that any remuneration received by VA patients in a rehabilitation therapy program under section 618 of title 38 would not be counted as income for the purpose of VA pension programs.

Sixth, provide that section 3305 of title 38, relating to the confidentiality of certain VA medical quality-assurance records, does not authorize or require the withholding by the VA of disclosure of statistical information regarding VA health-care programs, including aggregate morbidity and mortality rates associated with specific activities at individual VA health-care facilities.

Seventh, provide that procedures set forth in section 4110 of title 38, relating to disciplinary proceedings involving physicians and certain other VA health-care personnel employed under the special title 38 personnel system would apply in cases involving proposed reductions or revocations in the clinical privileges of such personnel.

Eighth, require the VA, in order to evaluate various actions that would enable veterans to receive needed health care in noninstitutional settings, to conduct a 48-month pilot demonstration program through which certain veterans would be helped to avoid institutional care through the provision of appropriate health and health-related services from the VA and from appropriate public private agencies.

Ninth, direct the Administrator and the Secretaries of Defense and of Health and Human Services to submit to the Congress a joint report on the question of U.S. Government responsibility for disabilities that possibly result from service in Vietnam—such as exposure to agent orange or to particularly traumatic events—to individuals who were present there during the Vietnam era as employees of voluntary organizations that provided significant assistance to U.S. forces, such as the American Red Cross and the USO.

DEFINITION OF "VIETNAM ERA"

Mr. President, section 2 of S. 6 would modify the definition of "Vietnam era" for title 38 purposes to include, in the case of those who served in the Republic of Vietnam, the period beginning on February 28, 1961, the date established in Public Law 89-257 for acceptance of awards from foreign governments for service in Vietnam, and ending on May 7, 1975, the current law ending date for the Vietnam era.

Under this provision, those who served in Vietnam during the period from February 28, 1961, to August 5, 1964, the current starting date from the Vietnam era, would be made eligible for certain benefits that are available only to veterans of specified wartime service. These benefits would include nonservice-connected pension for those who also satisfy the disability or age criteria and the income and net-worth limitations of that program; readjustment counseling; certain burial benefits; loan guaranty benefits in certain cases; certain education, on-job training, and apprenticeship benefits for educationally disadvantaged, unskilled, or unemployed veterans; and certain employment assistance, including eligibility for veterans' readjustment appointments—VRA's.

As noted above, the starting date for the Vietnam era in current law is August 5, 1964. This date coincides with the Gulf of Tonkin incident, unquestionably a watershed event in the history of U.S. involvement in Vietnam, and one which precipitated the resolution adopted by the Congress following that incident. However, there were many U.S. troops in the Republic of Vietnam prior to August 1964, and our service personnel faced combat conditions in that country well before that time.

Mr. President, establishing a starting date for a period of war such as the Vietnam conflict where there was no one single action beginning the conflict, is admittedly an arbitrary undertaking. However, telling veterans who actually served in Vietnam prior to August 5, 1964, as we do now, that they are not Vietnam-era veterans does not seem appropriate or defensible to me. After reviewing various alternative dates, I proposed—and the Veterans' Affairs Committee and the Senate agreed last year, in taking favorable action on an identical provision in the last Congress—the date of February 28, 1961, as an appropriate starting point.

As I noted earlier, this is the date, set forth in Public Law 89-258, after which U.S. service personnel could accept awards from the Government of the Republic of Vietnam in connection with service in Vietnam. In the reports on the legislation, H.R. 3405 in the 89th Congress, that was enacted as this public law, the Committees on Armed Services in the House of Representatives and the Senate indicated that this date was selected because that was the approximate date on which American military advisers began to accompany "their Vietnamese counterparts on military operations"—House Report No. 89-239, page 2; Senate Report No. 89-800, page 2. That same date is used in other statutory contexts, including section 112 of the Internal Revenue Code, title 26, United States Code, relating to the treatment of income for tax purposes for members of Armed Forces serving in Vietnam in certain circumstances, and in section 329(a) of the Immigration and Nationality Act [INA] which appears at section 1440 of title 8, United States Code, relating to expedited naturalization based on wartime service. In addition, as noted in a letter from a Department of Defense representative to the chairman of the House Committee on the Judiciary in connection with that committee's consideration in 1966 of the INA provision as noted above, February 28, 1961, is the date selected by the Department of the Army for the award of the Combat Infantryman's Badge and the Combat Medic Badge.

As was noted in the Veterans' Affairs Committee report accompanying the legislation, S. 2514, which contained this provision in the last Congress—Senate Report No. 98-467, page 54—the committee believes that bringing the starting date of the Vietnam era for title 38 purposes into conformity with the above provisions for those who actually served in Vietnam would be an appropriate action that would make access to veterans benefits on the basis of service in Vietnam during wartime more consistent with other laws and regulations relating to such service.

I agree with this view completely and regret that our distinguished colleagues in the House were unwilling to accept the Senate-passed change. According to the Congressional Budget Office in its cost estimate on this provision during the last Congress, because there would be a "relatively low number of new (veterans made eligible for VA benefits)" there are no significant costs associated with this provision, and I have included it in this bill in order to ask our House colleagues, as well as the Senate, to give it renewed consideration.

VETERANS' ADMINISTRATION GRADE REDUCTION

Mr. President, section 3 of S. 6 is designed to address what I and many others believe is a very wrong-headed effort by the Office of Management and Budget to apply to the Veterans' Administration the Government-wide effort to reduce the number of employees in grades GS-11 through GS-15. In order that my colleagues and others with an interest in this matter might have a better understanding of this issue, I ask unanimous consent that there be printed in the RECORD at this point an exchange of letters I had with OMB Director Stockman—my August 23, 1984, letter to Mr. Stockman and his September 19, 1984, response which enclosed a copy of an August 9, 1984, letter from him to Congressman SONNY MONTGOMERY, chairman of the House Veterans' Affairs Committee—as well as a subsequent exchange of letters between Congressman MONTGOMERY and Mr. Stockman—Congressman MONTGOMERY's October 16, 1984, letter, and Director Stockman's November 13, 1984, reply.

There being no objection, the letters were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

U.S. SENATE,
COMMITTEE ON VETERANS' AFFAIRS,
Washington, DC, August 23, 1984.

Hon. DAVID A. STOCKMAN,
Director of Management and Budget, Executive Office Building, Washington, DC.

DEAR DAVID: House Veterans' Affairs Committee Chairman Sonny Montgomery shared with me a copy of his July 23, 1984, letter to you regarding the issue of proposed reductions in the number of personnel in grades GS 11 through 15 in the Veterans' Administraiton's Department of Medicine and Surgery (DM&S). I agree strongly with Chairman Montgomery's views and recommendations on this issue and would appreciate receiving a copy of your response to his letter.

In addition, to the extent your response to Chairman Montgomery does not address the following points, I would appreciate receiving your responses to them:

What specific analysis, if any, has been carried out with respect to the issue of whether there is an "excess" of DM&S personnel in grades GS 11 through 15 (and, more specifically, an excess of such personnel providing direct patient-care services or services ancillary to such services)?

What opportunity has been or will be provided to VA management officials to respond to any directed grade reduction within DM&S?

Thank you for your attention to this letter.

With warm regards.

Cordially,

ALAN CRANSTON,
Ranking Minority Member.

EXECUTIVE OFFICE
OF THE PRESIDENT,
OFFICE OF MANAGEMENT AND BUDGET,
Washington, DC, September 19, 1984.

Hon. ALAN CRANSTON,
U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR ALAN: This is in response to your letter of August 23, 1984, regarding the participation of the Veterans Administration (VA) in the Administration's efforts to reduce the number of government employees in grades GS-11 through 15. As you requested, we are enclosing a copy of our response to Chairman Montgomery on this issue.

This initiative arises from the Grace Commission's analysis, drawing upon data from the Office of Personnel Management (OPM), that the private sector has approximatley 26 percent of white collar positions in the equivalent of the government's GS-11 to 15 range, while the government has approximately 39 percent, or a 50 percent greater distribution. Since the VA employs, primarily through the Department of Medicine and Surgery, 20 percent of the civilian workforce, we believe their employment characteristics were represented in the OPM data.

As we pointed out in the enclosed letter to Chairman Montgomery, however, all agencies will have the opportunity to seek any needed adjustment this fall. Further, agencies have been given maximum flexibility in how to meet their targets, which have been set well below normal attrition rates to avoid any adverse effect on agency employees and mission accomplishment.

Thank you for providing us your views on this important initiative.

Sincerely,

DAVID A. STOCKMAN,
Director.

AUGUST 9, 1984.

Hon. G.V. MONTGOMERY,
Chairman, Committee on Veterans' Affairs, U.S. House of Representatives, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: Thank you for your letter of July 23, 1984, expressing your views on the participation of the Veterans Administration in the Administration's effort to reduce the number of government employees in grades GS-11 through 15.

First, let me assure you that I share your concern with recruitment and retention by VA of high quality health care personnel. The priority given by the Administration to veterans health care is evident in the nearly 40 percent increase in budget authority and the addition of almost 9,000 employees for VA medical care since 1981. Given these increases, two factors lead to the conclusion that the Administration should maintain, in the VA medical care area, the effort to influence the average grade of mid-level government workers:

The VA is free to direct the application of grade level reductions among its activities so that it can maintain its own priorities within overall guidelines, and

All agencies—including the VA—will have an opportunity to seek needed adjustments this fall, as 1985 supplemental requests for pay are being formulated.

With these factors in mind, I believe that the Administration can safely continue this effort. It is one of the means toward our overall objective; to assist the VA to continue to identify the most efficient means for providing excellent medical care for our veterans in need of care.

Sincerely,

DAVID A. STOCKMAN,
Director.

U.S. HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
COMMITTEE ON VETERANS' AFFAIRS,
Washington, DC, October 16, 1984.

Mr. DAVID STOCKMAN,
Director, Office of Management and Budget, Executive Office of the President, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. STOCKMAN: I am increasingly concerned by the attitude of the Office of Personnel Management and the Office of Management and Budget with regard to the Grace Commission's initiative which now goes under the rubric "Improved Position Management of GS/GM 11-15 Positions." On July 23, I wrote to you expressing my concern about the application of this initiative to health care personnel employed in the Veterans Administration under the authority of title 38, United States Code. I also wrote to Dr. Devine expressing similar concern. Your reply seemed to indicate that, as applied to the Veterans Administration, this initiative is a mere pretext to cutting the VA's budget for personnel compensation. More recently, I received information from the Office of Personnel Management which would indicate to me that no reduction of any sort should be applied to the Veterans Administration in any of its departments as a result of this initiative.

The justification for reductions in grades 11-15 is set forth in the background section of FPM Bulletin 312-8, which was enclosed with the reply I received from Dr. Devine. The first factor OPM cites is that 39 percent of the General Schedule full time workforce is classified in the GS 11-15 grade band. However, at the Veterans Administration this proportion is only 17.5 percent, a lower percentage than the 1959 figure for the entire government. Certainly, few large institutions, government or private, can match this figure.

The second factor cited is the average grade of the workforce. The Governmentwide average grade is noted to be 8.3, but in the VA it is only 6.58, almost two whole grades lower! Most persons will agree that some increase in average grade over the past 30 years is justifiable in light of the increasing complexity of Government functions. Therefore, the VA's average grade would seem to warrant praise as an example of how to hold the line against grade creep.

The third factor is the salaries earned in the private sector compared to those earned by government employees. I find it confusing at best when the Advisory Committee on Federal Pay reports that most Federal employees are underpaid when compared with their counterparts in the private sector, and yet the Grace Commission presents different evidence. I believe that recent remarks made about the accuracy of both reports add further confusion to this issue, so that it is not possible for anyone to say with certainty that Government employees are or are not overpaid.

Dave, there may be overgraded employees in the VA, and I tend to believe that there are too many people in grades 11-15 at the VA's Central Office, particularly in the Department of Medicine and Surgery. However, the figures cited above show that the VA compares very favorably with other Government agencies on these measures. Even if we included title 38 employees in the comparison, which the Grace Commission did not contemplate, the numbers are still favorable to the VA. This is true despite the fact that the direct provision of health care requires the VA to hire thousands of highly skilled and relatively highly paid health care professionals.

Considering all of this evidence, I would like to know whether OMB and OPM would give further thought to applying this initiative in a selective manner to those agencies where it is truly needed, and leaving agencies such as the Veterans Administration alone.

Sincerely,

G.V. (SONNY) MONTGOMERY,
Chairman.

EXECUTIVE OFFICE
OF THE PRESIDENT,
OFFICE OF MANAGEMENT AND BUDGET,
Washington, D.C. November 13, 1984.

Hon. G. V. MONTGOMERY
Chairman, Committee on Veterans' Affairs, U.S. House of Representatives, Washington, D.C.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: Thank you for your letter of October 16, 1984, in which you express increasing concern over the application to the Veterans Administration of the Administration's effort to reduce the number of Government workers in grades GS-11 through 15. In your letter, you cite three factors as support for exempting the VA from the grade reduction effort. They are:

The percentage of VA employees in grades GS-11 through 15 is lower than the average for the Government as a whole;

The VA's average grade is lower than the Governmentwide average; and

The notion that it is impossible to say with certainty whether Government employees, as a group, are overpaid.

As you know, the first two factors result from the large number of hospital and clerical workers below GS-11 who are employed in operating the VA's hospital and benefits payment systems. Over half of VA's general schedule employees are in grades 3, 4, and 5. This obscures the fact that VA employs over 44,000 people in grades 11 through 15 (and their equivalents under Title 38), more people than the entire employment rolls of nine of the other fifteen large Federal departments and agencies.

Regarding your third factor, I believe it useful to point out that over the last four years, VA personnel compensation costs for GS and Title 38 staff have grown at a rate 25 percent faster than the general schedule pay scales. Pay for these employees (now totaling $3.7 billion) is almost 30 percent higher than it was in 1980, while the general schedule rates have increased by less than 24 percent. This matter must certainly be a cause for concern on the part of both the Executive and Legislative Branches.

You have asked in your letter whether—given the factors you cite—OMB and OPM will give further thought to exempting the VA from the GS-11 through 15 grade reduction initiative. As I noted in response to your letter of July 23, 1984, all agencies including the VA, will have an opportunity to seek needed adjustments later this fall.

I appreciate your concern that the VA be treated fairly. Please be assured that careful consideration will be given to all such requests.

Sincerely,

DAVID A. STOCKMAN,
Director.

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, as these various letters demonstrate, the VA is being required to make reductions in the number of agency employees in grades GS-11 through GS-15 on the basis of a conclusion by private-sector volunteers on the so-called Grace Commission that, on a Governmentwide basis, there are a disproportionate number of employees in those grades and salary levels as compared to the ratio of employees at these salary levels in the private sector. Regardless of whether or not this conclusion is valid on a Governmentwide basis, these letters also demonstrate that the ratio of upper to lower GS-level employees in the VA is significantly lower than the Governmentwide ratio and that that is true both in the Department of Medicine and Surgery and the Department of Veterans' Benefits.

Mr. President, without analyzing the accuracy or meaning of the Governmentwide ratio—except to note that those findings in that regard and the meaning of those findings are very controversial—it seems clear that, in light of the VA ratio, the VA should not be required to take steps to redress an imbalance that does not exist within that agency. To apply a remedy to the VA that is defended as necessary to correct a problem that the agency is not in any way responsible for, makes no sense.

The only possible reason for requiring the VA to take such an action would be to reduce funding for the agency work force in an arbitrary manner. I reject such an action and believe most of my colleagues do as well, although that is, I believe, the purpose of the Office of Management and Budget in insisting that VA appropriations for health-care programs be reduced by amounts that reflect application of the grade-level reduction. In this regard, I note that OMB—according to reports I have received regarding pertinent decisions that will be reflected in the fiscal year 1986 budget submissions—has already directed such a reduction with respect to fiscal year 1985. This would apparently be achieved through offset against any supplemental request for the costs of the January 1985 cost-of-living pay increase.

Revealing clearly its motivation for this action, OMB, despite having exempted from the mandatory reduction physicians, nurses, and other VA health-care professionals employed under the DM&S title 38 health-care personnel system, has required the VA to absorb the cost savings that would be achieved if the grade reduction were applied to the title 38 personnel. Thus, there can be no doubt that OMB has a singular purpose—reducing the appropriations for DM&S—and has no great concern that its motive is so thinly disguised.

Section 3 of S. 6 is designed to prevent an arbitrary application of this Governmentwide grade reduction to the VA by prohibiting the implementation of a systematic grade-reduction effort unless and until the Administrator has first submitted at least 90 days in advance of implementation—not counting any day during which either House is not in session—a report thereon to the Committees on Veterans' Affairs. This report would be required to contain a plan for the grade reduction and, most importantly, a justification for the reduction, including the Administrator's determination, together with supporting data, that, in the personnel area concerned, the VA is overgraded in comparison to non-VA entities.

As a further check on this process, the Comptroller General would be required to submit to the two committees a report on the Administrator's compliance with these requirements and on the accuracy of the Administrator's determination and supporting data.

Mr. President, I believe this proposed process will safeguard the VA from having to implement arbitrary personnel reductions—reductions that have no justification as to VA activities—while leaving open to the agency and the Administration the opportunity to make reductions in those areas as to which it can be demonstrated that the VA is indeed overgraded. This provision, coupled with section 5010(a)(4) of title 38, United States Code, and specific direction in connection with future appropriation action relating to the funding to support VA personnel levels should prevent in fiscal year 1986 the arbitrary appropriations reduction that OMB has imposed on DM&S this fiscal year, particularly if, as seems reasonably likely, there is no Federal employee cost-of-living pay raise in 1986.

I, along with many of colleagues in both Houses and from both parties, have worked hard over the years to ensure that the VA has sufficient, qualified staff to carry out the agency's missions. This has been particularly true in the Department of Medicine and Surgery, the Department for which the great majority of VA employees work, over 199,000 of the VA's over 223,000 full-time equivalent employees. The VA is frequently at a disadvantage competing in the relevant health-care-personnel marketplace, and the numbers of health-care workers in grades 11 through 15 and their equivalent rates under title 38 reflect the entry-level salaries necessary to meet this competition, not grade-creep of supervisory employees. It is vital to the continued ability of the VA to provide quality health care that DM&S not be forced to make unwarranted personnel changes that could seriously disrupt its ability to attract and retain needed personnel, and this provision should help to achieve that result.

EXTENSION OF HEALTH-CARE ELIGIBILITY BASED ON EXPOSURE TO DIOXIN OR OTHER TOXIC SUBSTANCES IN VIETNAM OR TO NUCLEAR RADIATION

Mr. President, section 4 of S. 6 would extend for several more years, until September 30, 1989, the provision in current law which provides certain veterans—those exposed to dioxin or other toxic substances used in herbicides or defoliants in Vietnam or to ionizing radiation from nuclear detonations—with eligibility for priority health care from the VA for the treatment of disabilities which cannot be attributed to a cause other than the exposure in question. Under current law, this authority is scheduled to terminate 1 year after the Administrator submits the first report on the epidemiological study of Vietnam veterans that was mandated by Public Law 96-151. That first report is to be submitted 24 months after the protocol for the study is approved which was on February 14, 1984. Thus, the health-care eligibility is scheduled to expire on February 14, 1987.

Mr. President, I have been deeply involved, first as chairman of the Veterans' Affairs Committee and, since 1981, as the committee's ranking minority member, in efforts to address the concerns of veterans, veterans' families, and many others about the potential health effects of veterans' exposure to dioxin and ionizing radiation. Both groups' concerns have generally fallen into three broad categories—a vital interest in receiving information about their exposure and the possible health effects of that exposure, a desire to receive health care for the treatment of conditions that may be related to their exposure, and compensation for diseases or disabilities resulting from their exposure.

As to each concern, I have developed legislative solutions, gotten them enacted, and overseen the implementation of the legislation. I am generally satisfied that, although much follow-up and oversight activity remains to be done with reference to these matters, the Congress has enacted the necessary legislation and that no additional legislation, other than relatively minor modification such as is represented by this provision in S. 6, is needed at this time. When we obtain further, reliable information regarding long-term health effects, Congress will have to reassess the adequacy of the existing legislative structure.

With specific reference to the issue of health care for disabilities that may be related to exposure to these hazards, I am proud to have authored in the Senate Public Law 97-72 which was enacted in 1981 to give both groups of veterans interim, special priority and eligibility for VA health care. As I noted during final Senate consideration of that legislation, I view the enactment of this health-care eligibility as providing important, temporary relief while the Government continues to gather information necessary to make final decision about establishing service-connected status for various disabilities.

I am proposing to extend this authority because the major studies designed to yield the necessary information—the epidemiological study of Vietnam veterans mandated by Public Law 96-151 and expanded by Public Law 97-72 which is being carried out by the Centers for Disease Control [CDC] and the scientific study of the health status of veterans exposed to radiation mandated by Public Law 98-160—will not be sufficiently advanced by 1987 to permit final decisions to be made.

Although picking any cut-off date for this authority—that is, a date by which the Congress should be able to address the question of access to health care on a more permanent basis—cannot be a very precise process, I am proposing September 30, 1989, on the basis of CDC's plans to report on the agent orange study in September 1988. If that target date is met, the Congress should then have sufficient time to evaluate the results of that study and other pertinent information and decide as to appropriate further action with regard to dioxon exposure prior to the 1989 expiration date.

In this regard, so that my colleagues and others might be brought up to date on these studies, I ask unanimous consent that the most recent report from the Office of Technology Assessment—the agency which has a statutory responsibility for monitoring these studies—on the status of the studies, as set forth in a December 12, 1984, letter to me from OTA Director John Gibbons, be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES,
OFFICE OF TECHNOLOGY ASSESSMENT,
Washington, DC, December 12, 1984.

Hon. ALAN CRANSTON,
Ranking Minority Member, Committee on Veterans' Affairs, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR ALAN: Public Law 98-160 mandates that I report to the appropriate committees about progress in studies to determine possible long-term health effects among veterans exposed to nuclear radiation. This letter is my second report. As I did in the first report (May 24, 1984), I will also use this letter to inform you of OTA's activities related to Agent Orange as mandated by Public Laws 96-151 and 97-72.

ATOMIC VETERANS

In May, I reported that I was expecting to consult with the Administrator of Veterans Affairs about the feasibility of a Veterans Administration (VA) plan for the study of veterans exposed to radiation from weapons testing. At that time, I had been informed that the newly formed Committee on Interagency Radiation Research and Policy Coordination, which is chaired by the Office of Science and Technology Policy, was reviewing the study plan. My understanding was that the study plan and the committee's review and comments would be returned to the VA in late June or early July.

Unfortunately, events have not followed that schedule. The plan and the committee's review did not reach the VA until mid-November. OTA staff, in conversations with VA staff, have been told that the Department of Medicine and Surgery at VA is now examining the study plan and the review preparatory to making a recommendation to the Administrator. I expect and hope that the Administrator will be contacting me in the next two or three weeks about OTA's consulting with him.

As you know, veterans who claim damage from radiation exposure are prevented from suing the Federal government by the Feres Doctrine, a 1950 Supreme Court decision, that prohibits suits against the government for injuries related to military service. Furthermore, a recently enacted law prevents veterans from suing government contractors for damages from radiation. I believe that those two restrictions eliminate any opportunity for a veteran who believes he was harmed by radiation to obtain relief through the courts. If my interpretation is correct, veterans can only turn to the VA for compensation, and, according to news reports, few veterans have been compensated. While the decisions not to compensate may be justified on scientific grounds, there still remains a perception on the part of some people that veterans may have been harmed by the radiation exposure. The proposed VA study takes on added importance because, rightly or wrongly, it can be viewed as the last chance for veterans to obtain evidence to support their claims of injury.

I am still unable to predict how much time and effort OTA will have to invest in its review of the VA study plan to enable me to consult with the Administrator. However, if OTA's review will take substantially longer than 30 days after we receive the plan, I will inform the committees.

Agent Orange

OTA's mandate to monitor the conduct of epidemiologic studies of Vietnam veterans has led to a broad range of activities including review and comment on other Agent Orange and Vietnam experience studies. Virtually all the studies are being conducted directly by or on contract to the VA or Centers for Disease Control (CDC) and employ similar methods for estimating exposures and measuring outcomes. Those common elements make the congressional requests for OTA's views logical extensions of the OTA mandate. In this letter, I will first provide an update on developments in the Congressionally mandated CDC studies and then discuss two OTA activities not directly covered by the mandate.

The studies have moved steadily ahead since May. One important personnel change has taken place. Dr. Peter Layde, who has been working on the studies since CDC began them, has assumed responsibility as Director for Agent Orange Projects. Dr. J. David Erickson, who began as project director, requested that he be allowed to return to his work in the epidemiology of birth defects, his specialty.

We have received two quarterly reports from CDC, one in July, the second in October. You will recall that CDC's studies of the health of Vietnam veterans include three components: the Agent Orange study, the Vietnam Experience study, and a study of Selected Cancers that have been associated with exposure to dioxin. The reports make it clear that the three studies are, in general, on schedule. Several contracts have been awarded and others are in review. The Research Triangle Institute (Research Triangle Park, NC) has been awarded the contract to contact and conduct telephone interviews of the 30,000 participants in the Agent Orange and Vietnam Experience studies. Several bids for the physical examination contract were received, and CDC expects to make an award for the conduct of 10,000 examinations in February 1985.

Six cancer registries (at Emory University, Yale University, University of Miami, University of California at Berkeley, University of Kansas, and Iowa State University) are under contract to locate and interview individuals ("cases") who have the cancers included in the selected cancer study. Individuals who are to be "controls" are to be identified by WESTAT, Inc. (Rockville, MD), and interviewed by personnel from the cancer registries. Proposals for contracts to provide pathological review of the cancers in the study are being reviewed by CDC.

CDC expressed concern that requirements of the Office of Management and Budget (OMB) might eventually cause delays. OMB is requiring that results of pilot studies be submitted to the Agent Orange Working Group (AOWG) for review before proceeding with the full study. This applies to the Agent Orange and Vietnam Experience studies. The Selected Cancers Study was approved unconditionally.

In a third and separate report, CDC described very encouraging results from the Vietnam Experience pilot study. The pilot study was designed to evaluate (1) the success of locating and securing participation of veterans in the study, and (2) the quality of the questionnaire to be used in the telephone interviews. The overall location/participation rate of 83 percent is substantially higher than CDC's goal of 70 percent for the pilot study. The participation rate for those contacted was 97 percent, an extremely high figure for this type of study.

The questionnaire was administered through a computer assisted telephone interview [CATI] system by the Research Triangle Institute, under contract to CDC. The interviewers and the CDC researchers used the experience of interviewing 249 Vietnam-era veterans to make minor adjustments to the questionnaire itself, generally to improve the flow and to increase the understandability of the questions.

The process of reviewing military records and identifying those individuals who meet the study criteria ("qualifying" veterans) for the Vietnam Experience study is ahead of schedule. This work is carried out by cooperative efforts of the U.S. Army and Joint Services Environmental Support Group, the National Personnel Records Center, and several other Federal agencies, in concert with CDC.

CDC has been considering the feasibility of a study of female Vietnam veterans. It considers such a study to be feasible, and has broadly outlined a research protocol. OTA has not as yet formally addressed this issue, but, as part of the mandate to review and approve protocols for the study of Vietnam veterans, will do so when a reviewable protocol becomes available.

Communication between CDC and OTA, which we felt was not as good as it should have been, has improved, and appears to be on firm footing. Dr. Layde has met with OTA staff, and we are now confident that the communications lines will function to benefit both CDC and the Congress. In general, our relationship with CDC has been one of mutual cooperation, and we expect that to continue.

OTA's Review of the CDC Birth Defects Study.—This activity stems not from the Congressional mandate, but from requests from both Houses. A report of the study, "Vietnam Veterans' Risk of Fathering Babies with Birth Defects," was published in the Journal of the American Medical Association, and the full study was published by CDC. OTA received a letter from Senator Cranston (August 15, 1984) asking that we review the study, and subsequent letters from Representative Edgar (August 17, 1984) and from the Chairman and Ranking Minority Members of the House Committee on Veterans' Affairs (Representatives Montgomery and Hammerschmidt) on August 30, 1984 requesting copies of our review. We also received a request from the House Veterans' Affairs Committee Subcommittee on Hospitals and Health Care to testify at a hearing on this subject on October 3, 1984.

OTA's testimony raised serious questions about the validity of the findings concerning Agent Orange. The main conclusions of the study, that there was no detectable increase in major birth defects associated with service in Vietnam, are not affected by OTA's analysis. However, OTA's analysis casts doubt on the CDC findings that two specific birth defects (spina bifida and cleft lip with or without cleft palate) and a third category containing an aggregate of cancers were associated with increasing likelihood of Agent Orange exposure as estimated by an "Agent Orange Exposure Opportunity Index."

OTA's reservations about the utility of the "exposure opportunity index" extend well beyond the birth defects study because several ongoing or planned studies will be using similar indices. The upshot of OTA's testimony is that the methods used to derive the index and the resultant estimates of likelihood of exposure are now under review by the AOWG Science Panel. OTA is participating in that review effort. It is our understanding that the Science Panel and the U.S. Army and Joint Services Environmental Support Group, the unit that processes records and gathers information to be fed into the index, will work toward agreement on a valid index before it is used in any more studies.

OTA Involvement is the VA "Vietnam Experience Twin Study" [VETS].—A study under consideration at the VA is designed to examine the effects of Vietnam service and Agent Orange exposure on identical twins. Representatives Montgomery and Hammerschmidt asked OTA to review the protocol for this study and to make a recommendation about whether the study is "scientifically meritorious" and whether the study plan "presents a sound and efficient method of achieving that purpose" (letter of November 7, 1984). The study has been in planning for about two years and has been something of a hot potato at the VA. The report of a group of consultants recently assembled by the Research and Development division of the VA Department of Medicine and Surgery recommends that the study not be executed. Others at the VA and elsewhere in the Executive Branch are keenly in favor of doing the study. Whether the study ultimately goes ahead or not may well hinge on the OTA review. Our review will be assisted by the standing OTA Agent Orange Advisory Panel supplemented with outside experts who have not already been party to one of the previous reviews.

Currently OTA plans to hold an Agent Orange Advisory Panel meeting to discuss VETS and progress on the Vietnam Experience and Agent Orange studies sometime in February 1985. In my May letter, I predicted that this meeting would be held in late summer of 1984, but we have postponed it until CDC is ready to present results of its pilot studies.

I would appreciate any comments you may have about OTA's activities and plans. If you wish additional information, please call me at 224-3695 or Dr. Michael Gough or Ms. Hellen Gelband at 226-2070.

Sincerely,

JOHN H. GIBBONS.

ALCOHOL AND DRUG TREATMENT AND REHABILITATION

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, section 5 of S. 6 would amend section 620A of title 38, which provides authority pursuant to which the VA may contract with various community facilities to provide care and treatment to veterans suffering from alcohol or drug dependence or abuse disabilities, to change that authority from a pilot program and extend it for 3 years, through the end of fiscal year 1988. This provision is similar to one passed by the Senate last year but which our colleagues in the House were unwilling to accept at that time.

The pilot program authority, which I authored, was enacted in 1979 in Public Law 96-22 and is scheduled to expire on September 30, 1985. Pursuant to section 620A(f) of title 38, the Administrator was required to submit by March 31, 1984, a report on the operations of the pilot program through September 30, 1983.

This VA report on the initial experience under the program, which was finally submitted in early May last year, was generally quite positive about the impact of the program through 1983. However, because of concerns of some members of the committee that more needed to be heard about the program before the authority was made permanent—as I had originally proposed last year in section 5 of S. 2269—the committee last year authorized only a 2-year extension. As I noted earlier, the Senate passed such a measure, but it was not included in the final compromise legislation developed with the House.

On the basis of all of the evidence that I have reviewed—including the VA report as well as reactions from veterans who have been placed in halfway houses and other community-based facilities, VA employees who work with veterans with drug or alcohol abuse dependencies, and individuals associated with various community-based drug and alcohol treatment programs—I remain convinced that the pilot program has been quite successful in enabling significant numbers of veterans to receive appropriate and helpful assistance. I intend to work hard for the adoption of this extension.

PAYMENT FOR THERAPEUTIC AND REHABILITATION ACTIVITIES

Mr. President, under section 618 of title 38, the VA operates, in the Department of Medicine and Surgery, therapeutic and rehabilitation programs under which participants—VA patients, either inpatients, residents in domiciliary facilities, or outpatients, selected for such programs—perform services for which they receive a small payment. These programs are known commonly as incentive therapy—IT—and compensated work therapy—CWT—programs. The IT programs involve patients being assigned duties within the treating VA medical center whereas the CWT programs involve work under VA contracts with private industry. Both programs are designed to promote self-sufficiency in the participating patients.

In 1983, the VA's Inspector General conducted an audit that indicated that many veteran-patients participating in these programs were also in receipt of VA pension and were not reporting as income for pension purposes the payments they received from their participation in IT or CWT programs. In response to this report, the VA's Department of Medicine and Surgery instituted a program of income verification pursuant to which VA medical facilities, as of approximately January 1, 1984, began to inform appropriate regional offices of the Department of Veterans' Benefits of the amounts paid to veteran patient participants in these programs. For many of these veterans who are in receipt of pensions under the VA's non-service-connected disability pension program, this change in how IT/CWT payments are counted has the result of reducing benefits by an amount equal to the amount received by the veteran under incentive therapy. Thus, for every dollar a patient receives under incentive therapy, his or her pension is reduced by $1 and he or she is no better off financially as the result of IT/CWT participation. This change in how these funds are counted has already had the entirely predictable result of discouraging participation in these programs among those in receipt of VA pension. The General Accounting Office is investigating this matter and should have some preliminary findings by April 1, 1985.

Mr. President, I have received complaints from staff of IT and CWT programs, other VA employees, veteran participants in these programs, veterans' service organizations, and others about the adverse impact on these programs that counting these payments as income was having. To remedy this unfortunate situation, I proposed legislation last year in amendment No. 2850 to specify that payments under these programs not be counted as income for purposes of VA pension.

As is noted in the committee report accompanying VA health-care legislation last year, S. 2514—Senate Report No. 98-487, pp. 67-68—this proposal received wide support during the committee's April 11 hearing. In light of the record before the committee on this issue, the Committee determined that it was important to take steps with respect to the relationship between payments earned by participants in these programs and their eligibility for VA pension.

However, instead of the permanent solution I had proposed, the committee agreed to a provision requiring the VA to conduct a 3-year demonstration project, ending December 31, 1987, during which payments received by participants in connection with their participation in IT and CWT programs would not be counted in determining annual income for VA pension purposes. Under the committee bill last year, the administrator would have been required to submit a report by February 1, 1987, on the experience under this proposed demonstration project during fiscal years 1985 and 1986.

This short-term action was proposed because of a lack of comprehensive information on, first the extent to which participants in the program are in receipt of VA pension; the extent to which such participants are adversely affected by counting IT/CWT payments in determining annual income for pension purposes; and, the extent to which veterans, because of participation in the program, have gained employment and are no longer in receipt of pension.

Although I believed there was a sufficient basis for more comprehensive action, I supported this demonstration program. Unfortunately, our colleagues in the House were unwilling to accept even the demonstration project.

Because of my very strong, personal interest in and support for the IT and CWT programs, and my belief that offsetting any payments received in these programs against pension payments severely restricts the value of these programs, I have again introduced a provision, section 6 of S. 6, to provide for a permanent exclusion of therapy payments in the computing of income for purposes of VA pension and will work hard for its enactment.

MEDICAL QUALITY-ASSURANCE RECORDS

Mr. President, section 3305 of title 38 makes certain VA records confidential and, except in certain specified situations, prohibits any disclosure of these records outside of the VA. The records which are sought to be protected by this provision of law, which was enacted in 1980, are those created by the VA through the agency's medical quality-assurance program.

Under the VA's medical quality-assurance program, known as the Health Services Review Organization—HSRO—Program, VA medical professionals review the health-care activities in a facility to determine what deficiencies exist in such care so as to recommend corrective action. The program is divided into two main components: An external review process—the Systematic External Review Program—SERP—involving teams composed of VA medical and dental professionals from outside a particular VA facility who conduct a comprehensive review of all facets of the facility's operation; and the Systematic Internal Review Program—SIR—a program of ongoing reviews in each VA facility conducted by designated committees made up of physicians and other health professionals from the facility's own staff. Each component of this quality assurance program produces various documents which contain information identifying individual VA patients or employees, such as those conducting the reviews, citing and describing any inappropriate medical practices and deficiencies discovered in the provision of health care, and making recommendations for corrective actions.

Because these quality-assurance efforts depend to a significant degree on the willingness of the VA personnel conducting the reviews to be completely candid in their comments and because of concerns that this vital degree of candor could be lost if the participants could not be assured that their remarks and evaluations incorporated in SERP and SIR reports would be kept confidential, the Congress acted to place stringent limitations on the disclosure of these documents.

However, there have been a number of reports since 1981 of situations in which various VA facilities have relied on section 3305 to refuse disclosure of information and records that did not appear to warrant the confidentiality accorded by that section. In a recent example of such misplaced reliance on section 3305, the VA resisted disclosing to a journalist with the Fort Lauderdale News-Sun Sentinel aggregate information regarding mortality data associated with the agency's cardiac surgery program, both at a Florida VA medical center and nationwide. In my view, such a withholding of information about Government programs is not good public policy.

In order to ensure that the intent of Congress in enacting section 3305 is clear—namely, that medical quality-assurance records should be kept confidential but only to the extent necessary to promote the candor of individuals involved in the quality-assurance process—and to specify generally that withholding aggregate data relating to morbidity and mortality associated with various VA programs is not necessary to achieve this purpose, I am proposing an amendment to section 3305. This amendment, set forth in section 7 of S. 6, will make it clear that such aggregate information is not made or considered confidential as medical quality-assurance records. Thus, unless some other basis for nondisclosure exists, such information would be available for disclosure.

DISCIPLINARY BOARD ACTION INVOLVING CLINICAL PRIVILEGES

Mr. President, section 4110 of title 38 sets forth, in broad outline, the procedures that are to be followed in cases involving charges of "inaptitude, inefficiency, or misconduct" brought against VA health-care personnel employed under the VA Department of Medicine and Surgery's title 38 personnel system—namely, physicians, dentists, podiatrists, optometrists, nurses, physician assistants, and expended-function dental auxiliaries. Together with the implementing guidelines which are set forth in a VA personnel manual, this provision provides due process protections to these health-care personnel involved in disciplinary actions.

Recently, in connection with VA actions against a physician at a VA health-care facility in California, I came to realize that it was the agency's view that the provisions of 4110 do not apply in a case involving a reduction or revocation of clinical privileges—the types of health-care services that the individual is authorized to perform as a VA employee at a particular VA facility. It appears that the VA's view in this regard is premised on the point of view that such an action is not a true adverse action worthy of the due process protections—such as the right to confront witnesses and the right to a decision on the record—that apply in proceedings under section 4110 and that, even it, for example, an individual physician suffers a reduction or loss of clinical privileges, he or she would still be employed and would thus not have suffered a significant loss.

I believe that clinical privileges are a very fundamental component of a physician's or other health-care professional's employment with the VA. Although it might well be true that an individual could still be employed by the VA following a reduction or revocation of clinical privileges, such a loss would have a very serious impact on the individual's professional reputation and career opportunities. Thus, I am proposing, in section 8 of S. 6, to amend section 4110 so as to make the provisions of that section expressly applicable in any case in which a reduction or revocation of clinical privileges is proposed on the basis of a deficiency in the individual's clinical practice. Also, because I believe that clinical privileges are so directly related to a physician's or other professional's clinical competence and that they should be at risk of loss or reduction only in a situation in which he or she has been put on notice and, if his or her conduct as a professional is the basis for the action, notified of the particular charges involved, this provision in S. 6 would limit the power of a disciplinary board to reduce or remove privileges by requiring that before this could be done appropriate notice must first be provided to the employee and the board's finding must be based on a finding of a deficiency in the individual's clinical practice.

PILOT PROGRAM OF NONINSTITUTIONAL TREATMENT PROGRAMS

Mr. President, as most of my colleagues understand and appreciate, because of the very large number of World War II veterans whose average age is nearing 65, the VA is involved in issues related to aging to a much greater degree and on a more urgent basis than most other departments and agencies of the Federal Government. Concerns about the graying of America that still have a somewhat theoretical concern to many are immediate and quite real to the VA. The number of veterans 65 and over will increase from approximately 4 million at present to 7 million by 1990 and 9 million by 2000. At present, less than 40 percent of the males 65 and over are veterans; by the year 2000; over 62 percent of this population will be veterans. No matter how some issues are resolved that are likely to be debated in the coming years regarding the VA and eligibility for VA services, it is abundantly clear that the VA will be providing assistance to a very significant number of older veterans in the years ahead.

Section 9 of S. 6 is part of a series of efforts in recent years that have attempted to address this issue and to help prepare the VA to meet the challenge. This provision would require the Administrator, in order to evaluate the effectiveness, feasibility, and desirability of various actions that would enable veterans to receive needed care in noninstitutional settings, to carry out a pilot program in five geographic regions, for a period of 48 months, during which veterans participating in this program would receive coordinated services, both health care and health-related services, from the VA and, under certain circumstances, from appropriate public and private agencies that provide such services. Under this pilot program, veterans would be selected to participate on the basis of their eligibility for hospital or nursing home care and their need for such care or for ambulatory care to obviate the need for such institutional care. These veterans would be provided health and health-related services, such as homemaker and nutrition services, in order to help them remain living in their communities and out of institutions, such as hospitals or nursing home facilities. Such a result has a double benefit: Veterans will be receiving needed care in a more humane environment which is more conducive to their regaining their health while, at the same time, the cost of their care will be reduced. Finally, in order to ensure that the desired level of coordination exists between the VA and non-VA service providers, each veteran participating in the pilot program would have a case manager who would be charged with responsibility for coordinating the veterans' access to the appropriate mix of needed services.

Mr. President, I believe that this pilot program could provide important information for the VA in a variety of important respects. First, the emphasis on providing noninstitutional care should promote greater understanding about the process of placing veterans in need of care at the lowest, most appropriate level of care available and of the benefits of such actions—both to the veteran and in terms of cost, as noted earlier. This approach will become increasingly important in the years ahead as the potential demand from older veterans for care could easily overwhelm the agency's existing bed capacity. In this regard, I note that under the pilot-program provision in the bill, in at least three of the geographic regions involved in the pilot program, a geriatric evaluation unit [GEU] at a VA health-care facility would have to be involved. I have been very encouraged by the early reports on the success of GEU's within the VA—most recently, the very positive report in the December 27, 1984, issue of the New England Journal of Medicine on the results of a research project at the GEU at the Sepulveda VA Medical Center—and I look forward to a further evaluation of these units as part of this pilot project.

A second area in which I believe the pilot project can yield important new learning involves VA-community interaction and cooperation. As I noted earlier, under the pilot program, veterans would receive both health and health-related services. It is my anticipation that the latter services—such as homemaker, personal care, communal or at-home nutrition, and transportation assistance services—would come almost exclusively from public and private agencies already providing such services in the various communities in which the program is carried out. The VA-community interaction necessary to make arrangements for VA patients to receive these services and to coordinate the provision of services with VA health-care services for the veterans involved has the potential of providing significant benefit to both parties in such an arrangement.

In this regard, I note the testimony of the VA's then-Chief Medical Director, Dr. Donald Custis, before our committee in June 1982, when he addressed this issue of VA-community cooperation and how improving such cooperation might better enable the VA to meet the needs of older veterans. In remarks that appear on pages 24-25 of the committee's June 30, 1982, oversight hearing on Veterans' Administration's health-care programs and policies affecting needs of aging veterans, he stated:

I should like to put forward what I believe is a new approach to VA-community interaction. It is based on the evident fact that all the statistics I have cited to you, confined as they are to veterans as actual and potential patients in our system, may seem to bypass the fact that America is "graying." The issue of an aging population and what means exist or must be created to deal with it creates a set of problems for society as a whole.

It seems to me that we must begin to work with communities all over this country in a variety of ways that recognize that we are a part of the problem (albeit a large part, with an estimate that 60% of all males over 65 in 1990 will be veterans). It should follow then, that we are only a part of the solution. I think we should, on a local basis, begin to participate in the creation of structures to deal with overall problems of an aging population, some of whom are veterans, so that we can work together with the communities to get the best "bang" for both their "bucks" and ours.

We have recently launched, within the Department of Medicine and Surgery, a Medical District Initiated Program Planning (MEDIPP) process which will increasingly rely on planning that comes up to the center from the grass roots. Through this and other means, we want to encourage the growth of such considerations on the local level, the initiation of experiments along these lines and the search for valid interlocutors in the communities where we are located.

It may be, if we can succeed in starting and nurturing the growth of such VA-community interactive structure, that both the VA facilities and the communities in which they are located can accomplish more with existing and additional resources than each of us is now doing or can anticipate doing alone.

In regard to this idea, let me note that I am proposing some experimentation in the area of a new Federalism, one which makes use of our resources and knowledge, the resources and knowledge of other Federal agencies, and the states and communities.

The agency itself, in a report issued last year—"Caring for the Older Veteran"—addressed the same point in setting forth the following as one of five goals for DM&S in meeting the needs of older veterans:

NATIONAL AND COMMUNITY COORDINATION STRATEGIES

Goal: To exert maximum efforts to coordinate and integrate VA programs for the aging veteran with similar programs in the community at large in a fashion which will benefit both the VA and the community.

Mr. President, it is just such an interaction of Federal, State, and local resources as Dr. Custis described and the VA advocated that I am proposing the VA carry out.

Two recent activities involving the VA and non-VA organizations and individuals concerned abut VA-community cooperation and interaction provide strong support for increased action in this area. The first was a collaborative project between the VA and the Division of Health Policy Research and Education at Harvard University which was designed to explore improved integration of VA and community resources for caring for the elderly. This project featured a conference held in the fall of 1983 and the recent publication of a book, entitled "Older Veterans: Linking VA and Community Resources," embodying the results, of that conference. The second activity was a joint conference in September 1984 sponsored by the VA and the American Health Planning Association entitled "The Complex Cube of Long Term Care." Both activities demonstrate the VA's vital interest in the question of how the agency, in cooperation with outside entities, can best meet the needs of the increasing population of older veterans and also show the strong interest in such cooperation on the part of many non-VA entities. Certainly it is clear that such interaction is needed and needed now, both for the sake of the VA and the Nation as a whole. As is noted in the preface to "Older Veteran: Linking VA and Community Resources":

The nation's demographic changes over the next half century will be compressed into two decades for the Veterans' Administration. The response of the VA to this challenge will provide models for caring for the growing population of elders, veteran and non-veteran as well.

I believe that the proposed pilot project will help further that VA effort as well as contribute to the Nation's knowledge about caring for its elderly citizens.

As a final point regarding the pilot program, I note expressly the funding provision that I am proposing for it. As I noted at the outset of my remarks, I am strongly committed to seeking ways in which to bring the enormous Federal deficit under control and, because of this, will be extremely reluctant to advocate any new spending by the Federal Government. Although I do not anticipate that this pilot program will incur great costs—I am proposing an authorization of $10 million for the first fiscal year—it would represent a new expenditure, and I do not wish to submit any proposal that would be inconsistent with efforts to develop a fiscal year 1986 budget premised on a Government-wide freeze concept. For this reason, I have included a provision relating to the authorization of appropriations for the pilot program specifying that, if the Congress adopts a first concurrent resolution on the budget for fiscal year 1986 which is based on a comprehensive freeze in Government spending or which incorporates a fiscal 1986 spending level no greater than the total of fiscal year 1985 outlays plus the costs of any cost-of-living increases provided for in entitlement programs and the amount by which interest on the public debt in fiscal year 1986 exceeds fiscal year 1985 interest, then no appropriations would be authorized for the pilot program in fiscal year 1986. Thus, if there is congressional agreement in support of such a freeze in fiscal year 1986, this pilot program would not begin before fiscal year 1987; if, on the other hand, no such agreement is reached, appropriations for the program would be authorized for fiscal year 1986. I included a similar provision in S. 4, the proposed "Child-Care Assistance Act of 1985," legislation also introduced on January 3, to improve child-care assistance efforts.

In future years, it would be my intention to seek reductions in spending in other areas—not necessarily in veterans' programs—to offset any new funds appropriated for this pilot program. This approach would allow us to continue to address pressing areas of concern in a fiscally prudent manner. Costly, outdated, ineffective, or unnecessary programs should be eliminated or trimmed back so that new, needed initiatives can be funded.

Given the changing demographics and the growing demand for care from older veterans and the VA's likely inability to meet that demand on its own, this pilot program is certainly a new initiative that should be pursued. We cannot halt all progress in attempting to address these types of issues, but we can and must proceed in a fiscally prudent manner. This obviously means making decisions about existing programs so that there will be room in the overall Federal budget for new initiatives. And those decisions need not be confined just to the domestic side of the Federal budget. Certainly, some of the tradeoffs should be from pruning back some unnecessary spending in the defense budget so that we can meet our obligations to those who served in the past.

REPORT ON FEDERAL GOVERNMENT RESPONSIBILITY TO INDIVIDUALS WHO SERVED WITH VOLUNTARY CIVILIAN ORGANIZATIONS IN VIETNAM

Mr. President, last year, in response to concerns from a number of non-Federal civilians who were present in Vietnam during the Vietnam era with voluntary organizations—principally the Red Cross and the USO—about the effects of their presence there on their health and the Federal Government response to their concerns, I introduced and the Senate passed legislation which included a provision mandating a joint report from the VA, Department of Defense, and Department of Health and Human Services on this issue. Under the provision passed by the Senate, section 12 of H.R. 5618, the required report would have contained an evaluation of the question of U.S Government responsibility—and alternative approaches for providing Federal and other benefits, services, and assistance to these civilians—for disabilities that possibly result from certain aspects of their presence in Vietnam, such as exposure to agent orange or to particularly traumatic events.

Unfortunately, our distinguished colleagues in the House would not accept this provision last year and, thus, it was not included in the final compromise legislation.

I have again introduced such a provision, as section 10 of S. 6. As I have noted in the past, for those who served in Vietnam with the military, there can be no question about the Federal Government's responsibility to address concerns they raise regarding adverse health effects of service in Vietnam—whether as a result of exposure to herbicides such as agent orange or through other experiences there. In the case of these former service members, it is also very clear that it is the VA which bears the majority of this responsibility. Thus, our committee has engaged in considerable activity in seeking responsive Federal Government action to deal with concerns regarding the long-term health effects of Vietnam service, with special attention to the question of the long-term health effects of herbicides, such as agent orange, which were sprayed in Vietnam by the U.S. military as a means of depriving the enemy of cover and food.

In view of the contribution that the individuals who worked in voluntary organizations in Vietnam provided to their country and their concerns about the long-term health effects of their work in Vietnam that may be related to actions of the Federal Government, I continue to believe strongly that the Federal Government has the responsibility, at least, to evaluate these concerns and consider possible appropriate alternatives—Federal and non-Federal—for addressing them. It is for this reason that I am again introducing this report provision.

CONCLUSION

Mr. President, as I noted at the outset, the diverse provisions of this bill have as a general unifying purpose bringing about the continued improvement of the VA's ability to meet the needs of our Nation's veterans and their dependents. I look forward to working on this measure with the new committee chairman, the distinguished Senator from Alaska [Mr. MURKOWSKI], and other members of the committee, the VA, the veterans' service organizations, and others interested in legislation affecting veterans.

I want to take this opportunity to note the transition in the committee chairmanship. Since 1981, the committee has been guided by the firm hand of my very good friend from Wyoming [Mr. SIMPSON]. Upon AL's election as majority whip, he had to relinquish the committee chairmanship. I will miss him greatly in that role. His strong, personal, very sincere interest in matters coming before the committee and his effective work as chairman have been of genuine benefit to our Nation's veterans. I am sure he will continue to play a very active role on the committee, and I look forward to continuing to work with him both on the committee and in our mutual roles as whip for our parties.

At the same time, I wish publicly to extend hearty congratulations to the new chairman. Immediately upon his arrival in the Senate in 1981, FRANK MURKOWSKI was assigned to the Veterans' Affairs Committee. His first 4 years on the committee have provided him with an impressive foundation of experience on which to build as chairman, and I stand ready to work closely with him as he assumes this important job.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of S. 6 be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That (a) this Act may be cited as the "Veterans' Administration Health-Care Amendments of 1985".

(b) Except as otherwise specifically provided, whenever in this Act an amendment or repeal is expressed in terms of an amendments to, or repeal of, a section or other provision, the reference shall be considered to be made to a section or other provision of title 38, United States Code.

DEFINITION OF VIETNAM ERA

SEC. 2. Section 101(29) is amended to read as follows:

"(29) The term 'Vietnam era' means (A) the period beginning on August 5, 1964, and ending on May 7, 1975, and (B) the period beginning on February 21, 1961, and ending on May 7, 1975, in the case of a veteran who served in the Republic of Vietnam during such period.".

VETERANS' ADMINISTRATION GRADE REDUCTION

SEC. 3. Section 210(b) is amended by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

"(3)(A)(i) The Administrator may not in any fiscal year implement a grade reduction described in division (ii) of this subparagraph unless the Administrator first submits to the Committees on Veterans' Affairs of the Senate and the House of Reprsentatives a report containing a detailed plan for such reduction and the justification for a plan, including a determination by the Administrator, together with data supporting such determination, that, in the personnel area concerned, the Veterans' Administration has a disproportionate number of employees in the salary grade or grades selected for reduction in comparison to the number of such employees at the salary levels involved who perform comparable functions in other departments and agencies of the Federal Government and in non-Federal entities. Any such report shall be submitted not later than the beginning of a period of ninety calendar days (not including any day or with either House of Congress is not in session) prior to the implementation of any proposed grade reduction.

"(ii) A grade reduction referred to in division (i) of this subparagraph is a systematic reduction, for the purpose of reducing the average salary cost for Veterans' Administration employees performing certain functions, in the number of Veterans' Administration employees at any specific grade level who perform those functions.

"(B) Not later than the forty-fifth day after the Administrator submits a report pursuant to subparagraph (A) of this paragraph, the Comptroller General of the United States shall submit to such Committees on Veterans' Affairs a report on the Administrator's compliance with such subparagraph and shall include in the report the Comptroller General's opinion as to the accuracy of the Administrator's determination (and of the data supporting such determination) made pursuant to such subparagraph.".

EXTENSION OF HEALTH-CARE ELIGIBILITY BASED ON EXPOSURE TO DIOXIN OR OTHER TOXIC SUBSTANCES IN VIETNAM OR TO NUCLEAR RADIATION

SEC. 4. Paragraph (3) of subsection (e) of section 610 is amended to read as follows:

"(3) Hospital and nursing home care and medical services may not be provided under or by virtue of subsection (a)(5) of this section after September 30, 1989.".

ALCOHOL AND DRUG TREATMENT AND REHABILITATION

SEC. 5. (a) Section 620A is amended—

(1) in subsection (a)(1), by striking out "pilot" both places it appears;

(2)(A) in subsection (e), by striking out "fifth" and inserting in lieu thereof "eighth"; and

(B) by striking out "pilot";

(3) in subsection (f)—

(A) by inserting "(1)" before "Not";

(B) by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

"(2) Not later than March 1, 1986, March 1, 1987, and March 1, 1988, the Administrator shall report to such committees on the findings and recommendations of the Administrator pertaining to the operation of the program authorized by subsection (a) during fiscal year 1985, fiscal year 1986, and fiscal year 1987, respectively, and shall include in each report information for the fiscal year involved regarding the average duration of participation of veterans, rates of successful rehabilitation, and any changes in average and maximum allowable charges per veteran under contracts entered into by the Veterans' Administration as part of the program."; and

(4) by striking out the semicolon and "pilot program" in the catchline.

(b) The item relating to such section in the table of sections at the beginning of chapter 17 is amended by striking out the semicolon and "pilot program".

PAYMENT FOR THERAPEUTIC AND REHABILITATION ACTIVITIES

SEC. 6. Section 618 is amended by adding at the end the following new subsection:

"(f) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, no amount of remuneration provided to an individual as a participant in a therapeutic or rehabilitative activity carried out pursuant to this section shall be included in determining annual income for purposes of pension payments.".

SEC. 7. Section 3305(b) is amended by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

"(6) Nothing in this section shall be construed as authorizing or requiring withholding from any person or entity the disclosure of statistical information regarding Veterans' Administration health-care programs (including information on aggregate morbidity and mortality rates associated with specific activities at individual Veterans' Administration health-care facilities).".

DISCIPLINARY BOARD ACTION INVOLVING CLINICAL PRIVILEGES

SEC. 8. Section 4110 is amended by adding at the end the following new subsection:

"(f) This section applies in any case in which a reduction or revocation of the clinical privileges of any person employed in a position described in paragraph (1) of section 4104 of this title is proposed by reason of a charge of inaptitude, inefficiency, or misconduct. A disciplinary board may impose a reduction or revocation of clinical privileges only (1) in a case in which, prior to the hearing under this section, such person has been provided with notice of the proposal to reduce or revoke such privileges, and (2) on the basis of deficiency in such person's clinical practice.".

PILOT PROGRAM OF NON-INSTITUTIONAL TREATMENT PROGRAMS

SEC. 9. (a)(1) In order for the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs to evaluate the effectiveness, feasibility, and desirability of various actions that would enable veterans—

(A) who are eligible for hospital or nursing home care from the Veterans' Administration, and

(B) who are in need of hospital or nursing home care or of services to obviate the need for such care; to receive needed health and health-related services in noninstitutional settings, the Administrator shall, subject to appropriations made pursuant to subsection (d), conduct a pilot program, in not less than five geographic areas, for a period of forty-eight months. In not less than three of such areas, such program shall also involve the use of a geriatric evaluation unit at a Veterans' Administration health-care facility.

(2) In the course of such program, the Administrator shall develop and provide to certain of such eligible veterans appropriate health-related services in addition to any appropriate services, such as home health or adult day health-care services, for which they may be eligible under chapter 17 of title 38, United States Code. In selecting veterans for participation in such program, the Administrator shall accord a priority to those veterans with service-connected disabilities.

(3)(A) In order to avoid duplication of services available to eligible veterans from the Veterans' Administration and other sources and to avoid fragmentation of effort under such program, the Administrator shall (i) utilize appropriate services of appropriate public and private agencies that provide health-related services, and (ii) in the case of each eligible veteran receiving services under such program, appoint a Veterans' Administration employee to serve as the case manager to coordinate the provision of services to such veteran. In order to avoid such duplication and fragmentation and to evaluate the cost-effectiveness of utilizing certain health services of an agency or agencies other than the Veterans' Administration in cases in which no Veterans' Administration facility in such a geographic area provides such services, the Administrator, in not more than two of the geographic areas at which such program is being carried out, may utilize appropriate health services of appropriate public and private agencies that provide such services.

(B) The Administrator may provide in-kind assistance (through the services of Veterans' Administration employees and the sharing of other Veterans' Administration resources) to an entity furnishing services to veterans and subparagraph (A)(i) of this paragraph.

(4) The beginning date for such progam shall be not later than the end of the fifth month after funds are appropriated pursuant to subsection (d).

(b) Not later than the end of the thirty-ninth month following the date on which the program described in subsection (a) is begun, the Administrator shall submit to the Congress a report on the results of such program during its first thirty months of operation. Such report shall contain an evaluation of the cost factors associated with providing various alternative services and combinations of service and the impact of providing such services or combinations thereof on achieving the goal of enabling eligible veterans to live in noninstitutional settings. The report shall also include any recommendations for administrative or legislative action, or both, that the Administrator considers appropriate based in the results of such program and on other pertinent information.

(c) For the purpose of this section:

(1) The term "service-connected" has the meaning given that term in paragraph (16) of section 101 of title 38, United States Code.

(2) The term "health-related services" includes, but is not limited to, homemaker, personal care, communal or at-home nutrition, and transportation assistance services.

(d)(1) Except as provided in paragraph (2), there are authorized to be appropriated for carrying out the pilot program under this section (other than for the provision of services under chapter 17 of title 38, United States Code) $10 million for fiscal year 1986 and such sums as may be necessary for each of the succeeding four fiscal years.

(2)(A) In the event that, pursuant to title III of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974, a concurrent resolution for fiscal year 1986 is in effect which sets forth total budget outlays for fiscal year 1986 in an amount which does not exceed the sum of—

(i) the total budget outlays for fiscal year 1985 set forth in such resolution (or, if not set forth therein, as estimated by the Congressional Budget Office as of the date such resolution was adopted),

(ii) the cost in budget outlays in fiscal year 1986, as estimated by the Congressional Budget Office as of the date such resolution was adopted, of such cost-of-living increases taking effect in fiscal year 1986 in entitlement programs as Congress provides for in such resolution, and

(iii) any amount by which interest on the public debt for fiscal year 1986 was estimated by the Congressional Budget Office, as of such date, to exceed the amount of such interest for fiscal year 1985,

no appropriations are authorized under paragraph (1) to be appropriated for fiscal year 1986, but there are authorized to be appropriated for carrying out the pilot program under this section (other than for the provision of services under chapter 17 of title 38, United States Code) $10 million for fiscal year 1987 and such sums as may be necessary for each of the four fiscal years succeeding fiscal year 1987.

(B) For the purpose of this paragraph, the term "entitlement programs" means programs of benefits which the United States is obligated to pay under the laws establishing such programs to persons who meet the eligibility requirements established by such laws.

REPORT ON FEDERAL GOVERNMENT RESPONSIBILITY TO INDIVIDUALS WHO SERVED WITH VOLUNTARY CIVILIAN ORGANIZATIONS IN VIETNAM

SEC. 10. (a)(1) The purpose of this section is to provide a basis for the executive branch and the Congress to evaluate the question of United States Government responsibility, and alternative approaches, for providing individuals who served for a period of at least thirty days in the Republic of Vietnam during the Vietnam era as employees of voluntary organizations, determined by the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs, in consultation with the Secretary of Defense, to be organizations which provided significant assistance to the United States Armed Forces in the Republic of Vietnam during the Vietnam era, with Federal and other benefits and services (including, but not limited to, health care and monetary compensation for disabilities which may be related to exposure to dioxin or be the result of traumatic events), either through the Veterans' Administration or otherwise, and for asssisting such individuals in connection with disabilities they may have incurred as a result of such service.

(2) In order to carry out the purpose stated in paragrpah (1), the Administrator, the Secretary of Defense, and the Secretary of Health and Human Services, not later than one hundred and eighty days after the date of the enactment of this Act, shall submit to the appropriate committees of the Congress a joint report on the question of United States Government responsibility and shall include in such report various alternative approaches (together with comments on the appropriateness and the advantages and disadvantages of each) and any recommendations by such officials for legislative and administrative action with respect thereto, for establishing a program for providing such benefits, services, and assistance to such individuals.

(b) For the purpose of this section, the terms "Armed Forces" and "Vietnam era" have the meanings given such terms in section 101 (10) and (29) (as amended by section 2 of this Act), respectively, of title 38, United States Code.

S. 7—MEDICAID COVERAGE FOR LOW-INCOME WOMEN

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, on January 3, S. 7, legislation which would complete an effort I began almost a decade ago to help close the gaps in the existing Medicaid Program which resulted in many low-income pregant women being excluded from coverage under that program, was introduced. I was delighted that we were able during the 98th Congress to enact legislation, Public Law 98-369 on July 18, 1984, to extend coverage to two of the three groups of low-income pregnant women we were attempting to reach. Those two groups included low-income women who were pregnant with their first child and low-income women whose husbands are unemployed. S. 7 would complete these efforts by extending covrage to the third category of impoverished pregnant women—that is, poor women living with an employed husband but whose family income and assets fall below the AFDC eligibility standards of the State in which they live.

I was pleased to be joined in introducing this legislation by the distinguished Senator from New York [Mr. MOYNIHAN] who has been an ardent and steadfast supporter of this measure, the Senators from Hawaii [Mr. MATSUNAGA and Mr. INOUYE], the Senator from Michigan [Mr. RIEGLE], the Senator from Ohio [Mr. METZENBAUM], and the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. DODD]. Since the date of introduction, we have been joined by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. LEVIN] who has also been a cosponsor of this legislation in previous Congresses. I expect that many other Senators will join with us since this effort has always enjoyed broad, bipartisan support.

Our efforts in this area have also been supported by a wide range of outside groups. In particular, this type of legislation has been supported by organizations which differ sharply on the issue of abortion but strongly agree that the lack of economic resources to pay for the medical care necessary to carry a pregnancy to term should not be allowed to play a role in this very delicate decisionmaking process. For those who support freedom of choice, nothing could be more central to that freedom of choice than the right of a low-income woman to choose to carry a pregnancy to term free from the economic pressures arising from the inability to pay for the costs of the medical care needed. For those who believe that abortion should never be permissible, making available the medical care necessary for a low-income woman to carry a pregnancy to term is essential to alleviating economic pressures which might otherwise influence a decision to terminate a pregnancy.

Mr. President, in the near future I intend to place in the RECORD a list of the numerous organizations who support this initiative.

HISTORICAL BACKGROUND

Mr. President, I first became aware of the problems many women have with regard to access to adequate medical care during pregnancy when I began my efforts in 1973 to enact legislation to help break down barriers to adoption that were then prevalent throughout the country. Witnesses who testified about the need for Federal legislation in the adoption area stressed the necessity of providing financial assistance to cover the medical costs associated with carrying a pregnancy to term for those impoverished women who, for one reason or another, were excluded from Medicaid coverage. In a number of cases, witnesses told us that these women were forced to resort either to abortion or to black market adoptions facilitated by those in the business of buying or selling babies in exchange for payment of the medical costs associated with a pregnancy.

In response to these concerns, the adoption legislation I introduced in the 93d and 94th Congresses included provisions to help pay the medical costs of prenatal care for women who were considering placing their infants for adoption. In 1977, because of my strong belief that all low-income pregnant women, not just those considering adoptive placements, should have access to necessary prenatal care, I approached then Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare Joseph Califano and urged that the Carter administration join with me in seeking an amendment to the Medicaid Program to help ensure that no low-income pregnant woman be denied the assistance critical to the outcome of her pregnancy. Secretary Califano responded affirmatively, and on August 10, 1978, I introduced such a proposed amendment on behalf of the Carter administration—amendment No. 3457, 95th Congress. This initiative was included in the House-passed Child Health Assurance Program legislation during the 95th Congress, but the legislation was not taken up by the Senate in the 95th Congress. I joined with former Senator Ribicoff in sponsoring legislation introduced in the Senate as S. 1204 in the 96th Congress and worked hard for its passage. When the Child Health Assurance Program legislation again failed to be enacted during the 96th Congress, the effort to extend Medicaid coverage to all low-income pregnant women also tragically failed.

At the beginning of the 97th Congress, I reintroduced, as S. 667, the legislation to accomplish this goal. Unfortunately, because of the Reagan administration's efforts to make substantial cuts in the Medicaid Program in the 97th Congress, action on S. 667 proved impossible. On January 26, 1983, the first day of the 98th Congress, I reintroduced this legislation again, as S. 7. On that day, I also introduced a proposal, S. 6, to expand the Medicaid Program along the lines proposed in the original Child Health Assurance Program, including, as well, the provisions relating to coverage of low-income pregnant women.

As my colleagues will recall, these bills laid the foundation for the first step toward enactment of an expansion of maternal and child health coverage. That came in April 1983 when the Senate agreed to the amendment Senators HATFIELD, MOYNIHAN, and I offered to the fiscal year 1984 first concurrent budget resolution in order to provide sufficient budget authority for enactment of S. 7. Congressional acceptance of that additional budget authority for the enactment of this initiative and for beginning the first steps of legislation along the lines of S. 6 set the stage for last year's success in this area.

MAJOR SUCCESS IN THE 98TH CONGRESS

As I indicated at the outset, section 2361 of Public Law 98-369 extended Medicaid coverage to two of the three major groups of low-income pregnant women who had previously been excluded. Much of the credit for enactment of these provisions should go to the distinguished Senator from Texas [Mr. BENTSEN] who, along with the Senator from New York [Mr. MOYNIHAN], championed these provisions during the Finance Committee deliberations. Without their tireless work and dedication, the legislation would not have survived. Credit also should go to the distinguished Senator from Kansas [Mr. DOLE], who not only agreed to the budget amendment that I offered in 1983, but who followed through in supporting the legislative initiative itself in the Finance Committee. The ranking minority member of the Finance Committee, the Senator from Loui-siana [Mr. LONG], who has been supportive of these efforts over the years, was also instrumental in achieving the outcome. My good friend and colleague from California, Representative HENRY WAXMAN, was also a strong advocate of this initiative and deserves special tribute for his skillful efforts which not only helped secure enactment of the provisions relating to medical assistance for low-income pregnant women, but led to the long overdue improvements in the Medicaid Program with respect to services and coverage under Medicaid for low-income children.

Although I am delighted with the success we achieved last year in closing the Medicaid gaps with respect to low-income women pregnant with their first child or those with unemployed husbands as well as with respect to health-care services for low-income children, we did not finish the job. The remaining group of low-income pregnant women must also be extended coverage. These women differ from the other two groups only by virtue of the fact that they are living with their husbands who are employed. The families' income, nevertheless, is so low that they would meet the State's income as well as assets tests for Medicaid eligibility for a pregnant woman living alone or with an unemployed husband. It is unconscionable, I believe, to deny medical assistance in these cases. As I will explain shortly, it is particularly unconscionable since the moment the child is born, he or she will be eligible for Medicaid assistance. Yet, by excluding this group of women from Medicaid eligibility during their pregnancy, we are denying them the medical assistance which could increase the likelihood that the child will be born healthy and strong and thus need less medical intervention later on.

SERIOUSLY ILL NEWBORNS: PREVENTING "BABY DOES" THROUGH ADEQUATE PRENATAL CARE

Mr. President, making sure that every low-income pregnant woman has access to adequate medical care during her pregnancy and the delivery of her child has implications for another issue of compelling dimensions—the birth of a seriously disabled infant with a life-threatening condition.

Over the past several years, many of us have agonized over the so-called "Baby Doe" problem and what is the proper role for Government to play in the very sensitive and emotionally charged issues involving the care and treatment of these seriously disabled infants. I was one of the six Senators who participated in developing the "Baby Doe" compromise enacted as part of the Child Abuse Amendments of 1984, Public Law 98-457. I believe that we achieved in that legislation the framework for a responsible and sensitive approach for dealing with these cases through the existing State child protective services system. But I am equally convinced that there is much more that can and should be done to reduce the number of children and families involved in these heartbreaking cases.

Although it may not be medically possible to eliminate entirely the incidence of high-risk births, there is absolutely no questions that the availability of adequate care during pregnancy is critical to reducing the likelihood that a child will be born with a serious disabling condition or life-threatening condition. Every Member of this body who is concerned about treatment of "Baby Doe" infants ought to be equally concerned about making sure that the medical assistance which could reduce the likelihood of a child being born with these disabling and life-threatening conditions is provided during pregnancy. Just as we developed a consensus last Congress to deal with these very difficult decisions at and after birth, we should coalesce to provide the same consensus to help reduce the incidence of these tragic cases.

PRENATAL CARE CAN MAKE A DIFFERENCE

Mr. President, adequate care during pregnancy is critical to determining the outcome of the pregnancy. There is no question in the medical community about the importance of the relationship between inadequate maternity care and infant mortality and morbidity. Adequate prenatal, delivery, and postnatal care has been proven over and over to be successful in helping to lower infant mortality and morbidity.

According to the Surgeon General's 1980 report, "Healthy People," low birth weight is the greatest single hazard for newborns, increasing their vulnerability to developmental problems and to death. Low birth-weight infants have as much as a 40 times greater risk of dying in their first year of life than do newborns of normal weight. Very low birth-weight infants—those who weigh less than 1,500 grams—face an especially high risk of death; although they constitute only 1 percent of all newborns, they account for almost half of all infant deaths.

Low birth-weight infants are also at increased risk for serious congenital defects and impairments. Most of these low birth-weight infants are premature and the most common complication of prematurity is hyaline membrane disease, a consequence of immature lung development. Low birth-weight and premature infants are at a high risk of becoming mentally retarded, due to birth complications, lowered resistance to infections, lack of fully developed nervous systems, and other factors. Low birth-weight infants are about 10 times as likely to develop mental retardation. Also, intraventricular hemorrahages frequently occur in low birth-weight and premature babies, and many of these small premature infants develop cerebral palsy.

Clearly, our success in reducing infant mortality and morbidity lies in reducing the number of high-risk infants born. The identification of potential problems in the mother as early as possible and the application of appropriate and adequate medical care can have significant beneficial effects on the pregnancy outcomes. Adequate prenatal care enable steps to be taken to prevent or reduce risks. It is generally agreed that the majority of mothers at risk of having a low birth-weight and/or premature infant can be identified by present clinical and laboratory expertise.

We know, for example, that women with such medical conditions as diabetes, hypertension, kidney or heart disease, or who experience complications of pregnancy such as toxemia or infections of the uterus have a much greater risk of poor pregnancy outcome. Adequate prenatal care provided to these high-risk women can help reduce or prevent the likelihood they will have a high-risk infant.

Mr. President, we know as a fact that providing adequate prenatal care works in reducing high-risk births. The examples are numerous. A Missouri study found a 50-percent greater prematurity rate among white mothers with inadequate prenatal care than among white mothers who had received adequate care. A Colorado study found that women who received no care had a prematurity rate of 28 percent. A California prenatal care project found that low birth-weight rates for project participants who were provided with comprehensive maternity coverage were 50-percent less than among women not participating in the project.

These and numerous other similar findings lead the General Accounting Office and numerous other witnesses who testified at hearings I chaired during the 96th Congress to conclude that the single most important step that we could take to improve pregnancy outcome and reduce infant mortality in this country would be to ensure that every pregnant woman receives proper prenatal, delivery, and postnatal care. Identical findings were made in 1981 by the Select Panel for the Promotion of Child Health, which was created by the Congress to assess the status of maternal and child health and to develop a comprehensive plan to promote the health of children and pregnant women in the United States.

One of the first recommendations made by that panel was to mandate Medicaid eligibility for all pregnant women whose family income is at or below the federally-established poverty level. Although the legislation I have introduced would not go that far, it would ensure that all pregnant women whose family income is at or below a State's income standard and assets test for AFDC would be eligible for Medicaid assistance for her pregnancy.

A COST SAVINGS MEASURE

Mr. President, as a result of the 1984 amendments, a newborn infant whose family income and assets meet the States AFDC income and resources requirements will be eligible for Medicaid until the age of 5 regardless of whether the family would otherwise be eligible for Medicaid. For example, such a newborn living with both parents would be eligible for coverage even though the State does not cover two-parent families under its existing Medicaid Program.

This creates the incredible situation that I mentioned at the outset wherein the Federal Government and the State involved will pick up the medical costs for a seriously ill newborn, but will not help pay for the prenatal care that could have reduced the likelihood that the child would be born seriously ill or with a disabling condition.

In other words, we are prepared to pick up the tremendously high costs of neonatal intensive care which can average $8,000 per episode and can likely reach $40,000, if not more. Roughly 6 percent of all births annually in this country require this specialized care at a staggering cost of over $2 billion.

Society also can be faced with monumental lifetime costs for care of developmentally disabled individuals. Low birth-weight infants are 10 times as likely to suffer developmental disabilities as are infants of normal birthweight. Institutional care for these children can run anywhere from $25,000 to $30,000 a year to as high as $100,000 a year depending on the level of care required. When applied to a lifetime of care, estimating an average life of 40 years the costs would run between $1 million and $4 million per developmentally disabled infant.

Clearly, it is far more prudent to provide the medical assistance during a pregnancy that can help avert these problems in the first place. The investment in this type of preventive care would be a small price to pay for the health of these women and infants, and the costs would be returned many times over in savings that would be realized from a reduction in pregnancy complications and infant morbidity which result from inadequate care during pregnancy.

OTHER COSTS

Moreover, Mr. President, although there is no question that this legislation can easily be justified in terms of averting much greater costs to the Federal Government for the remedial medical care that these children will otherwise require, we must look beyond the dollars and cents implications as well. We must look at the heartache that is produced and the human potential that is lost or reduced, through the tragedies of infant mortality and morbidity. The "Baby Doe" cases I mentioned earlier represent just the tip of the iceberg in terms of the tremendous emotional and societal costs that must also be accounted for.

OTHER MATERNAL PROGRAMS NOT SUFFICIENT

Mr. President, let me address briefly one issue that has occasionally arisen in connection with this effort to ensure Medicaid coverage for all low-income pregnant women. There are other Federal programs, in addition to Medicaid, aimed at helping address the health needs of low-income Americans. In particular, the Maternal and Child Health Program is focused on helping meet the health-care needs of mothers and children. I am a strong supporter of that program; however, this block grant program is not an adequate substitute for extending Medicaid eligibility to this group of women. Not all of the women targeted by this amendment have access to a maternal and child health grantee.

In 1980, the General Accounting Office found that the former title V Program—the predecessor to the current block grant program—did not provide sufficient funding to provide any prenatal or well-baby services in many areas of need and that the services afforded under that program in many other areas were insufficient. GAO reported that of the approximately 3,100 counties in the United States, only 242 were reportedly served by such a project in 1978. In 21 States, these projects generally served only one county, and only 13 States reported that these projects served four or more counties. In particular, substantial difficulties were reported in gaining access to residents of rural areas under the title V Program.

Moreover, GAO found that States used these funds for many purposes other than serving mothers and infants. For example, these projects provide family planning and immunizations, as well as well-baby health services. GAO concluded that in the aggregate only a portion of the funds were available for services that most directly relate to improved pregnancy outcome, that some States gave relatively little emphasis to activities that most directly related to this objective, and, finally, that States spent a major portion of those funds on programs or projects that served relatively few communities.

Mr. President, quite simply, short of establishing maternal and child health projects in every community, the only certain way in our present system of health care of reaching all low-income pregnant women is through a third-party reimbursement system like Medicaid. Ideally, Medicaid and grant programs like the Maternal and Child Health Block Grant Program should coexist and complement each other. Together, they can help ensure that all needy women have access to the necessary prenatal and delivery assistance.

BUDGET IMPACT

Mr. President, at the time a similar provision was included in the House-passed legislation, H.R. 4170, the Congressional Budget Office estimated that extending Medicaid coverage for this category of low-income pregnant women would cost approximately $175 million in Federal outlays in the first fiscal year. I have been advised, however, that that estimate was based upon an assumption of a 100-percent participation rate among the population at issue. I do not believe that is a reliable assumption for the following reasons:

First, a certain portion of this group will be covered by private insurance through their employers;

Second, a certain portion of those without employer health coverage will rely upon other sources of health care, for example, the maternal and child health care projects discussed previously; and

Third, a certain portion will not seek medical assistance until the time of delivery of the infant and therefore not utilize medical care during the pregnancy itself.

Thus, I am convinced that the CBO estimate in 1984 was much too high and that the actual additional Federal outlays would be considerably lower. I am asking CBO to take another look at the matter.

In addition, as an original cosponsor of S. 2424, the Kennedy-Gephardt healthcare cost-containment bill which was introduced in the 98th Congress and will soon be reintroduced in this Congress, I believe that substantial Federal savings could and should be achieved from enactment of such a measure which would far more than offset any additional spending that would result from enactment of this legislation.

Finally, as I have also indicated, enactment of S. 7 would also lead to a reduction of subsequent Medicaid expenditures for treatment of disabling conditions that could be averted by the adequate prenatal care that this measure would provide for.

CONCLUSION

Mr. President, there are 28 States which currently do not cover low-income pregnant women in two-parent working families. The rest have already made the wise decision to provide coverage for these women. We should take the steps that are necessary to make sure that all low-income pregnant women, wherever they may live, are eligible to receive this coverage. Enactment of S. 7 would be another major step in that process.

Two years ago, when I reintroduced S. 7, as I had done in the 95th, 96th, and 97th Congresses, I indicated that I would continue to press for adoption of this legislation until Congress had extended Medicaid coverage to all pregnant women who lack the economic resources to enable them to afford prenatal, delivery, and postnatal care so necessary for their health and the health of their expected babies. We made major progress in that effort in the last Congress with the enactment of Public Law 98-369. There is still more to be done, however, to complete that effort. I intend to continue the work until it is finished.

I ask unanimous consent that the text of S. 7 be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 7

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That (a) section 1905(n)(1) of the Social Security Act is amended to read as follows:

"(1) a pregnant woman (whose pregnancy has been medically verified) who is a member of a family which meets the income and resources requirements of the State plan approved under part A of title IV; and".

(b) Section 1902(e) of such Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(5) Notwithstanding any other provision of this title, each State plan approved under this title must provide that any pregnant woman who is eligible for, has applied for, and has received medical assistance under the State plan, shall remain eligible for all pregnancy-related and post-partum medical assistance provided under the State plan until the end of the sixty-day period beginning on the last day of her pregnancy. The provisions of this paragraph shall not reduce the period of time for which any individual is eligible for medical assistance under the State plan by reason of any other requirement of this title or part A of title IV.".

(c)(1) except as provided in paragraph (2), the amendments made by this Act shall apply to medical assistance provided, under a State plan approved under title XIX of the Social Security Act, on or after the first day of the first calendar quarter beginning at least six months, after the date of the enactment of this Act.

(2) If the Secretary of Health and Human Services determines that State legislation is necessary to permit amendment of the State plan under title XIX of the Social Security Act to meet the additional requirements imposed by the amendments made by this Act, he shall not find a failure to comply with the requirements of such title solely on the basis of such State's failure to meet these additional requirements before the first day of the first calendar quarter beginning after the close of the first regular session of the State legislature that begins after the date of the enactment of this Act.

(d) The Secretary of Health and Human Services shall issue the regulations to implement this Act within six months after the date of the enactment of this Act.

S. 8: CHARTER FOR VIETNAM VETERANS OF AMERICA, INC.

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, as the ranking minority member of the Veterans' Affairs Committee, I want to explain my bill, S. 8, introduced on January 3, to grant a Federal charter to the Vietnam Veterans of America, Inc. [VVA]. Joining with me as the principal cosponsor is the distinguished former chairman of the Veterans' Affairs Committee and now the assistant majority leader, my very good friend from Wyoming [Mr. SIMPSON]. Joining us as cosponsors were our fellow members of the committee, Senators MATSUNAGA, STAFFORD, and SPECTER, and 23 other Senators who cosponsored the predecessor to this bill, S. 2266, in the 98th Congress, Senators BRADLEY, BURDICK, BYRD, CHILES, COHEN, DODD, FORD, GLENN, HART, HATFIELD, KASSEBAUM, KENNEDY, LEAHY, LEVIN, MATHIAS, METZENBAUM, PELL, PRESSLER, PROXMIRE, PRYOR, SASSER, and WILSON. In addition, one of the Senate's newest Members, the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. KERRY] is cosponsoring the measure. In sum, 27 Members of the Senate joined with me in introducing this measure.

Today I am adding 3 more cosponsors: Senator SASSER, Senator BIDEN, the ranking minority member of the Judiciary Committee, and Senator DECONCINI, who is a member of both the Veterans' Affairs and Judiciary Committees, as also are Senators SIMPSON and SPECTER. It is the Judiciary Committee to which this legislation has been referred.

The VVA is a national service organization devoted to the welfare of Vietnam-era veterans. Formed in 1978, VVA has growth into an organization with over 150 chapters stretching from New England to California, and its membership is over 21,000 strong—an over 30-percent increase since last year.

For over 8 years, the VVA has addressed the major issues that face Vietnam veterans, including needs of readjustment, employment, and economic assistance, the adequacy of GI bill benefits, VA health-care programs, agent orange, and post-traumatic stess disorder. In the past several years, as it has become a truly national, representative organization, it has acted as a progressive catalyst on major legislative issues and has promoted the importance of recognizing Vietnam veterans as a valued and valuable national resource for America.

The members of VVA represent a wide spectrum of income levels, political beliefs, religions, professions, and ethnic groups. The VVA, through its State councils and local chapters, brings these different backgrounds and experiences together in order to seek to accomplish several purposes. One is to provide mechanisms through which Vietnam veterans can develop positive identification with their Vietnam service and with those who served with them. A second is to deal with the physical, psychological, and economic consequences of the war for individual veterans. A third is to seek to effect basic reform in the governmental and private institutions that have major impact on the lives of veterans.

The VVA is recognized by the VA under section 3402 of title 38, United States Code, to provide representation for veterans in connection with claims for benefits before the VA. The organization's claims service department has developed and distributed a comprehensive claims manual for use by its service officers and others involved in assisting Vietnam veterans.

The VVA has also been deeply involved in efforts to gain a better understanding of the psychological and other health-related problems of Vietnam veterans and to foster their readjustment to civilian life. It has joined in the fight to seek judicial review of VA decisions denying veterans' benefit claims. The organization has also contributed to efforts to promote employment opportunities for Vietnam veterans and to heighten recognition of the needs of women, minority groups, and incarcerated Vietnam veterans.

As the local service providers, its 150 chapters serve as the most important component of the VVA. Each chapter sets its own goals to address the needs of its members and the community in which it operates. Each chapter has in common that they serve as the primary contact point for information and referral services; many have established local rap groups to help Vietnam veterans express their concerns and interests. They also operate other programs to meet the needs of Vietnam veterans, such as job fairs and substance abuse programs. Chapters also work to portray a positive image for Vietnam veterans in their communities by running such programs as Special Olympics, Big Brothers, and other community service projects.

Most importantly, Mr. President, the VVA works to enable Vietnam veterans to be proud of their time in the service in spite of the many controversies surrounding the war itself.

Mr. President, S. 8 is—with the exception of some minor technical changes—identical to legislation I introduced with Senator SIMPSON in the 98th Congress, S. 2266, and which was cosponsored by 51 of our Senate colleagues, making 54 sponsors in all. Although no action was taken on S. 2266, the companion legislation, H.R. 4772—introduced by the distinguished chairman of the House Veterans' Affairs Committee [Mr. MONTGOMERY]—was passed by the House by a vote of 295 to 96 on June 11, 1984.

I am aware, Mr. President, of the opposition of some to the granting of a charter to the VVA. However, the VVA has come a very long way in its struggles for recognition and is continuing to move constructively forward in the veterans' community. I believe the substantial bipartisan support in both Houses in the 98th Congress for granting a charter and the support already shown for S. 8 this year are evidence of the great strides that the VVA has made and is continuing to make.

Regarding this controversy, I note the views of my good friend from Mississippi in the other body as he led the debate on the charter legislation last June 11 (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD at H5498, daily editions):

Most of this controversy is not about the organization itself but the organization's president, Mr. Robert E. Muller. Before being too critical of him I would remind my colleagues that Bobby Muller suffered severe wounds while in combat in Vietnam and he will never fully recover from those wounds. I think it is understandable that he and others like him may have very strong feelings about the war in Vietnam, the way it was conducted and the way it ended. He has earned the right to express his personal feelings on any issue even though I may strongly disagree with his views.

The granting of a Federal charter to the Vietnam Veterans of America should not be decided on the basis of whether we agree or disagree with Bobby Muller, the organization's president. Bobby Muller and I disagree on many issues and it should be noted that many local VVA chapter leaders and members disagree with him on many occasions. Whether we grant a Federal charter should be based on the VVA as an organization rather than the deeds of one of its leaders.

I share this sentiment completely. The measure we have introduced proposes to grant a Federal charter to the VVA. It is not an endorsement of any one individual. Rather, it recognizes the organization and the important work that it has done, is doing, and will continue to do.

I am aware that the proposal for a charter for the VVA does not meet the Judiciary Committee's unwritten policy generally requiring that an organization be in existence for at least 10 years before that committee will recommend that it be granted a Federal charter. However, as Senator SIMPSON and I pointed out in a July 25, 1984, letter to the distinguished chairman of the Judiciary Committee [Mr. THURMOND], I believe that an exception to this policy is warranted in the case of the VVA. The Vietnam era itself has not yet been officially ended for 10 years, and the granting of a charter to the largest organization which represents exclusively those who served during that very difficult time in our Nation's history would be a most appropriate and important recognition of the valuable contributions which Vietnam veterans have made to our Nation. A charter would also strengthen the VVA's effectiveness and its ability to move forward with the work and effort that needs to be completed now.

Mr. President, I believe that the granting of a Federal charter is an appropriate form of recognition for this group and should help promote its valuable ongoing work. I intend to work closely with my colleagues in the Senate in pursuing this issue during this Congress, and I urge all Senators to become acquainted with the organization and join with us in this initiative.

I also want to note that on January 7, the distinguished chairman of the House Veterans' Affairs Committee [Mr. MONTGOMERY] introduced H.R. 512, an identical bill to grant the VVA a charter. I am sure that he will be just as forceful in advocating for it and as successful in securing passage as he was last year.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a copy of our July 25, 1984, letter, followed by the text of the bill, be printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

U.S. SENATE,
COMMITTEE ON VETERANS' AFFAIRS,
Washington, DC, July 25, 1984.

Hon. STROM THURMOND,
Chairman, Committee on the Judiciary, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR STROM: We are writing to you regarding S. 2266, a bill to grant a Charter to the Vietnam Veterans of America, Inc. (VVA), and would respectfully urge you to schedule early Committee consideration of this measure.

We introduced S. 2266 on February 7, and it has now received the requisite bipartisan 40 member cosponsorship necessary for the Judiciary Committee's consideration—including 15 members of each party. Indeed, as of today, there are 50 Senators cosponsoring this measure—16 Republicans and 34 Democrats. The attachment lists the 48 Senators who have joined us in cosponsoring this measure. Plainly, there is broad bipartisan support for the legislation.

In addition, on June 11, the House of Representatives considered and passed, by a vote of 295 to 96, a companion bill, H.R. 4722, to grant a Charter to the VVA. The House action also evidences the wide support that exists in the Congress for a Charter for this organization.

We are also aware that the proposal for a Charter for the VVA does not meet the Committee's policy with respect to an organization which seeks a Federal Charter being in existence for at least ten years. However, we believe that an exception to this policy is warranted in the case of the VVA. Indeed, the "Vietnam era" itself has not yet been officially ended for ten years. The granting of a Federal Charter to the largest organization which represents exclusively those who served during that very difficult time in our Nation's history would be a most appropriate and important recognition of the valuable contributions which Vietnam veterans have made to our Nation. A Charter would strengthen the VVA's effectiveness and its ability to move forward now with the work and effort that we firmly believe needs to be completed now. Thus, we would urge you to embrace the procedure of the House Judiciary Committee regarding the 10-year criterion in this case.

Strom, we fully recognize that there is continuing controversy about this bill, but we believe that, in view of the substantial bipartisan support for the bill, there should be a good faith opportunity to have it pursued through the Committee process.

We do look forward to your response at your earliest convenience.

With warmest personal regards and our sincere thanks for your consideration of this issue.

Cordially,

ALAN CRANSTON,
Ranking Minority Member.

S. 8

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

RECOGNITION AS CORPORATION AND GRANT OF FEDERAL CHARTER

SECTION 1. The Vietnam Veterans of America, Inc., a nonprofit corporation organized under the laws of the State of New York, is hereby recognized as such and is granted a charter.

CORPORATE POWERS

SEC. 2. The Vietnam Veterans of America, Inc. (hereinafter in this Act referred to as the "corporation"), shall have only those powers granted to it through its articles of incorporation filed in the State in which it is incorporated and its constitution and bylaws, and subject to the laws of such State.

OBJECTS AND PURPOSES OF CORPORATION

SEC. 3. The objects and purposes of the corporation are those stated in its articles of incorporation, constitution, and bylaws and include a commitment to—

(1) uphold and defend the Constitution of the United States;

(2) foster the improvement of the condition of Vietnam-era veterans;

(3) promote the social welfare (including educational, economic, social, physical, and cultural improvement) in the United States by encouraging the growth and development, readjustment, self-respect, self-confidence and usefulness of Vietnam-era veterans and other veterans;

(4) improve conditions for Vietnam-era veterans and develop channels of communication to assist Vietnam-era veterans;

(5) conduct and publish research, on a nonpartisan basis, pertaining to the relationship between Vietnam-era veterans and the American society, to the Vietnam war experience, to the role of the United States in securing peaceful coexistence for the world community, and to other matters which affect the educational, economic, social, physical, or cultural welfare of Vietnam-era veterans and other veterans and the families of such veterans;

(6) assist disabled Vietnam-era veterans and other veterans in need of assistance and the dependents and survivors of such veterans; and

(7) consecrate the efforts of the members of the corporation and Vietnam-era veterans generally to mutual helpfulness and service to their country.

SERVICE OF PROCESS

SEC. 4. With respect to service of process, the corporation shall comply with the laws of the State in which it is incorporated and those States in which it carries on its activities in furtherance of its corporate purposes.

MEMBERSHIP

SEC. 5. Except as provided in section 8, eligibility for membership in the corporation and the rights and privileges of members shall be as provided in the constitution and bylaws of the corporation.

BOARD OF DIRECTORS

SEC. 6. Except as provided in section 8, the board of directors of the corporation, and the responsibilities of the board, shall be as provided in the constitution and bylaws of the corporation and in conformity with the laws of the State in which it is incorporated.

OFFICERS

SEC. 7. Except as provided in section 8, the officers of the corporation, and the election of such officers, shall be as provided in the constitution and bylaws of the corporation and in conformity with the laws of the State in which it is incorporated.

NONDISCRIMINATION

SEC. 8. In establishing the conditions of membership in the corporation and in determining the requirements for serving on the board of directors or as an officer of the corporation, the corporation may not discriminate on the basis of race, color, religion, sex, national origin, handicap, or age.

RESTRICTIONS ON CORPORATE POWERS

SEC. 9. (a) No part of the income or assets of the corporation shall inure to any person who is a member, officer, or director of the corporation or be distributed to any such person during the life of this charter. Nothing in this subsection shall be construed to prevent the payment of reasonable compensation to the officers of the corporation or reimbursement for actual necessary expenses in amounts approved by the board of directors.

(b) The corporation shall not make any loan to any officer, director, or employee of the corporation.

(c) The corporation shall have no power to issue any shares of stock nor to declare or pay any dividends.

(d) The corporation shall not claim congressional approval or Federal Government authority by virtue of this Act for any of its activities.

LIABILITY FOR ACTS OF OFFICERS AND AGENTS

SEC. 10. The corporation shall be liable for the acts of its officers and agents when acting within the scope of their authority.

BOOKS AND RECORDS; INSPECTION

SEC. 11. The corporation shall keep correct and complete books and records of accounts and shall keep minutes of any proceeding of the corporation involving any of its members, the board of directors, or any committee having authority under the board of directors. The corporation shall keep at its principal office a record of the names and addresses of all members having the right to vote. All books and records of the corporation may be inspected by any member having the right to vote, or by any agent or attorney of such member, for any proper purpose, at any reasonable time. Nothing in this section shall be construed to contravene any applicable State law.

AUDIT OF FINANCIAL TRANSACTIONS

SEC. 12. The first section of the Act entitled "An Act to provide for audit of accounts of private corporations established under Federal law", approved August 30, 1964 (36 U.S.C. 1101), is amended by inserting after paragraph (67) the following new paragraph:

"(68) The Vietnam Veterans of America, Inc.".

ANNUAL REPORT

SEC. 13. The corporation shall report annually to the Congress concerning the activities of the corporation during the preceding fiscal year. Such annual report shall be submitted at the same time as is the report of the audit of the corporation required by section 2 of the Act entitled "An Act to provide for audit of accounts of private corporations established under Federal law", approved August 30, 1964 (36 U.S.C. 1102). The report shall not be printed as a public document.

RESERVATION OF RIGHT TO ALTER, AMEND, OR REPEAL CHARTER

SEC. 14. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this charter is expressly reserved to the Congress.

DEFINITION OF "STATE"

SEC. 15. For purposes of this Act, the term "State" includes the District of Columbia, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, and each of the territories and possessions of the United States.

TAX-EXEMPT STATUS

SEC. 16. The corporation shall maintain its status as an organization exempt from taxation as provided in the Internal Revenue Code of 1954.

EXCLUSIVE RIGHT TO NAMES

SEC. 17. The corporation shall have the sole and exclusive right to use the name "The Vietnam Veterans of America, Inc.", "Vietnam Veterans of America, Inc.", and "Vietnam Veterans of America", and such seals, emblems, and badges as the corporation may lawfully adopt. Nothing in this section shall be construed to interfere or conflict with established or vested rights.

FAILURE TO COMPLY WITH RESTRICTIONS OR PROVISIONS

SEC. 18. If the corporation shall fail to comply with any of the restrictions or provisions of this Act, the charter granted by this Act shall expire.

S. 9: VETERANS' ADMINISTRATION HOUSING PROGRAM AMENDMENTS OF 1985

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, as the ranking minority member of the Veterans' Affairs Committee, I want to explain my bill, S. 9, the proposed "Veterans' Administration Housing Program Amendments of 1985," introduced on January 3. This measure would amend title 38, United States Code, to increase by 27 percent, from $27,500 to $35,000, the maximum amount of the Veterans' Administration loan-guaranty entitlement available to a veteran for the purchase of a conventional home, a single-family residential unit in a condominium, or a farm residence, and increase by 10 percent, from $20,000 to $22,000, the maximum guaranty for purchase of a manufactured home. It would also authorize VA guaranties of qualified adjustable rate mortgages.

INCREASE IN LOAN GUARANTY MAXIMUMS

The VA loan guaranty is designed to substitute, in large measure, for the downpayment that would otherwise be required when a veteran purchases a home. Under current law, the guaranty is limited to 60 percent of the loan amount or $27,500, whichever is the lesser, with regard to conventionally built homes and condominium apartments, and 50 percent or $20,000, whichever is the lesser, in the case of manufactured homes. Lenders are thus assured of the substantial protection afforded by the VA loan guaranty and are generally willing to make loans to veterans without the necessity of a downpayment or with a lower downpayment than would otherwise be required.

Mr. President, as my colleagues are well aware, housing prices have risen substantially since the most recent increase in the VA loan-guaranty maximum, which was enacted by the Congress in 1980 based on an amendment I proposed. According to data provided by the National Association of Realtors, the median purchase price of an existing home in October 1980 was $62,700. By November 1984—the most recent month for which data are available—the median purchase price of an existing home had risen by more than 15.6 percent to $72,500. In the case of new homes, the National Association of Home Builders advises that in 1980, the median purchase price was $64,600; by November 1984, the price had risen to $80,100—an increase of 24 percent. Additionally, according to the NAHB, the median cost of a new home is expected to rise by another 6.1 percent in 1985, making the cost more than $85,000 or 31.6 percent more than in 1980. Assuming a similar increase in existing homes, the median price for purchase of an existing home would rise to nearly $77,000—a 22.8-percent increase since 1980. Thus, by raising the guaranty by approximately 27 percent—the average of the percentage increases in existing and new home median prices—to $35,000, we would be helping to insure that the value of the VA home-loan guaranty keeps pace with increases in the housing market.

In the case of manufactured homes, data available from the National Manufactured Housing Institute show that, from 1980, when the last increase in the maximum guaranty was enacted, through 1983, the average sale price of a manufactured home increased by 6 percent. In addition, the average cost per square foot of a manufactured home increased from $18.85 to $20.29—an increase of 7.6 percent. Although data are not yet available for 1984 and 1985, assuming an increase in the Consumer Price Index of 7.6 percent—3.5 percent for fiscal year 1984 and 4.0 percent for fiscal year 1985—a 10-percent increase in the maximum, from $20,000 to $22,000, would help protect this benefit from inflation.

Mr. President, there has been a dramatic increase in the number of VA home loans closed since fiscal year 1982—from about 103,400 loans during fiscal year 1982 to over 225,000 in fiscal year 1984. This is evidence of the continuing popularity of and demand for the program. According to the President's fiscal year 1985 budget, 240,000 loans will be closed in fiscal year 1985. With the increasing number of veterans seeking to use their VA home-loan guaranty entitlements, it is even more important that we make the program sufficient to meet their needs.

This legislation is designed to help insure that, to the extent interest rates and other economic factors generally make home purchases possible, the VA loan-guaranty program will continue to play the role that Congress intended of helping veterans become homeowners.

Mr. President, this portion of S. 9 is identical to S. 2265, a measure I introduced with Senators RANDOLPH, MATSUNAGA, and DECONCINI in the 98th Congress. Despite passage last year by the House of Representatives of legislation that would have increased the loan-guaranty maximum—section 1 of H.R. 5617—no action was taken on my proposal in the Senate. Unfortunately, during negotiations with the House Veterans' Affairs Committee in connection with the Veterans' Benefits Improvement Act of 1984, Public Law 98-543, agreement could not be reached on any increase in the guaranty maximums. However, as I noted during the Senate debate on the compromise agreement on October 9—at page S13885 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD (daily edition)—I am committed to pursuing an increase in the maximums and intend to work very closely with my colleagues in the Senate to do all that I can to secure enactment of appropriate increases.

GUARANTY OF QUALIFIED ADJUSTABLE RATE MORTGAGES

Mr. President, as the costs of housing and the cost of borrowing money to purchase housing have increased over the past decade, both lenders and borrowers have searched for new means of obtaining the necessary financing to enable more potential homebuyers to purchase housing. A relatively recent innovation for this purpose has been the adjustable rate mortgage—known popularly as an ARM. Typically, an ARM contains terms that permit a lender to adjust periodically the effective rate of interest charged for a mortgage loan. Such adjustments generally correspond to an interest rate index and, because lenders are assured of a competitive rate of return on ARM's a prospective homeowner may be offered an initial mortgage interest rate below the rates associated with level payment, fixed rate mortgages. ARM's have increased homeownership availability and given the consumer an opportunity to select from an array of available options and tailor a borrowing plan that meets his or her individual needs.

Much has been heard—both negative and positive—about the use of ARM's, their advantages and disadvantages and the opportunities that they represent to homebuyers as well as the very unfortunate consequences that can result from them. Quite clearly, the ARM is a reality in the home-financing industry. The use of ARM's over the past several years has increased dramatically—from 35 percent of all conventional loans made in January 1983 to 68 percent of such loans made in August 1984. As interest rates have declined, that percentage has dipped; nevertheless, his past December, ARM's were still accounting for half the conventional loans being made.

Mr. President, I believe that is is important that the Veterans' Administration's home-loan guaranty program have the capacity to keep pace with changes in the housing industry, while guarding against unduly risky or harmful innovations. Toward these ends, S. 9 would permit the VA to offer guaranties in the cases of ARM's that meet specified criteria—referred to in the bill as "qualified ARM's." The provisions of section 1 of S. 9 are modeled after section 443 of the Housing and Urban-Rural Recovery Act of 1983, Public Law 98-181, which authorized the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development to insure adjustable rate mortgages under the FHA program.

Specifically, my proposal would authorize the VA—in accordance with regulations that the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs would be required to prescribe to establish an ARM-guaranty program—to provide for the guaranty of a loan the terms of which permit the lender to make periodic adjustments in the effective rate of interest, with the adjustments corresponding to interest rate changes specified in a national rate index prescribed by the Administrator. Moreover, adjustments could be made not more than annually and would be limited to not more than 1 percentage point in the case of any single adjustment and to not more than 5 percentage points over the term of the loan. Thus, for example, a loan bearing an initial interest rate of 9 percent in the first year of the loan could increase to only 10 percent in the second year and could never increase to more than 14 percent over the life of the loan. When a veteran applied for an ARM, the lender would be required to make available a full, written explanation of the features of the ARM as well as a worse case example of the payment schedule.

Mr. President, if the VA's home-loan guaranty program does not keep pace with developments in the industry, veterans will be disadvantaged in using their VA loan-guaranty entitlements. This is why the Congress in the past few years has made such improvements as increasing the maximum length of mortgages in the case of manufactured housing, providing that permanently affixed manufactured homes may, in certain situations, be guaranteed pursuant to the criteria applicable to conventional homes, and permitting the guaranty of graduated payment mortgages.

Thus, I am making this new legislative proposal to put the issue of qualified ARM's on the table for consideration in this session of the 99th Congress. I have an open mind on the issue and intend to work very closely with all of those who are interested and involved in the VA loan-guaranty program. I look forward to receiving all of their suggestions and recommendations as the legislation is further developed and refined.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of S. 9 be printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 9

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "Veterans' Administration Housing Program Amendments of 1985".

SEC. 2. Paragraph (1) of section 1803(c) of title 38, United States Code, is amended—

(1) by inserting "(except as provided in subparagraph (C) of this paragraph)" before "shall bear";

(2) by designating the first and second sentences as subparagraph (A) and (B); and

(3) by adding at the end the following new subparagraph:

(C) In establishing rates of interest under this paragraph for loans made for one of the purposes described in clauses (1), (2), (3), (4), and (6) of section 1810(a) of this title, the Administrator may, pursuant to regulations which the Administrator shall prescribe consistent with this subparagraph, provide for the guaranty under this chapter of a loan in a case in which the terms and conditions agreed to by the parties include provision for periodic adjustments by the lender in the effective rate of interest charged (herein-after in this subparagraph referred to as a 'qualified adjustable rate mortgage'). Such interest rate adjustments may be accomplished, in accordance with such terms and conditions, through adjustments in (i) the monthly payment amount, (ii) the outstanding principal balance, (iii) notwithstanding subsection (d)(1) of this section, the maturity of the loan, or (iv) any combination of the items described in clauses (i), (ii), and (iii) in this sentence, except that in no case may any such adjustment of the maturity of a loan result in a total term in excess of forty years. Adjustments in the effective rate of interest shall—

"(I) correspond to a national interest rate index specified by the Administrator, after consultation with the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development, in such regulations;

"(II) be made not more often than annually;

"(III) be limited, with respect to any single interest rate increase, to not more than 1 percent on the outstanding loan balance; and

"(IV) be limited to a maximum increase of 5 percentage points above the initial contract interest rate over the term of the loan.

Such regulations shall contain a requirement that the lender make available to the veteran applicant, at the time that the veteran applies for the loan, a full, written explanation of the features of the qualified adjustable rate mortgage, including a written hypothetical payment schedule that displays the maximum potential increases in monthly payments to the veteran over the first five years of the loan.".

SEC. 3. (a) Section 1810(c) of such title is amended by striking out "$27,500" and inserting in lieu therefo "$35,000".

(b) Section 1811(b)(2) of such title is amended—

(1) in subparagraph (A), by striking out "$27,500" both places it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "$35,000"; and

(2) in subparagrpah (B), by striking out "$20,000" both places it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "$22,000".

(c) Section 1819(c) of such title is amended by striking out "$20,000" each place it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "$22,000".

(d) The amendments made by this section shall take effect on October 1, 1985.

S. 10: FEDERAL RESERVE REFORM ACT OF 1985

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, I want to explain my bill, S. 10, the proposed "Federal Reserve Reform Act of 1985," introduced on January 3, to give Congress and the President greater influence over the Federal Reserve Board and over the conduct of monetary policy.

The purpose of my bill is to give Congress and the President greater influence in the development and implementation of monetary policy and to place a reasonable limit on the ability of the Federal Reserve to perpetuate its policies and its monetary thinking irrespective of changes in elected administrations.

The fundamental principle underlying my proposal is that it is inconsistent with representative democracy for the tremendous power of the Federal Reserve Board to be wielded exclusively by individuals who are politically accountable to no one.

The Federal Reserve Board, as presently established by the Federal Reserve Act, enjoys greater independence than any executive branch agency. The Fed is the only agency whose budget is not subject to the appropriations process. The Fed pays itself. Its members serve 14-year terms, virtually on a par with the lifetime terms of members of the Federal judiciary, which average out to be 16 years.

However, unlike the Federal courts, the Federal Reserve Board was not created by the Constitution. The Fed clearly is a legislative creature of Congress—there is no constitutional requirement that we have a Fed.

Presently, Congress exercises virtually no oversight of the Fed. Should Congress disagree strongly with the conduct of monetary policy there are only very limited opportunities for Members to raise concerns in an effective manner.

I do not want to suggest that the Federal Reserve Board, as presently constituted, is some Frankenstein monster running amok. The lack of political accountability by those who decide our monetary policy, however, is a misservice to our democracy. It is contrary to the principles upon which our Nation is founded and should be governed.

My proposal has been criticized on the grounds that it could subject monetary policy to political expediency, undermining the stability of our monetary and banking system.

Independence from politics, however, is no guarantee of wise, sound policy. The so-called independence of the Fed has not rendered it immune from occasional suspicions that monetary policy has been modified from time to time to meet the election year needs of incumbent administrations.

As for market confidence, that ultimately depends upon performance.

Even with the independence of the Fed, the markets clearly understand that the Federal Reserve can resist for only a time the widespread, desperate needs of Government and the economy, including the world economy, for additional credit. There is a real limit as to how long those needs can go unmet without worse disasters occuring. Thus, the markets see as inevitable the Fed's eventual yielding.

My point is that the independence of the Fed probably produces results no different from those that would be produced under my bill with two major exceptions: First, there would be political accountability for the conduct of monetary policy, and, second, there would be a real opportunity to coordinate fiscal and monetary policy.

Under our present system, there is no effective way for our Government to coordinate fiscal and monetary policy. The Reagan administration marched fiscal policy in a stimulative direction; the Fed countermarched in the opposite direction. The result obtained brought double trouble to the economy.

Monetary policy is important, and, to paraphrase Milton Friedman, it is too important to be left in the hands of central bankers.

I favor abolishing the Fed as an independent agency and making it part of the Treasury Department.

That would be the simplest, most effective solution to the plaguing national problem of division of responsibility for monetary and fiscal policy when both should be the responsibility of the elected administration.

Realistically, I recognize the chance of enacting such a drastic change at this time is virtually nil.

My bill amends the Federal Reserve Act to require the Fed to obtain its operating funds through a congressional appropriation—the procedure that is followed by all other executive and independent agencies.

Congressional power over the Fed's purse would for the first time make congressional oversight effective when we feel the Fed's monetary policy is dangerously off track.

Currently, the Federal Reserve gets its operating budget independently of Congress from the Reserve's surplus funds account which derives from profits earned on its open market transactions.

My bill gives the President a greater voice in determining monetary policy by returning the Secretary of the Treasury to the seat he once held on the Fed's Board. The Secretary of the Treasury originally was designated a member of the Board when the Fed was established in 1913, but this seat was abolished in 1936.

The Secretary, who is the principal economic figure in the executive branch, should sit on the Fed Board of Governors so that an administration can have a formal opportunity to push for monetary policies consistent with its own program. The Secretary's presence on the Fed Board would provide a greater opportunity for coordination of monetary and fiscal policy.

The bill further strengthens the President's voice by making the 4-year term of the Board's Chairman and Vice Chairman coterminous with that of the President. The President should be able to name a Chairman sympathetic to his economic views at the very outset of his administration.

Under current law, the Chairman of the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve, who is second only to the President in power over the Nation's economy, is always a holdover from the prior administration.

President Reagan was not able to name a Chairman until August 7 of last year when the term of Paul Volcker, who was appointed by President Carter, expired. President Reagan's successor may have to wait until 1991 to name the key monetary policy figure in the executive branch.

My bill also proposes to shorten the terms of Board members from 14 years to 7 years. It would not affect the terms of any present incumbent.

Mr. President, what I have proposed is very moderate. Shortening the terms of members of the Board of Governors and making the terms of the Chairman and Vice Chairman coterminous, were recommended in 1961 by the prestigious Commission on Money and Credit.

Placing the Secretary of the Treasury on the Board returns to the Federal Reserve System an important part of its original structure. The reasons for removing the Secretary from the Board in 1936 are not entirely clear. In large part, it occurred at the insistence of Senator Carter Glass who thought that the Secretary contributed very little to the Board's deliberations. I think to the contrary that there must be vastly improved communications between the Fed and the administration. The best way to accomplish this, short of placing the Fed within the Treasury, is to make the Secretary of the Treasury a voting member of the Board and to permit the President to name his Chairman at the start of his administration.

Finally, it is time for Congress to assert the power of the purse over the Fed. Congress should remind the Federal Reserve Board that it works for all the people. We specifically should remind the Board and its employees here in Washington that they are our representatives in the Nation's banking system, and are not acolytes of a self-perpetuating, quasi-central banking institution.

I have confidence that monetary policy arrived at through democratic political processes can serve the Nation better and more consistently than the present secretive process conducted by a very small enclave of persons.

I know that the process of politically responsible determination of monetary policy is not easy, but I am convinced that the success of our economic future depends upon it. It is not healthy in a democracy for important policymaking to become alienated from the general public. This is happening with monetary policy.

Thus, my bill is an effort to build broader support for sound monetary policy.

I urge my colleagues to consider it carefully in this light.

When S. 10 was reintroduced in this Congress, the text inadvertently contained errors with respect to certain dates. I ask unanimous consent that the corrected text of my bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 10

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "Federal Reserve System Reform Act of 1985".

BOARD OF GOVERNORS SUBJECT TO APPROPRIATIONS

SEC. 2. (a) The last sentence of the first paragraph of section 7 of the Federal Reserve Act (12 U.S.C. 289) is amended by striking out "surplus fund of the Federal Reserve bank" and inserting in lieu thereof "general fund of the Treasury".

(b)(1) The third paragraph of section 10 of the Federal Reserve Act (12 U.S.C. 243) is amended to read as follows:

"There are authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary for the salaries and operating and administrative expenses of the Board in carrying out the provisions of this Act, and the Board may not expend any amount not appropriated pursuant to such authorization. The Board may enter into agreements with the Administrator of General Services with respect to the maintenance, operation, or protection of any building owned by the Board.".

(2) The amendment made by paragraph (1) shall not be construed to prohibit the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System from retaining amounts held by such Board on the date of the enactment of this Act and using such amount for purposes of carrying out its responsibilities under the Federal Reserve Act (12 U.S.C. 221 et seq.) other than for its salaries and operating and administrative expenses.

(c) The fourth paragraph of section 10 of the Federal Reserve Act (12 U.S.C. 244) is amended by striking out the fourth sentence.

(d) The amendments made by this section apply to fiscal years beginning on or after October 1, 1986.

TERMS OF MEMBERS AND EXECUTIVE OFFICERS OF BOARD OF GOVERNORS

SEC. 3. (a) The first paragraph of section 10 of the Federal Reserve Act (12 U.S.C. 241) is amended by inserting after the first sentence thereof the following: "On and after the date of enactment of the Federal Reserve System Reform Act—

"(1) The Secretary of the Treasury shall serve as a member of the Board ex officio; and

"(2) the term of office of each member shall be seven years.".

(b) The third sentence of the second paragraph of section 10 of such Act (12 U.S.C. 242) is amended by striking out "term of four years" each place it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "until such time as the term of the President making such designation shall expire".

(c) The amendments made by this section shall apply to individuals appointed to be members of the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System or designated to serve as Chairman or Vice Chairman of the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System on or after the date of enactment of this Act.

STATEMENTS ON INTRODUCED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS

By Mr. BYRD (for Mr. BENTSEN):

S. 261. A bill to provide for a feasibility study of south Texas medical facility; to the Committee on Veterans' Affairs.

FEASIBILITY STUDY ON THE NEED FOR A VETERANS' MEDICAL FACILITY IN SOUTH TEXAS

● Mr. BENTSEN. Mr. President, today, I am introducing legislation to provide for a study for the establishment of a veterans' hospital in south Texas. Presently, south Texas is served only by an outpatient clinic substation in McAllen. An outpatient clinic substation has only minimal facilities. For that reason, veterans living in south Texas must travel 200 or 300 miles to one of the hospitals in Houston or San Antonio if they are in need of anything more than minor health care. South Texas is not easily accessible by air or land travel. Further, when a veteran reaches the point where he needs more medical attention than the minimal facilities of a clinic substation can provide, his or her condition can often be aggravated by extensive travel. I think we have put an unreasonable burden on veterans who live in south Texas.

Americans have a proud tradition of honor, bravery, and service to their country. Many of those Americans are Texans—over 70,000 veterans live in the 14 southern most counties of Texas. These loyal and patriotic citizens responded to their country's call and willingly gave of themselves to serve their Nation's interest, often in far-off lands. The freedom we enjoy today is the greatest monument to them and to their bravery. Nothing is more important to the soul of America than remembering those who gave of themselves so that we might enjoy the fruits of peace and liberty. We must provide our veterans with access to adequate medical care. Establishing a veterans' hospital in south Texas would constitute a decided step toward achieving this worthy goal and the keeping of the commitments we have made to these men and women.●

By Mr. METZENBAUM:

S. 263. A bill to provide a deduction from gross income for individual taxpayers who maintain a household which includes a dependent of the taxpayer who suffers from Alzheimer's disease; to the Committee on Finance.

DEDUCTION FOR TAXPAYERS WHOSE HOUSEHOLD INCLUDES A DEPENDENT WHO SUFFERS FROM ALZHEIMER'S DISEASE

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, in past years, I have taken the floor of the Senate on many occasions to speak on the subject of Alzheimer's disease and its devastating impact on the elderly of this Nation. In each of those instances, I felt it necessary to describe to my colleagues the nature of this illness and the incredible cruelties that it imposes on the stricken. Time and again, I have cited the shocking numbers involved and have recounted statistics which point inevitably toward an epidemic.

I no longer feel that I must repeat that information before this body.

Alzheimer's disease has brutally forced itself into our consciousness and into our lives. The magnitude of this sickness has made millions of Americans painfully aware of a disorder that most had never before heard of.

It pleases me to report that this new awareness has translated into some significant strides in the battle against Alzheimer's. Much of the credit for these gains can be attributed to the responsiveness of Congress.

This year, we will target $50 million specifically for Alzheimer's disease research. Ten years ago, we weren't spending a dime toward the development of a treatment and a cure.

Two years ago, I offered an amendment on the floor to establish five specialized research centers on Alzheimer's. Not only was that amendment approved, but this year we authorized the funds to set up five additional centers.

Last year, my amendment to the Older Americans Act reauthorization provided funds to set up demonstration projects and to make grants available to students who will specialize in caring for Alzheimer's victims.

As you can see, Mr. President, we in the Congress have been successful in providing some hope for the future. We have not, however, done enough to alleviate the problems of the present.

For every person stricken, there are dozens of others who are indirectly victimized. Friends and loved ones must somehow try to cope as they helplessly watch as the Alzheimer's victim literally disintegrates before them. The immediate family must not only confront this emotionally; they are forced to face the financial challenge of a lifetime.

Therefore, today I am introducing a bill which will provide a tax deduction for individuals who are caring for an Alzheimer's victim in the home. This measure would make expenses related to the home care of an Alzheimer's victim—other than medical expenses—deductible from an individual's gross income.

Mr. President, the need for this measure is well documented. I recently chaired a hearing of the Subcommittee on Aging in my home State in which witness after witness described how an entire life's savings can be wiped out in a frighteningly short period of time. Testimony consistently indicates that around-the-clock care of an Alzheimer's victim can cost a family over $30,000 a year. Very few families can hope to afford that. Typically, they care for the patient themselves, with little or no professional help.

This bill certainly will not eliminate all the financial hardships of a family who has been touched by Alzheimer's disease. But this is an illness that is making the lives of those family members barely livable. By providing a deduction for certain home health services and for respite care, we can go a long way toward restoring some financial stability in these households.

I urge my colleagues' support for this measure. We are making progress toward the development of a treatment and a cure. Until the day arrives when we can say that we have defeated this disorder, we must do everything possible to ease the suffering of both Alzheimer's victims and their families.

By Mr. METZENBAUM (for himself and Mrs. HAWKINS):

S. 264. A bill to amend the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act to require that the label or labeling of a food state the specific common or usual name and the amount of each fat or oil contained in such food and the amount of sodium and potassium contained in such food; to the Committee on Labor and Human Resources.

DIETARY INFORMATION LABELING ACT OF 1985

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, as we begin work in a new Congress, we will be faced with a great many new issues which will require swift and thoughtful action. However, much of our attention here will be devoted to problems that have confronted us in previous years and past Congresses.

High on this list is the tragic fact that cardiovascular disease continues to be the Nation's No. 1 killer, claiming close to a million lives every year.

This year, however, there appears to be encouraging evidence that the battle against heart attack, high blood pressure, and stroke can be won. Study after study now tell us that by reducing the amount of cholesterol and sodium in our diets, we can dramatically cut the chances of developing cardiovascular disease.

In fact, a panel from the National Institutes of Health recently concluded that a mere 10 percent reduction in blood cholesterol would save 100,000 lives a year. Elimination of sodium literally spares the lives of many of the 60 million Americans who suffer from high blood pressure.

Mr. President, we Americans now know that our eating habits have made us high risks for developing these diseases. That knowledge has prompted many of us to reassess our diets and to drop some old habits.

Unfortunately, much of the information that consumers need in order to reduce fat and salt is simply unavailable. Even though it's been almost 5 years since the Food and Drug Administration proposed mandatory quantitative declaration of sodium and potassium and stricter guidelines for fat and oil labeling, we still don't know how much salt we are ingesting or the amount and the type of fat in the foods we buy.

Therefore, Mr. President, today I am introducing, along with my distinguished colleague PAULA HAWKINS, "The Dietary Information Labeling Act of 1985." This bill will enable consumers to make intelligent choices regarding fat and salt at the grocery store.

First, the bill requires food manufacturers to disclose the amount of salt their products contain. Although there are now voluntary regulations to this effect, FDA states that only one-third of processed foods are labeled. Regulations must be made mandatory.

Second, the amount and specific type of fat will also be included on the label. Now, we are not only in the dark in regard to how much fat is contained in these foods, we don't even know if the fat is vegetable or animal. In many cases, the industry practices an "and/or" method of labeling. For example, a typical label may read, "contains one of the following: palm oil, peanut oil, cottonseed oil, beef fat, and/or lard."

Mr. President, I consider this a matter of great urgency. There is no longer any debate—cholesterol and salt are killers. Unlike a great many serious illnesses, we know exactly how to avoid cardiovascular disease. We can cure ourselves by making informed choices about our diet. Sadly, we just don't have the proper information available to us to make those choices.

I am hopeful that hearings can be held on this legislation very soon. Americans have both the need and the right to know exactly what is contained in the foods they buy—especially when the ingredients can be harmful to their health.

Again, I ask my colleagues to bear in mind that this is the No. 1 killer of Americans. I urge their support of this measure and its swift enactment.

Mrs. HAWKINS. Mr. President, I rise today to join Senator METZENBAUM in cosponsoring the Dietary Information Labeling Act of 1985. This legislation would require that food labels state the sodium, potassium and fat and oil content contained in each food. Mr. President, each year we hear the distressing statistics regarding how many lives are lost to heart disease, stroke, high blood pressure, and other diseases. But the real distressing news is how many of the individuals could have been saved through proper diet.

Our Nation has always been concerned about the need for accurate labeling of food products, but as more information regarding diet and its relationship to certain diseases becomes known, full and accurate labeling of food products has become even more important. The 1969 Conference on Food, Nutrition, and Health signaled a change in attitude regarding food labeling, a progression away from labeling as a means of protecting against economic adulteration and toward a means of helping consumers make informed decisions regarding foods that might lead to better health. But implementation of the recommendations of that conference have been delayed for far too long. Over 5 years have passed since the Food and Drug Administration proposed mandatory quantitive declaration of sodium and potassium and stricter guidelines for fat and oil labeling. We need to enact these labeling provisions today. To the 43 million Americans who suffer from heart or blood disease, it is crucial to know the type of fat contained in their food. To the 37 million Americans who suffer from high blood pressure, the amount of salt they eat is related directly to their ability to control their blood pressure and reduce their risk of stroke. To the countless Americans who are concerned about their health and want to do all they can to prevent heart disease or high blood pressure, the knowledge of salt and fat content in the food they buy is an essential element of their overall health program.

More and more, scientific evidence is suggesting there's a good deal of truth in that old saying, "You are what you eat." We know that a healthy diet, low in saturated fat, can reduce the risk of heart attack and, perhaps, the risk of certain cancers. Controlling salt or sodium intake can help in the treatment of blood pressure. Findings like these have made Americans more nutrition conscious, that's good news. What's bad news, however, is that consumers trying to reduce their sodium or fat intake are often frustrated in trying to determine the ingredients of processed foods.

Although some food manufacturers do an excellent job of labeling the ingredients of their products, it is a voluntary effort on their part. The vast majority of American manufactured food products still have no nutritional labeling information to help guide the American consumer in making decisions affecting their health. To protect their health, to reduce the number of deaths in the United States, I believe that American consumers have the right to know what's in the food they buy. It's time our labeling laws gave the consumers this essential information. Therefore I am pleased to join Senator METZENBAUM, my colleague on the Senate Labor and Human Resources Committee in cosponsoring the Dietary Information Labeling Act.

By Mr. METZENBAUM:

S. 266. A bill to amend title XVIII of the Social Security Act to require that physicians who provide services under part B of such title shall be paid for such services only on the basis of an assignment, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Finance.

PAYMENT FOR PHYSICIANS' SERVICES

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, this year, senior citizens are paying as much out of their pockets for health care as they were before Medicare began. A large portion—as much as $2.5 billion in 1983—of these out-of-pocket costs result from doctors charging their elderly patients more than the Medicare determined reasonable rate for health care services.

As seniors have to reach into their pockets for nearly $2,000 to pay their health care costs in 1985, they will have good cause to wonder whatever happened to the protection which Medicare was meant to provide.

The legislation which I am introducing today seeks to repair one of the major holes in the Medicare Program—the failure of physicans to accept assignment.

This bill will require physicians who participate in the Medicare Program to accept Medicare reimbursement rates as payment in full for health care services. Currently, a great many physicans require elderly and disabled patients to pay the difference between the Medicare determined reasonable rate for those services and their own higher fees.

Less than 20 percent of physicans accept Medicare assignment for all of their Medicare patients. Half of all physicians accept Medicare's rates for some but not all of their Medicare patients.

The failure of so many physicans to abide by Medicare rates has placed a terrific burden on the elderly. The extent of this burden was outlined in a recent report by the chairman of the House Select Committee on Aging, Mr. ROYBAL.

One quarter of the average cost which seniors pay for physician services results from doctors charging the elderly more than Medicare considers reasonable. In 1983, senior citizens were burdened with $2.5 billion of these extra charges—an average of $107 per Medicare patient.

The total annual costs for physician services to Medicare patients averaged $917 in 1983. Medicare's net payment was only $449. The elderly had to pay the remaining $468 out-of-pocket. So, in 1983, the elderly were responsible for more than half their total physician bills.

The problem has clearly been getting worse. In 1973, the average bill submitted to Medicare was 11.7 percent higher than what Medicare would pay. By 1983, this discrepancy had more than doubled to 23.1 percent.

The point has often been made that the poor elderly are taken care of by doctors willing to be more lenient with their charges. The fact is, that in 1983, the poorest elderly—under $5,000 annual income—paid $137 out-of-pocket for physician services outside of hospital, compared to an average of $142 for the highest income elderly—over $35,000 annual income. In short, the burden is falling on those least able to bear it.

Of course the major argument against legislation requiring physicians to abide by Medicare's reasonable rates is that there will be massive defections of physicians from the program as a result.

However, given an increasingly competitive environment surrounding medical providers; the surplus of physicians expected by the end of the decade; and the fact that the elderly represent 35 percent of the average doctor's patient load; I believe physicians are unlikely to refuse elderly and disabled Medicare patients.

We should also keep in mind that in 1981, physicians received an average of $27,490 or 17 percent of their income from Medicare with some specialists—thoracic surgeons—receiving an average of $72,420 from the Medicare Program.

I believe that physicians have an obligation to charge no more than a reasonable fee for service to their elderly and disabled patients on Medicare, and if the profession itself cannot find a way to deliver affordable health care to Medicare beneficiaries, then I believe that the time has come to make accepting assignment a precondition for participation by physicians in the Medicare Program.

Mr. President, this bill recognizes that for many doctors, the barriers to accepting assignment are more than financial. The bill includes provisions intended to reduce burdensome paperwork and to speed up payments. In addition, the Secretary of Health and Human Services will establish an advisory committee of physicians and consumers to review all aspects of the present physician reimbursement system.

Mr. President, I am also concerned about physician billing practices under the Medicare system. The average number of physician bills submitted for each Medicare patient increased by 129 percent between 1970 and 1980. In 1970, there were 2,097 bills submitted for each 1,000 Medicare patients; by 1980 this had risen to 4,797 per 1,000 patients.

The increase in bills cannot be explained by an increase in physician visits. Since 1970, the average number of physician visits by the elderly has risen by less than 2 percent.

The dramatic increase in the number of physician bills per patient suggests that physicians are getting around Medicare's reimbursement limits by billing for more procedures. My concern is that this practice adds to the burden of senior citizens and to the Medicare Program as a whole.

The large number of doctors who refuse to accept assignment coupled with rapidly escalating doctors' fees, has placed an enormous burden on Medicare recipients. The Medicare Program should serve the elderly as it was intended. We must not allow increased out-of-pocket expenses to serve as a barrier to affordable health care while enriching those in the medical profession who place profit above the obligation to meet human needs.

S. 272. A bill to clarify the meaning of the phrase "program or activity" as applied to educational institutions that are extended Federal financial assistance, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Labor and Human Resources.

CIVIL RIGHTS AMENDMENTS ACT OF 1985

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I am pleased to introduce with the support of the President, legislation to overturn a part of last February's ruling by the Supreme Court in Grove City College versus Bell.

THE GROVE CITY CASE

A major issue presented in the Grove City case, of course was the scope of title IX of the education amendments of 1972 which prohibits sex discrimination in any education program or activity receiving Federal funds. Specifically, the Court was confronted with the question of whether title IX's program or activity language prohibits sex discrimination throughout an education institution or only in those specific programs that actually receive the Federal aid, either directly or indirectly. The Supreme Court adopted the latter interpretation and held that since the only Federal money received by Grove City College came in the form of financial aid to its students, only the college's financial aid office was covered by title IX. It should be noted that the case came to the Supreme Court on purely jurisdictional grounds, and there was never any allegation that Grove City College discriminates.

I need not remind my colleagues of the public controversy sparked by this ruling. Indeed, I was one of the first to express my strong disagreement with the decision. The fear was that the decision would result in a loss of civil rights protection for women in such areas as athletics—which ordinarily are not directly subsidized by Federal funds. The problem was complicated by the fact that three other major civil rights statutes—title VI of the landmark 1964 Civil Rights Act, prohibiting race discrimination; S. 504 of the Rehabilitation Act, prohibiting handicap discrimination; and the age discrimination act—all used the identical program or activity language at issue in Grove City.

THE CIVIL RIGHTS ACT OF 1984

As a consequence, shortly after the decision, I joined a number of my colleagues in introducing a bill intended to broaden the protection against discrimination—not only as it pertains to sex, but also to race, age and handicap—to the entire institution receiving Federal aid, not just its discrete, funded programs. I strongly supported the stated purpose of the bill, which was to overturn the restricted programmatic interpretation announced by the Supreme Court in Grove City. During Senate hearings on the measure, however, substantial concerns were raised that the bill's language was too sweeping and ambiguous, and could result in a dramatic and unforseen expansion of Federal civil rights jurisdiction. On the basis of these concerns, I was unable to continue my support for the bill when the issue arose on the Senate floor during consideration of the continuing resolution. I did, however, initiate and participate with the administration in negotiations between the bill's leading proponents and opponents in an effort to develop a consensus alternative. I did propose a compromise which was acceptable to many Senators involved in the negotiations, as well as the administration. I am reintroducing that proposal today.

THE COMPROMISE

The approach of the bill is simple. It would amend all four laws to make clear that where Federal financial assistance is extended to any educational program or activity of an education institution, the institution itself is to be considered the covered program. The bill also adds a grandfather clause to each law to insure that the Grove City case does not serve as precedent for judicial interpretation of civil rights coverage in other areas, it being the clear intent of this bill that such coverage is to be as broad as it was before the case was decided.

The clause provides that in circumstances not involving education institutions, the meaning of the phrase program or activity remains the same and should be construed without consideration given to the Grove City decision—and also to the Supreme Court's earlier North Haven decision, portions of which the Court relied upon in reaching its holding in Grove City.

Mr. President, I appreciate that many in the Senate are not satisfied with the approach of the bill I introduce today. I know that my distinguished colleague from Utah, Senator HATCH, believes that Congress should also deal with the first part of the Grove City decision which held that financial aid extended to college students, but not directly to the college, triggers title IX coverage, as well as various issues that have arisen in connection with title IX coverage of religiously affiliated institutions and organizations. On the other hand, I understand that my distinguished colleague from Massachusetts, Senator KENNEDY, believes this bill is too narrow, and will be offering his own proposal which will again seek to spell out the scope of coverage for all recipients of Federal funds.

Though I am sensitive to differing viewpoints, I believe that this proposal represents the best possible middleground. It is a realistic proposal which has the President's endorsement and support. It is a responsive proposal to the concerns raised by the Supreme Court's Grove City interepretation of title IX and it is a simple, straight forward proposal which avoids the kinds of problems that led to the defeat of the Civil Rights Act of 1984.

CONCLUSION

Mr. President, I believe the major reason we were unable to pass legislation overturning Grove City in the last Congress was the concern expressed by many of my colleagues that the proposal before the Senate simply went too far. There is no consensus for expanding pre-Grove City civil rights coverage: There is consensus for restoring the status quo. We can pass a bill which remains within pre-Grove City parameters and that is precisely what this bill does.

I am pleased that such a diverse group of Senators have decided to cosponsor the measure, which underscores, I believe, its potential broad base of appeal. This is an important issue for the 99th Congress and I believe the Senate should act on this measure as expeditiously as possible.

Mr. President, we were not quite able to work this out before we adjourned last year. But this is essentially what we agreed upon last year—at least the Republicans agreed—and I think that had it come to a vote, many Democrats would have supported it, too. The approach of the bill is very simple. It would amend all four laws to make certain that where Federal financial assistance is extended to any educational program or activity of an education institution, the institution itself is to be considered the covered program. The bill also adds a grandfather clause to each law to ensure that the Grove City case does not serve as a precedent for judicial interpretation of civil rights coverage in other areas, it being the clear intent of this bill that such coverage is to be as broad as it was before the case was decided.

We have a broad range of sponsors—Senator HATCH of Utah, Senator GRASSLEY of Iowa, Senator WARNER of Virginia, Senator GORTON of Washington, Senator HATFIELD of Oregon, Senator WILSON of California, Senator ABDNOR of South Dakota, Senator SPECTER of Pennsylvania, Senator HEINZ of Pennsylvania, Senator PRESSLER of South Dakota, Senator TRIBLE of Virginia, and Senator SIMPSON of Wyoming are all cosponsors of the legislation.

I hope we will find support from other colleagues on both sides of the aisle, and I also hope that we can move rather quickly on this legislation because it is a matter of great concern.

Let me be the first to suggest that obviously this legislation does not completely satisfy either side of this issue. Some may want more narrow coverage; others may want more expansive coverage. But, for those who really want to simply restore the status Grove City, quo ante, this legislation is it.

I hope we will finally resolve this issue, and do it as one of the first orders of business in the Senate this year. I am advised that the House is moving quickly with a different version of the legislation. I am aware that the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts, Senator KENNEDY, the distinguished Senator from Connecticut, Senator WEICKER, and others had a press conference this morning to announce that they would be introducing their own version of legislation to overrule Grove City.

I have not yet seen their proposal, but I would emphasize one thing. I can pass legislation overturning Grove City; there is not broad consensus to go beyond that. So, I hope when all is said and done, we will move quickly and resolve this issue.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 272

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "Civil Rights Amendments Act of 1985".

SEC. 2. (a) Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"SEC. 908. (a) Notwithstanding the decisions of the Supreme Court in Grove City College et al. v. Bell, Secretary of Education, et al. and in North Haven Board of Education et al. v. Bell, Secretary of Education, et al., the phrase 'program or activity' as used in this title shall, as applied to educational institutions which are extended Federal financial assistance, mean the educational institution.

"(b) In any other application of the provisions of this title, nothing in subsection (a) shall be construed to expand or narrow the meaning of the phrase 'program or activity' and that phrase shall be construed without reference to or consideration of the Supreme Court Decisions in Grove City and North Haven.".

(b) Section 504 of the Rehabilitation Act of 1973 is amended by inserting "(a)" after the section designation and by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(b)(1) Notwithstanding the decisions of the Supreme Court in Grove City College et al. v. Bell, Secretary of Education, et al. and in North Haven Board of Education et al. v. Bell, Secretary of Education, et al., the phrase 'program or activity' as used in this section shall, as applied to educational institutions which are extended Federal financial assistance, mean the educational institution.

"(2) In any other application of the provisions of this section, nothing in paragraph (1) shall be construed to expand or narrow the meaning of the phrase 'program or activity' and that phrase shall be construed without reference to or consideration of the Supreme Court decisions in Grove City and North Haven.".

(c) The Age Discrimination Act of 1975 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"SEC. 310. (a) Notwithstanding the decisions of the Supreme Court in Grove City College et al. v. Bell, Secretary of Education, et al., and in North Haven Board of Education et al. v. Bell, Secretary of Education, et al., the phrase 'program or activity' as used in this title shall, as applied to educational institutions which are extended Federal financial assistance, mean the educational institution.

"(b) In any other application of the provisions of this title, nothing in subsection (a) shall be construed to expand or narrow the meaning of the phrase 'program or activity' and that phrase shall be construed without reference to or consideration of the Supreme Court decisions in Grove City and North Haven.".

"SEC. 606. (a) Notwithstanding the decisions of the Supreme Court in Grove City College et al. v. Bell, Secretary of Education, et al., and in North Haven Board of Education et al. v. Bell, Secretary of Education, et al., the phrase 'program or activity' as used in this title shall, as applied to educational institutions which are extended Federal financial assistance, mean the educational institution.

"(b) In any other application of the provisions of this title, nothing in subsection (a) shall be construed to expand or narrow the meaning of the phrase 'program or activity' and that phrase shall be construed without reference to or consideration of the Supreme Court decisions in Grove City and North Haven.".

● Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I wish to join the distinguished majority leader [Senator DOLE] in the introduction of legislation to overturn the Supreme Court's 1984 decision in Grove City versus Bell. This legislation would establish institutional coverage in the context of title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972. Thus, any educational institution receiving Federal financial assistance would be subject to the provisions of title IX with respect to each of its programs and activities, not merely with respect to those directly receiving such assistance.

In addition, this legislation would extend further than merely overturning Grove City by subjecting such educational institutions to institutional coverage under title VI of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, section 504 of the Rehabilitation Act, and the Age Discrimination Act. Each of these acts, in my legal judgement, has heretofore been construed in a program-specific manner.

Finally, the proposed legislation would state clearly that nothing contained within it is designed to affect the scope of coverage in these other civil rights laws to the extent that they are applicable to other entities, including private businesses, State and local governments, and nonprofit institutions. In other words, the so-called grandfather clause would avoid involving this important legislation in extraneous controversies by clarifying that there is no intent here to alter existing law in any area of law outside of that explicitly set forth here.

Mr. President, let me offer several personal observations about this legislation. First, I would note that I happen to believe that the Supreme Court was legally correct in interpreting title IX in a "program-specific" manner. That, in my view, was the clear intent behind title IX as well as the manner in which it had been interpreted by the courts. My support for this measure is not predicated upon disagreement with the Court's holding but rather upon a belief that the law ought to be changed. If an educational institution is receiving Federal largesse, in the context of any of its programs or activities, I believe that it is appropriate that they be subject to the conditions which attach to such largesse.

Second, I would observe that my support for this legislation does not suggest that I am wholly satisfied with its provisions. Rather, I believe that it reflects an honest, good-faith effort on the part of the majority leader and others—including the Reagan administration—to deal with this difficult controversy.

Finally, I would note that I am also introducing today two separate amendments to the present legislation that I believe to be extremely important ones. The first would establish a partial religious exemption, based upon similar provisions in title VII of the 1964 Civil Rights Act. It would resolve genuine questions of conflict between the dictates of title IX rules and regulations and the religious principles of certain educational institutions in favor of the latter. Existing rules, for example, prohibit such institutions from making distinctions in their student and employee health and leave policies between abortions and other medical procedures. Under the proposed partial exemption, a religiously motivated educational institution would be exempt from this particular requirement if its tenets demanded alternative policies.

The second intended amendment would entirely exempt from title IX coverage an estimated 25 educational institutions which receive absolutely no campus-based educational assistance from the Federal Government and which have done everything possible to maintain their independence from the Federal Government. The only apparent rationale for the coverage of such institutions is that they have students in attendance who themselves receive GI benefits or ADS Pell grants. In order to be exempt from coverage, such institutions additionally would have to have maintained their 501(c)(3) tax-exempt status—denied to some schools because of racially discriminatory policies—and would have had to be free of any other violations of civil rights laws for at least the previous period of 5 years. The schools covered by this amendment are, without exception, open and tolerant institutions with an absence of any history of discrimination. The issue involved in this amendment is not civil rights but educational independence and integrity.

Mr. Chairman, again I offer my congratulations to the majority leader and urge my colleagues to consider this important initiative on an extremely difficult issue.●

By Mrs. KASSEBAUM:

S. 273. A bill for the relief of Mildred C. Eide, of Leavenworth, KS; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

RELIEF OF MILDRED C. EIDE

Mrs. KASSEBAUM. Mr. President, today, I am reintroducing a private bill on behalf of Mildred C. Eide, of Leavenworth, KS. Mrs. Eide, a civilian Government employee for more than 18 years, was curator of the post museum at Forth Leavenworth, KS. On October 14, 1976, Mrs. Eide, then 64 years old, was attacked by an inmate of the U.S. disciplinary barracks serving on a work detail to the museum. The attacker struck Mrs. Eide several times on her face, hurled her repeatedly to the floor and attempted to sexually assault her. As a result of the vicious attack, Mrs. Eide suffered severe physical and psychological injury, including the loss of her left eye and a cardiac-related incident resulting in the implantation of a pacemaker. Mrs. Eide was permanently disabled and could never resume her work. A U.S. district judge awarded Mrs. Eide $1.1 million in actual and punitive damages. However, as all of the responsible parties except the attacker himself claimed Government immunity, the judgment is uncollectible.

Although she receives benefits under the Federal Employees Compensation Act, which approximate her salary had she been able to continue working, there is no compensation for her pain and suffering—her apparently permanent psychological and emotional injuries. The facts of this case are sufficiently unique to prohibit a wide application to other cases and call for some measure of equity and justice.

Mr. President, I hope that prompt action will be taken on this bill.

By Mr. DENTON:

S. 274. A bill to provide for the national security by allowing access to certain Federal criminal history records; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

ANTINUCLEAR TERRORISM ACT OF 1985

Mr. DENTON. Mr. President, I rise today to reintroduce the Antinuclear Terrorism Act of 1985. The bill, which would amend the Atomic Energy Act of 1954, would significantly improve the security of nuclear power facilities by granting power reactor licensees access to certain information in FBI criminal history files. The information would be used to assist in screening prospective nuclear facility employees.

In addition, the bill provides for the conduct of a background investigation on any individual having unescorted access to nuclear power facilities. Such investigations would help to ensure that only individuals who are reliable and trustworthy have access to critically sensitive areas.

Most background checks by nuclear power reactor licensees are limited to State and local files. Unfortunately, those files do not include information about an individual's criminal record, if any, in other parts of the country. By allowing nuclear power reactor operators to have access to the FBI's national files, they would be able to obtain more complete criminal histories. That information is, and should be, essential to determine who will be granted unescorted access to nuclear facilities. Since FBI records are covered by the provisions of the Privacy Act of 1974, all Privacy Act protections and limits on disclosure would apply.

The Nuclear Regulatory Commission advises that there are 85 U.S. nuclear reactor plants that produce and are licensed for full power. There are five that are licensed for fuel loading and low power. Those facilities currently produce approximately 13 percent of all U.S. electrical power. As of December 1984, 37 plants had been granted construction permits. When those plants become operational, nuclear power will provide approximately 25 percent of all our electrical power. Although increasingly vital for energy, nuclear facilities can also present a grave danger to the environment and to human life if they are not managed properly.

The NRC has investigated more than a dozen incidents of suspected sabotage by plant employees. The incidents involved critical valves in the wrong position, miswired electrical equipment, and other problem areas. A Commission report indicated that between 1974 and 1982 there had been 32 possible deliberate acts of damage at 24 operating reactors and reactor construction sites, including the dozen reported since 1980.

Examples of incidents include instrument valves apparently deliberately mispositioned in a way that knocked out the steam generator feed-water pump, thus forcing the operator to reduce power immediately to keep the reactor from going into emergency shutdown. That incident happened on May 1, 1982, at the Salem atomic power station in southern New Jersey. At the Beaver Valley plant near Pittsburgh, a valve that is normally left in an open position was found closed, and the chain and padlock that secured the valve in the open position were missing. With the valve closed, emergency cooling water would not have been available for high-pressure injection into the core.

The NRC reported, "Since there were no indications of unauthorized entry to the sites of these incidents, they are thought to have involved insiders." A 1983 Commission memorandum concluded that, "The major threat of sabotage to a nuclear plant is associated with the insider." More stringent employee screening procedures might have prevented many incidents of that kind.

According to FBI statistics on incidents of terrorism, there is a slight decrease in the number of domestic terrorist incidents; however, the FBI points out that these incidents are more aggravated than those which occurred in prior years. If a nuclear power facility ever became a terrorist target, the consequences could be catastrophic. If we allow nuclear power reactor licensees access to FBI criminal history files, and thus give the Bureau the authority to help screen individuals having unescorted access to sensitive areas of the nuclear plant, we will greatly aid in preventing sabotage from within.

The act would help to ensure the safety of nuclear powerplants, and thereby protect our citizens and our environment. I urge my colleagues to join with me in support of the legislation. It is urgently needed to safeguard the security of the United States and the welfare of the American people.

I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill appear in the RECORD immediately following my remarks.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 274

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "Anti-nuclear Terrorism Act of 1985".

FINDINGS

SEC. 2. The Congress finds that—

(1) the presence of nuclear power facilities, fuel cycle facilities, and nuclear materials in our society represents a potential and grave threat to our national security should terrorists gain access;

(2) the increasing threat of terrorism directed against the United States is greatly enhanced by insider access to nuclear power facilities and nuclear material; and

(3) the Federal Bureau of Investigation should assist in screening persons who have access to nuclear facilities and material.

NATIONAL SECURITY ACCESS

SEC. 3. (a) The Atomic Energy Act of 1954 (42 U.S.C. 2011 et seq.) is amended by adding after section 148 the following new section:

"SEC. 149. FINGERPRINTING FOR SECURITY CLEARANCE.—

"a. Every person in the process of being licensed or licensed pursuant to section 103 or 104b to operate a utilization facility shall require that each individual allowed unescorted access to the facility be fingerprinted. All fingerprints obtained by a licensee as required in the preceding sentence shall be submitted to the Attorney General of the United States through a person or persons designated by the Commission in consultation with the Attorney General for identification and appropriate processing.

Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the applicant for or holder of the license may receive the results of such search from the Attorney General.

"b. The Commission, by rule, may relieve persons from the obligations imposed by this section, upon specified terms, conditions, and periods, if the Commission finds that such action is consistent with its responsibilities to promote the common defense and security and to protect the health and safety of the public. The Commission may also prescribe regulations to establish the conditions for use of information received from the Attorney General or to limit its redissemination.".

(b) The table of contents at the beginning of such Act is amended by inserting after the item for section 148 the following new item:

By Mr. DENTON:

S. 275. A bill to protect the internal security of the United States by creating the offense of terrorism, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

ANTITERRORISM ACT OF 1985

Mr. DENTON. Mr. President, I am today introducing the Antiterrorism Act of 1985, which would help to protect the internal security of the United States by creating the legal offense of terrorism. It defines the crime of terrorism, sets forth penalties, and gives the FBI concurrent jurisdiction with Federal, State, or local law enforcement agencies to investigate terrorist activities.

Surprisingly, terrorism itself is not a crime in the United States as it is in many Western industrialized nations. For example, Greece, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Japan, the United Kingdom, and West Germany all have laws against terrorism.

The FBI indicates that there were 13 terrorist acts in 1984. The examples include bombings at the Washington Navy Yard and at the Motorola and General Electric corporations in New York. Of course, we are all aware of the bombing of the Capitol itself just over a year ago. Such terrorist acts not only damage property, but jeopardize lives as well.

In its definition of terrorism, the bill includes part of the language used in the Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Act (FISA), 50 U.S.C. 1801, without the language prescribing to political or ideological motivation as a necessary element of the crime. In essence, the bill defines the crime of terrorism as involving violent acts that are in violation of the criminal laws of the United States, or of any State and that appear to be intended to intimidate a civilian population, to influence Government policy by intimidation, or to affect the conduct of Government. The FISA definition has been upheld by at least two courts against challenges that it is unconstitutionally vague and involves the courts in making delicate political judgments for which they are not suited.

The bill provides for penalties ranging from 5 years imprisonment for someone who has been convicted of threatening to commit an act of terrorism, to the death penalty, for terrorist acts that kill people.

In addition, the bill allows for concurrent investigatory jurisdiction to be shared between the FBI and the appropriate Federal, State, or local law enforcement agency. That is, the Federal, State, or local agency may, by consent, give the FBI primary jurisdiction to investigate violations of the law.

I am sensitive to the fact that any legislation must strike a balance between the need to punish terrorists and the need to protect the constitutional rights of all Americans, especially the right to dissent. I believe that the bill strikes that balance.

Terrorism is a threat that we face now. Terrorists must be made aware that we will not tolerate their activities.

I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill appear in the RECORD immediately following my remarks.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 275

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SHORT TITLE

SECTION 1. This Act may be cited as the "Antiterrorism Act of 1985".

STATEMENT OF FINDINGS AND PURPOSE

SEC. 2. (a) The Congress finds and declares that terrorism is—

(1) an offense which results in the killing of innocent persons, the loss of civil rights through intimidation and coercion, and the loss of property;

(2) a crime that has as its goal the furtherance of a political or ideological objective by violent means;

(3) directed against the orderly and democratic conduct and security of all people;

(4) a threat to our national security and our national interests;

(5) a burden on commerce or threat affecting the free flow of interstate commerce;

(6) a threat to the safety of the President of the United States and Vice President of the United States, the Congress, the Supreme Court, and the Government of the United States as a whole; and

(7) a threat to the continued and effective operation of the Government of the United States and of the government of each State as guaranteed by Article IV of the Constitution.

(b) It is the purpose of this Act to—

(1) protect the internal security of the United States by creating the offense of terrorism; and

(2) grant to the Federal Government and the Federal Bureau of Investigation under appropriate circumstances primary investigative jurisdiction over the crime of terrorism.

OFFENSE OF TERRORISM

SEC. 3. (a) Title 18 of the United States Code is amended by adding after chapter 113 the following new chapter:

"CHAPTER 113A.—TERRORISM

"Sec.
"2331. Definition.
"2332. Offense.
"2333. Jurisdiction to investigate.

"§ 2331. Definition

"For purposes of this chapter, the term 'terrorism' means activity that:

(1) involves violent acts or acts dangerous to human life that are a violation of the criminal laws of the United States or of any State, or that would be a criminal violation if committed within the jurisdiction of the United States or any State; and

(2) appears to be intended—

(A) to intimidate or coerce a civilian population;

(B) to influence the policy of a government by intimidation or coercion; or

(C) to affect the conduct of a government by assassination or kidnapping.

"§ 2332. Offense

"(a) Whoever commits or procures the commission of an act of terrorism within the United States or any State, territory, possession, or district shall be punished (1) by death, if the death of any person results from the commission of the act of terrorism, and if the verdict of the jury shall so recommend, or (2) by imprisonment for a term of years not less than 20, or for life, or for life without possibilty of parole.

"(b) Whoever attempts to commit an act of terrorism within the United States or any State, territory, possession, or district shall be punished (1) by death, if the death of any person results from commission of the attempt, and if the verdict of the jury so recommend, or (2) by imprisonment for not less than 10 years nor more than 20.

"(c) Whoever threatens to commit an act of terrorism within the United States or any State, territory, possession, or district shall be punished by imprisonment for not less than 5 years nor more than 10 years.

"(d) In the case of a second or subsequent conviction under subsection (a) or (b), such person shall be sentenced to a term of life imprisonment without possibility of parole, or death, if the death of any person results from the commission or attempted commission of the act of terrorism.

"(e)(1) A person shall be subjected to the penalty of death for any offense prohibited by this section only if a hearing is held in accordance with this subsection.

"(2) When a defendant is found guilty of or pleads guilty to an offense under this section for which one of the sentences provided is death, the judge who presided at the trial or before whom the guilty plea was entered shall conduct a separate sentencing hearing to determine the existence or nonexistence of the factors set forth in paragraphs (6) and (7), for the purpose of determining the sentence to be imposed. The hearing shall not be held if the Government stipulates that none of the aggravating factors set forth in paragraph (7) exists or that one or more of the mitigating factors set forth in paragraph (6) exists. The hearings shall be conducted—

"(A) before the jury which determined the defendant's guilt;

"(B) before a jury impaneled for the purpose of the hearing if—

"(i) the defendant was convicted upon a plea of guilty;

"(ii) the defendant was convicted after a trial before the court sitting without a jury; or

"(iii) the jury which determined the defendant's guilt has been discharged by the court for good cause; or

"(C) before the court alone, upon the motion of the defendant and with the approval of the court and of the Government.

"(3) In the sentencing hearing the court shall disclose to the defendant or his counsel all material contained in any presentence report, if one has been prepared, except such material as the court determines is required to be withheld for the protection of human life or for the protection of the national security. Any presentence information withheld from the defendant shall not be considered in determining the existence or the nonexistence of the factors set forth in paragraph (6) or (7). Any information relevant to any of the mitigating factors set forth in paragraph (6) may be presented by either the Government or the defendant, regardless of its admissibility under the rules governing admission of evidence at criminal trials; but the admissibility of information relevant to any of the aggravating factors set forth in paragraph (7) shall be governed by the rules governing the admission of evidence at criminal trials. The Government and the defendant shall be permitted to rebut any information received at the hearing, and shall be given fair opportunity to present argument as to the adequacy of the information to establish the existence of any of the factors set forth in paragraph (6) or (7). The burden of establishing the existence of any of the factors set forth in paragraph (7) is on the Government. The burden of establishing the existence of any of the factors set forth in paragraph (6) is on the defendant.

"(4) The jury, or if there is no jury, the court shall return a special verdict setting forth its findings as to the existence or nonexistence of each of the factors set forth in paragraph (6) and as to existence or nonexistence of each of the factors set forth in paragraph (7).

"(5) If the jury or, if there is no jury, the court finds by a preponderance of the information that one or more of the factors set forth in paragraph (7) exists and that none of the factors set forth in paragraph (6) exists, the court shall sentence the defendant to death. If the jury or, if there is no jury, the court finds that none of the aggravating factors set forth in paragraph (7) exists, or finds that one or more of the mitigating factors set forth in paragraph (6) exists, the court shall not sentence the defendant to death but shall impose any other sentence provided for the offense for which the defendant was convicted.

"(6) The court shall not impose the sentence of death on the defendant if the jury or, if there is no jury, the court finds by a special verdict as provided in paragraph (4) that at the time of the offense—

"(A) he was under the age of eighteen;

"(B) his capacity to appreciate the wrongfulness of his conduct or to conform his conduct to the requirements of law was significantly impaired, but not so impaired as to constitute a defense to prosecution;

"(C) he was under unusual and substantial duress, although not such duress as to constitute a defense to prosecution;

"(D) he was a principal (as defined in section 27(a) of title 18 of the United States Code (18 U.S.C. 27(a))) in the offense, which was committed by another, but his participation was relatively minor, although not so minor as to constitute a defense to prosecution; or

"(E) he could not reasonably have foreseen that his conduct in the course of the commission of the offense for which he was convicted would cause, or would create a grave risk of causing death to another person.

"(7) If no factor set forth in paragraph (6) is present, the court shall impose the sentence of death on the defendant if the jury, or, if there is no jury, the court finds by a special verdict as provided in paragraph (4) that the death of another person resulted from the commission or attempted commission of the offense, and

"(A) the defendant has been convicted of another Federal or State offense (committed either before or at the time of the commission or attempted commission of the offense) for which a sentence of life imprisonment or death was imposable;

"(B) the defendant has previously been convicted of two or more Federal or State offenses with a penalty of more than one year imprisonment (committed on different occasions before the time of the commission or attempted commission of the offense), involving the infliction of serious bodily injury upon another person;

"(C) in the commission or attempted commission of the offense, the defendant knowingly created a grave risk of death to another person in addition to the victim of the offense or attempted offense; or

"(D) the defendant committed or attempted to commit the offense in an especially heinous, cruel, or depraved manner.

"§ 2333. Jurisdiction to investigate

"The Federal Bureau of Investigation should defer the investigation of violations of this chapter to the appropriate Federal, State, or local law enforcement agency. However, if after consultation between the Federal, State, or local law enforcement agency and the Bureau, the agency requests or concurs in the decision that primary investigation be undertaken by the Bureau, the Bureau shall assume full responsibility for directing the investigation.".

By Mr. DENTON:

S. 276. A bill to amend the Freedom of Information Act to provide for the protection from disclosure of records related to terrorism and foreign counterintelligence; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

PROTECTION FROM DISCLOSURE OF RECORDS RELATING TO TERRORISM AND FOREIGN COUNTERINTELLIGENCE

Mr. DENTON. Mr. President I rise today to reintroduce a bill to amend the Freedom of Information Act [FOIA] to provide for the protection from disclosure of records related to terrorism and foreign counterintelligence. The legislation would also delete a current provision of 5 U.S.C. section 552 that requires the release of segregable portions of a record.

On December 10, 1981, FBI Director William Webster testified before the Subcommittee on the Constitution of the Senate Judiciary Committee. He described in detail cases in which hostile foreign intelligence services, members of terrorist groups, and others have used the FOIA to identify FBI informants and frustrate FBI investigations. Judge Webster revealed that, as early as 1979 and for that year alone, there were 125 cases where individuals refused to provide the FBI with information because of fears that their names would be released under an FOIA request.

At a hearing on April 3, 1984, before the same subcommittee, W. Raymond Wannall, former Assistant Director of the FBI, noted that he had observed the debilitatiing effects on our national security of the 1974 amendments to the FOIA and the Privacy Act.

I firmly believe that, in order to deal more effectively with terrorists and foreign intelligence operatives who have become increasingly more sophisticated in their intelligence-gathering methods and who rejoice at the ease with which they are able to obtain sensitive information in our open, democratic society, we need to close the loopholes in the law that allow them access to information they should not have.

Moreover, we need to rectify the chilling effect that FOIA requests have on informants who fear exposure through information released under the act. Those informants have become increasingly hestitant about cooperating with our law enforcement agencies.

Finally, we should deal with the fact that, in some cases the response to an FOIA request amounts to an acknowledgement by the FBI that a file exists on a specific subject and alerts hostile intelligence services that an investigation is under way or has taken place.

Because of the need to act quickly to protect highly sensitive information gathered for foreign counterintelligence purposes, I am reintroducing my legislation, offered in the last Congress, to amend the Freedom of Information Act.

The need for an FOIA exemption for information about terrorism and foreign counterintelligence was recognized during the Carter administration, when then Attorney General Benjamin Civiletti proposed establishing a moratorium on access through the Freedom of Information Act to any records related to terrorism, organized crime, or foreign counterintelligence.

The need for the exemptions was also identified by the Reagan administration when it undertook its comprehensive review of the Freedom of Information Act during the 97th Congress. Provisions for the exemptions for terrorism and foreign counterintelligence information were included in S. 1751, which was introduced by my distinguished colleague from Utah, Mr. HATCH, on behalf of the administration on October 20, 1981. Moreover, the Judiciary Subcommittee on the Constitution incorporation exemptions on terrorism and foreign counterintelligence from S. 1751, the Freedom of Information Reform Act of 1981, into S. 1730, which Senator HATCH had introduced 2 weeks earlier.

After extensive hearings, the Subcommittee on the Constitution approved S. 1730 on December 14, 1981, including the exemptions for terrorism and foreign counterintelligence information. During the course of seven hearings—three more, incidentally, than were held in 1965 when the FOIA was originally passed—the subcommittee heard testimony from more than 50 witnesses who represented nearly every conceivable viewpoint about the strengths and weaknesses of the act.

In the 98th Congress when Senator HATCH reintroduced S. 1751 and S. 774, but without the terrorism and foreign counterintelligence exemptions, I advised my colleagues on the Judiciary Committee that, although I would support S. 774 as a compromise measure, the Senate and House needed to act quickly to protect information gathered for foreign counterintelligence purposes. For that reason, I introduced S. 2395.

Now, in the 99th Congress, Senator HATCH has reintroduced S. 774 as the Freedom of Information Reform Act (S. 150), a bill that I have cosponsored even though it lacks the necessary terrorism and foreign counterintelligence exemptions. The bill that I introduced today completes the necessary reform proposed in S. 150.

The legislation also addresses the problem of segregability. As the law stands, records requested under the FOIA must be reviewed line-by-line to determine releaseability. Tht kind of review frequently requires the release of often seemingly innocuous information. One such piece, which, when pieced together with other information, could conceivably be the information a hostile intelligence-gathering team needs to complete its mosaic.

The time has come to stop what amounts to giving help to terrorists and foreign intelligence services of hostile governments through provisions in a law that was never intended to be used for that purpose. I ask my colleagues to support amending the FOIA.

I ask unanimous consent that the full text of the bill be printed in the RECORD immediately following my statement.

Thank you, Mr. President.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 277. A bill to reauthorize and amend the Indian Health Care Improvement Act, and for other purposes; to the Select Committee on Indian Affairs.

INDIAN HEALTH CARE IMPROVEMENT ACT AMENDMENTS

● Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce the Indian Health Care Amendments of 1985, a bill to reauthorize the Indian Health Care Improvement Act of 1976 through fiscal year 1989. I am joined in this effort by my colleagues from both sides of the aisle, calling for Senate consideration of this urgently needed legislation which extends many of the important programs that seek to improve the poor health status of this country's native Americans. The Federal responsibility for Indian health care reflected in this legislation, recognizes the legal commitments and treaties made with Indian tribes—obligations undertaken by the Federal Government during the early days of our westward expansion, in exchange for the cession of vast amounts of Indian lands to the United States.

As many here know, Indian health care improvement legislation introduced in the last Congress met with a fate similar to other major health initiatives from the 98th Congress—a Presidential veto. The veto of the Indian health bill was premised upon a demonstration program in the State of Montana and a congressionally appointed commission on the organizational placement of the Indian Health Service. And, although there was considerable opposition to the basis for the President's veto, neither provision is contained in the bill that I am introducing today. Rather, we are hopeful that the administration will demonstrate the strong support for Indian health programs that President Reagan expressed in his veto message, and will work closely with interested Members of the Senate to assure that this most important Indian health legislation will be approved by the President in 1985.

The need to continue targeting Federal resources to address the health problems of native Americans has been well-documented. Indian people suffer the lowest health status of all Americans. The possibility that an Indian child, born today, will not survive infancy is 11 percent greater than his non-Indian counterpart. His mother will also face greater odds against surviving her pregnancy than do other American mothers. And, should that Indian child survive infancy, his chances of death from tuberculosis are six times that of other U.S. citizens, and five times as great for death from alcoholism. While most Americans—66.4 percent—will live to age 65 or older, the Indian child born today has only a 35-percent chance of reaching age 65. The fact is that 40 percent of all Indian people will die before they reach age 45. These are realities that we cannot afford to ignore.

The Indian Health Care Amendments of 1985 propose a modest investment in improving the health status of people who comprise this country's most vulnerable population in terms of poor nutrition, continued exposure to unsafe water supplies and inadequate sanitation facilities, and who suffer from a greater incidence of kidney disease, hypertension, diabetes, tuberculosis, pneumonia, and influenza than all other American citizens. The bill I introduce today extends the major health care programs that are designed to combat these conditions, and establishes a new policy emphasis on health promotion and disease prevention. I urge my colleagues to consider this legislation carefully, for it will clearly determine the future of this country's first Americans.

I ask unanimous consent that the bill be printed in the RECORD following my statement.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

HEALTH PROFESSIONS SCHOLARSHIP PROGRAM

SEC. 104. Title I is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sections:

"INDIAN HEALTH PROFESSIONS SCHOLARSHIPS

"SEC. 107. (a) In order to provide health professionals to Indian communities, the Secretary, acting through the Service and in accordance with this section, shall make scholarship grants to Indians who are enrolled full time in schools of medicine, osteopathy, dentistry, veterinary medicine, nursing, optometry, clinical psychology, public health, and allied health professions. Such scholarships shall be designated Indian Health Scholarships and shall be made in accordance with section 338A of the Public Health Service Act (42 U.S.C. 254l) except as provided in subsection (b) of this section.

"(b)(1) The Secretary, acting through the Service, shall determine who shall receive such scholarships and shall determine the distribution of such scholarships among such health professions on the basis of the relative needs of Indians for additional service in such health professions.

"(2) An individual shall be eligible for a scholarship under subsection (a) in any year in which such individual is enrolled full time in a health-profession school referred to in subsection (a).

"(3) The active duty service obligation prescribed under section 338B of the Public Health Service Act (42 U.S.C. 254m) shall be met by a recipient of an Indian Health Scholarship by service in the Indian Health Service, including service under a contract under the Indian Self-Determination and Education Assistance Act (Public Law 93-638); in a program assisted under title V of this Act; or in the private practice of his profession if, as determined by the Secretary, in accordance with guidelines promulgated by the Secretary, such practice is situated in a physician or other health professional shortage area and addresses the health care needs of a substantial number of Indians.

"(c) For the purpose of this section, the term 'Indian' has the same meaning given that term by subsection (c) of section 4 of this Act, including all individuals described in clauses (1) through (4) of that subsection.

"(d) There are authorized to be appropriated for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this section—

"(1) $7,000,000 for fiscal year 1986,
"(2) $8,100,000 for fiscal year 1987,
"(3) $9,234,000 for fiscal year 1988, and
"(4) $10,300,000 for fiscal year 1989.

"COMMUNITY HEALTH REPRESENTATIVE PROGRAM

"SEC. 108. (a) Under the authority of the Act of November 2, 1921 (25 U.S.C. 13), popularly known as the Snyder Act, the Secretary shall maintain a Community Health Representative Program under which the Service—

"(1) provides for the training of Indians as health paraprofessionals, and

"(2) uses such paraprofessionals in the provision of health care to Indian communities.

"(b) The Secretary, acting through the Community Health Representative Program of the Service, shall—

"(1) provide a high standard of paraprofessional training to Community Health Representatives to ensure that the Community Health Representatives provide quality health care to the Indian communities served by such Program, and

"(2) in order to provide such training, develop a curriculum that—

"(A) combines education in the theory of health care with supervised practical experience in the provision of health care,

"(B) provides instruction and practical experience in health promotion and disease prevention activities, particularly—

"(i) nutrition,
"(ii) physical fitness,
"(iii) weight control,
"(iv) cessation of tobacco smoking,
"(v) stress management,
"(vi) control of alcohol and drug abuse,
"(vii) control of high blood pressure, and
"(viii) prevention of lifestyle-related accidents, and

"(C) provides instruction in the latest and most effective social, educational, and behavioral approaches to the establishment and maintenance of good health habits,

"(3) develop a system which identifies the needs of Community Health Representatives for continuing education in health care, health promotion, and disease prevention and develop programs that meet the needs for such continuing education,

"(4) develop and maintain a system that provides close supervision of Community Health Representatives,

"(5) develop a system under which the work of Community Health Representatives is reviewed and evaluated,

"(6) ensure that the provision of health care, health promotion, and disease prevention activities are consistent with the traditional health care practices and cultural values of the Indian tribes served by such Program.".

TITLE II—HEALTH SERVICES

IMPROVEMENT OF INDIAN HEALTH STATUS

SEC. 201. (a) Section 201 is amended to read as follows:

"INDIAN HEALTH CARE IMPROVEMENT FUND

"SEC. 201. (a)(1) To further implement the national policy of raising the health status of Indians to a zero level of deficiency as defined in subsection (c) by eliminating backlogs in health care services and meeting unmet Indian health needs as soon as possible and in an equitable manner, the Secretary is authorized to expend, through the Service, over the 4-year period beginning with fiscal year 1986 the amounts authorized to be appropriated by subsection (h) of this section. Funds requested under this section shall be separately stated in the Service budget request as submitted to Congress under section 1105 of title 31, United States Code, and funds appropriated under this section shall not be used to offset or limit appropriations made to the Service under authority of the Act of November 2, 1921 (25 U.S.C. 13) or any other law. Funds appropriated under this section in any fiscal year shall be included in the base budget of the Service for the purpose of determining appropriations under this section in subsequent fiscal years.

"(2) Nothing in this section is intended to diminish the primary responsibility of the Service to eliminate existing backlogs in unmet health care needs of the Service, nor is it intended to discourage the Service from undertaking additional efforts to achieve parity among tribes.

"(b)(1) Funds appropriated under this section shall be expended to augment the ability of the Service to meet the following health service responsibilities—

"(A) clinical care (direct or indirect);

"(B) preventive health;

"(C) dental care (direct or indirect);

"(D) mental health, including community mental health services, inpatient mental health services, dormitory mental health services, therapeutic and residential treatment centers, and training of traditional Indian practitioners;

"(E) emergency medical services;

"(F) treatment and control of, and rehabilitative care related to, alcoholism among Indians; and

"(G) maintenance and repair.

"(2) Where any funds allocated to a tribe or service unit are used for a contract under the Indian Self-Determination and Education Assistance Act, not more than 15 percent of such funds shall be used for health planning, training, technical assistance, and other administrative support functions.

"(3) To the extent that all or a portion of the funds appropriated under subsection (h) are required to raise tribes which are below a Level II deficiency, as defined in subsection (c)(2), to such level, such funds shall not be available for allocation to tribes at or above such level. Funds appropriated under this section may be allocated on a service unit basis but must be used by each service unit to raise the deficiency level of each tribe served by such service unit. Apportionment of a tribe's or service unit's allocation of funds among the health service responsibilities listed in paragraph (1) shall be determined by the Service and the affected Indian tribes.

"(c)(1) Within 60 days of the date of enactment of the Indian Health Care Amendments of 1985, the Secretary shall submit to the Congress the current health services priority system report of the Service for each tribe or service unit including service units serving newly recognized or acknowledged tribes. Such report shall contain—

"(A) the methodology for determining tribal health resources deficiencies; the level of health resources deficiency for each tribe; the amount of funds necessary to raise all tribes below a Level II deficiency to a Level II deficiency; the amount of funds necessary to raise all tribes below a Level I deficiency to a Level I deficiency; and the amount of funds necessary to raise all tribes to a zero level of deficiency; and

"(B) an estimate of—

"(i) the amount of health service funds appropriated under the authority of this or any other Act for the preceding fiscal year which is allocated to each service unit, tribe, or comparable entity; and

"(ii) the number of Indians eligible for health services in each service unit or tribe.

"(2) For purposes of this section, the health resources deficiency levels of a tribe are as follows:

"Level I—0 to 20 percent deficiency,

"Level II—21 to 40 percent deficiency,

"Level III—41 to 60 percent deficiency,

"Level IV—61 to 80 percent deficiency, and

"Level V—81 to 100 percent deficiency.

"(3) The Secretary shall establish by regulation procedures which allow any Indian tribe to petition the Secretary for a review of any determination of the health resources deficiency level of such tribe.

"(d) Upon enactment of the Indian Health Care Amendments of 1985, the Secretary, acting through the Service, shall take all necessary action, in cooperation with each Indian tribe, to bring current the tribal specific health plans which were developed as a part of the plan required by section 703 and which formed the basis for such plan in response to the requirements of section 701. These plans shall be based upon the methodology submitted under subsection (c), as may be further modified through tribal consultation, and shall form the basis for the health services priority system report to be submitted by the Secretary for fiscal years 1986, 1987, 1988, and 1989. Such reports shall be submitted to the Congress not more than thirty days after the submission of the annual budget for such fiscal years to the Congress by the President.

"(e) The Secretary, acting through the Service, shall expend directly or by contract, including contracts under the Indian Self-Determination and Education Assistance Act (Public Law 93-638), not less than 1 percent of the funds appropriated under subsection (h) for research in the areas of Indian health care set out in subparagraphs (A) through (F) of subsection (b)(1).

"(f) Programs administered by any Indian tribe or tribal organization under the authority of the Indian Self-Determination and Education Assistance Act shall be eligible for funds appropriated pursuant to subsection (h) on an equal basis with programs that are administered directly by the Indian Health Service.

"(g) The President shall include with the budget submitted under section 1105 of title 31, United States Code, for each fiscal year a separate statement which specifies the total amount obligated or expended in the most recently completed fiscal year to carry out subsection (d) and to carry out each of the subparagraphs of subsection (b)(1).

"(h) There are authorized to be appropriated for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this section—

"(1) $29,000,000 for fiscal year 1986,

"(2) $28,000,000 for fiscal year 1987,

"(3) $46,000,000 for fiscal year 1988, and

"(4) $46,000,000 for fiscal year 1989.

Any funds appropriated under this subsection shall be designated as the 'Indian Health Care Improvement Fund'.".

(b) Section 4 (25 U.S.C. 1603) is amended by striking out subsections (i), (j), and (k), and by inserting in lieu thereof the following new subsections:

"(i) 'Area office' means an administrative entity including a program office, within the Indian Health Service through which services and funds are provided to the service units within a defined geographical area; and

"(j) 'Service unit' means an administrative entity within the Indian Health Service or a tribe or tribal organization operating health care programs or facilities with funds from the Service under the Indian Self-Determination Act through which services are provided, directly and by contract, to the eligible Indian population within a defined geographic area.".

CATASTROPHIC HEALTH PROGRAM

SEC. 202. Title II is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"CATASTROPHIC HEALTH EMERGENCY FUND

"SEC. 202. (a) There is established an Indian Catastrophic Health Emergency Fund (hereinafter in this section referred to as the 'Fund') to be administered by the Secretary, acting through the Service, solely for the purpose of meeting the extraordinary medical costs associated with the treatment of victims of disasters or catastrophic illnesses falling within the responsibility of the Service. The Fund shall be administered by the central office of the Service and shall not be allocated, apportioned, or delegated on a service unit or area office basis. Funds appropriated under subsection (c) shall not be used to offset or limit appropriations made to the Service under authority of the Act of November 2, 1921 (25 U.S.C. 13) or any other law. No part of the Fund or its administration shall be subject to contract or grant under any law, including the Indian Self-Determination and Education Assistance Act (Public Law 93-638).

"(b) The Secretary shall, through the promulgation of regulations consistent with the provisions of this section—

"(1) establish a definition of disasters and catastrophic illnesses for which the cost of treatment, whether provided under contract or directly by the Service, would qualify for payment from the Fund; and which shall provide that a service unit shall not be eligible for reimbursement for the cost of treatment from the Fund until its cost of treating any victim of such catastrophic illness or disaster shall have reached a certain threshold cost which the Secretary shall establish at not less than $10,000 or not more than $20,000;

"(2) establish a procedure for the reimbursement of service units or facilities rendering treatment or, whenever otherwise authorized by the Service, the reimbursement of non-Service facilities or providers rendering treatment;

"(3) establish a procedure for payment from the Fund where the exigencies of the medical circumstances warrant treatment prior to the authorization of such treatment by the Service; and

"(4) establish a procedure that will assure that no payment shall be made from the Fund to any provider to the extent that the provider is eligible to receive payment for the treatment from any other Federal, State, local, or private source of reimbursement for which the patient is eligible or by which the patient is covered.

"(c) There are authorized to be appropriated for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this section—

(1) $12,000,000 for fiscal year 1986, and

(2) for each of the fiscal years 1987, 1988, and 1989, such sums may be necessary to maintain the Fund at $12,000,000.

Funds appropriated under this subsection shall remain available until expended.

COMPETITIVE PROCUREMENT

SEC. 203. Title II is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"COMPETITIVE PROCUREMENT

"SEC. 203. (a) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Secretary, acting through the Service, may waive any statutory or administrative requirement for competitive procurement of health services if, in the judgment of the Chief Medical Officer who will have jurisdiction over such health services, such competitive procurement would compromise the accessibility, quality, and continuity of health services or would not result in any appreciable competition or savings.

"(b) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Secretary, acting through the Service, shall reject any bid submitted under any statutory or administrative requirement for competitive procurement of health services upon the certification of the Chief Medical Officer who will have jurisdiction over such health services that acceptance of such bid would compromise the accessibility, quality, and continuity of health services.".

HEALTH PROMOTION AND DISEASE PREVENTION

SEC. 204. (a) The Congress finds that—

(1) health promotion and disease prevention activities will—

(A) improve the health and well being of Indians, and

(B) reduce the expenses for medical care of Indians,

(2) health promotion and disease prevention activities should be undertaken by the coordinated efforts of Federal, State, local, and tribal governments, and

(3) in addition to the provision of primary health care, the Indian Health Service should provide health promotion and disease prevention services to Indians.

(b) Section 4 of the Indian Health Care Improvement Act (25 U.S.C. 1603), as amended by section 201(b) of this Act, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsections:

"(k) 'Health promotion' includes—

"(1) cessation of tobacco smoking,

"(2) reduction in the misuse of alcohol and drugs,

"(3) improvement of nutrition,

"(4) improvement in physical fitness, and

"(5) control of stress.

"(l) 'Disease prevention' includes—

"(1) immunizations,

"(2) control of high blood pressure,

"(3) control of sexually transmittable diseases,

"(4) family planning,

"(5) pregnancy and infant care,

"(6) control of toxic agents,

"(7) occupational safety and health,

"(8) accident prevention,

"(9) fluoridation of water, and

"(10) control of infectious agents.".

(c) Title II (25 U.S.C. 1621, et seq.) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"HEALTH PROMOTION AND DISEASE PREVENTION SERVICES

"SEC. 204. (a) The Secretary, acting through the Service, shall provide health promotion and disease prevention services to Indians.

"(b) The Secretary shall include in each health services priority system report which is required under section 201(d) an evaluation of—

"(1) the health promotion and disease prevention needs of Indians identified in tribal specific health plans,

"(2) the health promotion and disease prevention activities which would best meet such needs,

"(3) the resources which would be required to enable the Service to undertake the health promotion and disease prevention activities necessary to meet such needs,

"(4) the resources currently available to the Service which could be used to undertake such activities.

"(b) Under regulations, the Secretary shall require that each Indian tribe include within any tribal specific health plan that such tribe is required to submit to the Secretary a comprehensive plan developed by such tribe for health promotion and disease prevention among members of such tribe.

"(c) The Secretary, acting through the Service, shall—

"(1) develop from tribal specific health plans a comprehensive plan for the provision by the Service of health promotion and disease prevention services to Indians, and

"(2) establish a schedule for the provision of health promotion and disease prevention services by the Service.".

TITLE III—HEALTH FACILITIES

SEC. 301. Section 301 (25 U.S.C. 1631) is amended to read as follows:

"HEALTH FACILITIES

"SEC. 301. (a)(1) Within sixty days after the date of enactment of the Indian Health Care Amendments of 1985, the Secretary shall submit to the Congress a report which shall set forth the current health facilities priority system of the Service and which shall include the planning, design, construction, or renovation needs for the ten top priority inpatient care facilities and the ten top priority ambulatory care facilities together with required staff quarters, the justification for such priority listings, and the projected cost of such projects. The report shall also include the methodology adopted by the Service in establishing priorities under its health facilities priority system.

"(2)(A) Within thirty days of the submission of the annual budget to the Congress by the President for each of the fiscal years 1986, 1987, 1988, and 1989, the Secretary shall submit to the Congress a report which complies with the requirements of paragraph (1).

"(B) In preparing such report in such fiscal years, the Service shall consult with tribes and tribal organizations including those tribes or tribal organizations operating health programs or facilities with funds from the Service under the Indian Self-Determination Act, and shall review the needs of these tribes and tribal organizations for inpatient and outpatient facilities, including their needs for renovation and expansion of existing facilities.

"(3) The Service shall use the same criteria for each of the fiscal years 1986, 1987, 1988, and 1989 to evaluate the needs of facilities operated under contract under the Indian Self-Determination Act as it uses to evaluate the needs of facilities operated directly by the Service in such fiscal years.

"(4) The Secretary shall ensure that the planning, design, construction, and renovation needs of Service and non-Service facilities which are the subject of a contract for health services entered into under the Indian Self-Determination and Education Assistance Act are fully and equitably integrated into the development of the health facility priority system.".

"(b)(1) All funds appropriated under the Act of November 2, 1921 (25 U.S.C. 13) for the planning, design, construction, or renovation of health facilities for the benefit of a tribe or tribes may be used for the expenses of such activities incurred by such tribe or tribes under contracts or grants under the Indian Self-Determination Act. The United States shall hold the title to any facility constructed under a grant provided under this section.

"(2) Any tribal contractor or grantee shall expend the funds described in paragraph (1) for the purpose for which appropriated pursuant to rules and regulations established by the Secretary for contracting and procurement.

"(c) Prior to the expenditure of, or the making of any firm commitment to expend, any funds appropriated for facilities planning and design, construction, or renovation under the Act of November 2, 1921 (25 U.S.C. 13), the Secretary, acting through the Service, shall—

"(1) consult with any Indian tribe that would be significantly affected by such expenditure for the purpose of determining and, wherever practicable, honoring tribal preferences concerning size, location, type, and other characteristics of any facility on which such expenditure is to be made, and

"(2) ensure, wherever practicable, that such facility, not later than one year after its construction or renovation, shall meet the standards of the Joint Commission on Accreditation of Hospitals.

"(d) The Secretary shall not close, under any existing authority, any Service hospital or other outpatient health care facility or any portion thereof unless he has submitted to the Congress at least one year prior to the planned closure date an evaluation of the impact of the proposed action which shall include the following factors—

"(1) accessibility of alternative health care resources for the service population;

"(2) cost-effectiveness of the closure;

"(3) quality of health care to be provided to the service population after closure;

"(4) availability of contract health care funds to maintain current levels of service; and

"(5) the views of the Indian tribe or tribes served by such facility on the planned closure.

"(e) The President shall include with the budget submitted under section 1105 of title 31, United States Code, for each of the fiscal years 1986, 1987, 1988, and 1989, planning information documents for the construction of 10 Indian health facilities which—

"(1) comply with applicable construction standards, and

"(2) have been approved by the Secretary.".

SAFE WATER AND SANITARY WASTE DISPOSAL FACILITIES

SEC. 302. Section 302 (25 U.S.C. 1632) is amended to read as follows:

"SAFE WATER AND SANITARY WASTE DISPOSAL FACILITIES

"SEC. 302. (a)(1) Congress finds that—

"(A) the provision of safe water supply and sanitary sewage and solid waste disposal systems is primarily a health consideration and function;

"(B) Indian people suffer an inordinately high incidence of disease, injury, and illness directly attributable to the absence or inadequacy of such facilities;

"(C) the long-term cost to the United States of treating and curing such disease, injury, and illness is substantially greater than the short-term cost of providing such facilities and other preventive health measures;

"(D) many Indian homes and communities still lack safe water supply and sanitary sewage and solid waste disposal facilities; and

"(E) it is in the interest of the United States and it is the policy of the United States that all Indian communities and Indian homes, new and existing, be provided with safe and adequate water supply and sanitary sewage and solid waste disposal facilities as soon as possible.

"(2) Congress reaffirms the primary responsibility and authority of the Service to provide the necessary sanitation facilities and services as provided in section 7 of the Act of August 5, 1954 (42 U.S.C. 2004a).

"(b) Beginning in fiscal year 1986, the Secretary, acting through the Service, shall develop and begin implementation of a 10-year plan to provide safe water supply and sanitary sewage and solid waste disposal facilities to existing Indian homes and communities and to new and renovated Indian homes.

"(c)(1) Within 60 days of the date of the enactment of the Indian Health Care Amendments of 1985, the Secretary shall report to Congress on the Service's sanitation facilities priority system. The Secretary, in preparing such report, shall uniformly apply the methodology for determining sanitation deficiencies to all Indian tribes. Such report shall identify the methodology for determining sanitation deficiencies; the level of deficiency for each Indian community or tribe; the amount of funds necessary to raise all communities to a level I deficiency; and the amount of funds necessary to raise all communities or tribes to a zero level of deficiency. For the purpose of such report—

"(A) a level I deficiency means a sanitation system which complies with all applicable water supply and pollution control laws and regulations in which the defined deficiencies consist of routine replacement, repair, or maintenance needs;

"(B) a level II deficiency means a sanitation system which complies with all applicable water supply and pollution control laws and regulations in which the defined deficiencies consist of capital improvements necessary to improve the facilities to meet the needs of the communities for domestic sanitation facilities;

"(C) a level III deficiency means a sanitation system which has an inadequate or partial water supply and sewage disposal facility which does not comply with applicable water supply and pollution control laws and regulations or which has no solid waste disposal facility;

"(D) a level IV deficiency means a sanitation system which lacks either a safe water supply system or a sewage disposal system; and

"(E) a level V deficiency means the absence of a safe water supply and sewage disposal system.

Any tribe or community which lacks the operation and maintenance capability to meet pollution control laws and regulations shall be deemed to have a level III deficiency.

"(2)(A) Within 30 days of the submission of the annual budget to the Congress by the President for fiscal years 1986, 1987, 1988, and 1989, the Secretary shall submit a report to the Congress which meets the requirements of paragraph (1).

"(B) In preparing such report for each of the fiscal years 1986, 1987, 1988, and 1989, the Secretary, acting through the Service, shall consult with tribes and tribal organizations including those operating health care programs or facilities under contracts under the Indian Self-Determination and Education Assistance Act to determine the sanitation needs of each tribe.

"(d)(1) To clarify the powers conferred by subsection (a) of section 7 of the Act of August 5, 1954 (42 U.S.C. 2004a) the Secretary, acting through the Service, is authorized to provide—

"(A) financial and technical assistance to Indian tribes and communities in the establishment, training, and equipping of utility organizations to operate and maintain Indian sanitation facilities,

"(B) ongoing technical assistance and training in the management of utility organizations, and

"(C) operation and maintenance assistance for and emergency repairs to tribal sanitation facilities when necessary to avoid a health hazard or to protect the Federal investment in sanitation facilities in situations where the community or tribe or family is not financially or technically capable of performing the required emergency repairs with their own resources.

"(2)(A) This section is not intended to diminish the primary responsibilities of the Indian family, community, or tribe to establish, collect, and utilize reasonable user fees, or otherwise set aside funding, for the purpose of operation and maintenance of sanitation facilities.

"(B) The financial and technical capability of an Indian tribe or community to safely operate and maintain a sanitation facility shall not be a precondition for the provision or construction of such facilities and the Secretary may not require a tribe or community to accept a transfer of such facilities where he has determined the tribe or community does not have, or may not be reasonably expected to achieve, such capability.

"(e) Programs administered by Indian tribes or tribal organizations under the authority of the Indian Self-Determination and Education Assistance Act shall be eligible for—

"(1) funds appropriated pursuant to subsection (f), and

"(2) funds appropriated for the purpose of providing water supply or sewage disposal services, on an equal basis with programs that are administered directly by the Indian Health Service.

"(f)(1) There are authorized to be appropriated for each of the fiscal years 1986, 1987, 1988, and 1989, $5,000,000 for the purpose of providing funds necessary to implement the expanded responsibilities of the Service under subsection (d).

"(2) In addition to the amount authorized under paragraph (1), there are authorized to be appropriated for each of the fiscal years 1986, 1987, 1988, and 1989, $850,000 for the purpose of providing 30 new full-time equivalents for the Service which shall be used to carry out the expanded responsibilities of the Service under subsection (d).".

USE OF NON-SERVICE FUNDS FOR RENOVATION

SEC. 303. Section 305 (25 U.S.C. 1634) is amended to read as follows:

"EXPENDITURE OF NON-SERVICE FUNDS FOR RENOVATION

"SEC. 305. (a) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, an Indian tribe is authorized to expend—

"(1) any funds of such tribe which are not held in trust by the Secretary of the Interior,

"(2) upon approval of the Secretary of the Interior, any funds held in trust by the Secretary of the Interior for the benefit of such tribe, and

"(3) any funds appropriated under Federal law which are not appropriated to the Secretary for expenditure through the Service, for the purpose of making any major renovation or modernization of any Service facility or of any other Indian health facility operated pursuant to a contract entered into under the Indian Self-Determination and Education Assistance Act (including an expenditure for the planning or designing of such renovation or modernization) if the requirements of subsection (b) are met.

"(b) The requirements of this subsection are met with respect to any renovation or modernization if the renovation or modernization—

"(1) does not require or obligate the Secretary to provide any additional employees or equipment,

"(2) is approved by the appropriate area director of the Service, and

"(3) is administered by the Indian tribe in accordance with the rules and regulations prescribed by the Secretary with respect to construction or renovation of Service facilities.

"(c) A renovation or modernization shall not be authorized by this section if such renovation or modernization would require the diversion of funds appropriated to the Service from any project which has a higher priority under the health facility priority system of the Service.".

TITLE IV—ACCESS TO HEALTH SERVICES

GRANTS AND CONTRACTS WITH TRIBAL ORGANIZATIONS

SEC. 401. (a) Section 404 (25 U.S.C. 1622) is amended—

(1) by striking out "and" at the end of subsection (a)(2) and inserting in lieu thereof "or", and

(2) by striking out "shall include, but are not limited to," in subsection (b) and inserting in lieu thereof "may include, as appropriate,", and

(3) by adding "or" at the end of subsection (b)(3).

(b) Section 404(c) (25 U.S.C. 1622(c)) is amended by striking out "and" after "1983," and by inserting before the period a comma and "$1,500,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1986, $2,000,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1987, $500,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1988, and $500,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1989.".

MEDICARE PROVISIONS

SEC. 402. (a) Section 1880 of the Social Security Act is amended—

(1) in subsection (a), by striking out "A hospital or skilled nursing facility" and inserting in lieu thereof "A provider of services or a rural health clinic";

(2) in subsection (a), by striking out "hospitals or skilled nursing facilities (as the case may be)" and inserting in lieu thereof "facilities of that type";

(3) in subsection (b), by striking out "a hospital or skilled nursing facility" and inserting in lieu thereof "a provider of services or a rural health clinic";

(4) in subsection (b), by striking out "hospitals or skilled nursing facilities (as the case may be)" and inserting in lieu thereof "facilities of that type";

(5) in subsection (c), by striking out "any hospital or skilled nursing facility" and inserting in lieu thereof "any provider of services or rural health clinic";

(6) in subsection (c), by striking out "hospitals and skilled nursing facilities" each place it appears and inserting in lieu thereof in each instance "providers of services and rural health clinics"; and

(7) in subsection (d), by striking out "hospitals and skilled nursing facilities" and "hospitals and facilities", and inserting in lieu thereof in each instance "providers of services and rural health clinics".

(b) Section 1880(c) of the Social Security Act is further amended—

(1) by inserting after the first sentence the following: "In making payments from such fund, the Secretary shall ensure that each service unit of the Indian Health Service receives at least 50 percent of the amounts to which the providers and rural health clinics of the Indian Health Service, for which such service unit makes collections, are entitled by reason of this section, if such amount is necessary for the purpose of making improvements in such providers and rural health clinics in order to achieve compliance with the conditions and requirements of this title."; and

(2) by striking out "The preceding sentence" and inserting in lieu thereof "This subsection".

(c) The amendments made by this section shall apply to services performed on or after the date of the enactment of this Act.

MEDICAID PROVISIONS

SEC. 403. (a) Section 1911 of the Social Security Act is amended by striking out "or skilled nursing facility" each place it appears and inserting in lieu thereof in each instance "skilled nursing facility, or any other type of facility which provides services of a type otherwise covered under the State plan".

(b) Section 1911 of the Social Security Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsections:

"(c) The Secretary is authorized to enter into agreements with the State agency for the purpose of reimbursing such agency for health care and services provided in Service facilities to Indians who are eligible for medical assistance under the State plan.

"(d) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, payments to which any facility of the Indian Health Service (including a hospital, intermediate care facility, skilled nursing facility, or any other type of facility which provides services of a type otherwise covered under the State plan) is entitled under a State plan approved under this title by reason of this section shall be placed in a special fund to be held by the Secretary and used by him (to such extent or in such amounts as are provided in appropriation Acts) exclusively for the purpose of making any improvements in the facilities of such Service which may be necessary to achieve compliance with the applicable conditions and requirements of this title. In making payments from such fund, the Secretary shall ensure that each service unit of the Indian Health Service receives at least 50 percent of the amounts to which the facilities of the Indian Health Service, for which such service unit makes collections, are entitled by reason of this section, if such amount is necessary for the purpose of making improvements in such facilities in order to achieve compliance with the conditions and requirements of this title. This subsection shall cease to apply when the Secretary determines and certifies that substantially all of the health facilities of such Service in the United States are in compliance with such conditions and requirements.".

(c) Subsections (b) and (c) of section 402 of the Indian Health Care Improvement Act (42 U.S.C. 1396j, note) are repealed.

(d) The amendments made by this section shall apply to services performed on or after the date of the enactment of this Act.

DEMONSTRATION PROGRAM; STUDY

SEC. 404. Title IV is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sections:

"DEMONSTRATION PROGRAM FOR DIRECT BILLING OF MEDICARE, MEDICAID, AND OTHER THIRD PARTY PAYORS

"SEC. 405. (a) The Secretary shall establish a demonstration program under which Indian tribes, tribal organizations, and Alaska Native health organizations, which are contracting the entire operation of an entire hospital or clinic of the Indian Health Service under the authority of the Indian Self-Determination and Education Assistance Act, shall directly bill for, and receive payment for, health care services provided by such hospital or clinic for which payment is made under title XVIII of the Social Security Act (medicare), under a State plan for medical assistance approved under title XIX of the Social Security Act (medicaid), or from any other third-party payor. The Federal medical assistance percentage under the medicaid program shall continue to be 100 percent for purposes of the demonstration program.

"(b)(1) Each hospital or clinic participating in the demonstration program described in subsection (a) shall be reimbursed directly under the medicare and medicaid programs for services furnished, without regard to the provisions of sections 1880(c) and 1911(d) of the Social Security Act, but all funds so reimbursed shall first be used by the hospital or clinic for the purpose of making any improvements in the hospital or clinic that may be necessary to achieve or maintain compliance with the conditions and requirements applicable generally to facilities of such type under the medicare or medicaid program. Any funds so reimbursed which are in excess of the amount necessary to achieve or maintain such conditions or requirements shall be used in accordance with the regulations of the Indian Health Service applicable to funds provided by the Indian Health Service under any contract entered into under the Indian Self-Determination Act.

"(2) The amounts paid to the hospitals and clinics participating in the demonstration program described in subsection (a) shall be subject to all auditing requirements applicable to programs administered directly by the Indian Health Service and to facilities participating in the medicare and medicaid programs.

"(3) The Secretary shall monitor the performance of hospitals and clinics participating in the demonstration program described in subsection (a), and shall require such hospitals and clinics to submit reports on the program to the Secretary on a quarterly basis (or more frequently if the Secretary deems it to be necessary).

"(4) Notwithstanding sections 1880(c) and 1911(d) of the Social Security Act, no payment may be made out of the special fund described in sections 1880(c) or 1911(d) of the Social Security Act for the benefit of any hospital or clinic which is participating in the demonstration program described in subsection (a).

"(c)(1) In order to be considered for participation in the demonstration program described in subsection (a), a hospital or clinic must submit an application to the Secretary which establishes to the satisfaction of the Secretary that—

"(A) the Indian tribe or Alaska Native health organization contracts the entire operation of the Indian Health Service facility;

"(B) the facility is eligible to participate in the medicare and medicaid programs under sections 1880 and 1911 of the Social Security Act;

"(C) the facility meets any requirements which apply to programs operated directly by the Indian Health Service; and

"(D) the facility is accredited by the Joint Commission on Accreditation of Hospitals, or has submitted a plan, which has been approved by the Secretary, for achieving such accreditation prior to October 1, 1987.

"(2) From among the qualified applicants, the Secretary shall, prior to October 1, 1986, select no more than 4 facilities to participate in the demonstration program described in subsection (a). The demonstration program described in subsection (a) shall begin by no later than October 1, 1987, and end on September 30, 1989.

"(d)(1) Upon the enactment of the Indian Health Care Amendments of 1985, the Secretary, acting through the Indian Health Service, shall commence an examination of—

"(A) any administrative changes which may be necessary to allow direct billing and reimbursement under the demonstration program described in subsection (a), including any agreements with States which may be necessary to provide for such direct billing under the medicaid program; and

"(B) any changes which may be necessary to enable participants in such demonstration program to provide to the Indian Health Service medical records information on patients served under such demonstration program which is consistent with the medical records information system of the Service.

"(2) Prior to the commencement of the demonstration program described in subsection (a), the Secretary shall implement all changes required as a result of the examinations conducted under paragraph (1).

"(3) Prior to October 1, 1986, the Secretary shall determine any accounting information which a participant in the demonstration program described in subsection (a) would be required to report and shall provide funding for the development of any such accounting system by any facility which has been selected to participate in such demonstration program.

"(e) The Secretary shall submit an interim report to the Congress at the end of fiscal year 1988, and a final report at the end of fiscal year 1989, on the activities carried out under the demonstration program described in subsection (a), and an evaluation of whether such activities have fulfilled the objectives of such program. In the final report the Secretary shall provide a recommendation, based upon the results of such demonstration program, as to whether direct billing of, and reimbursement by, the medicare and medicaid programs and other third-party payors should be authorized for all Indian tribes and Alaska Native health organizations which are contracting the entire operation of a facility of the Indian Health Service.

"(f) The Secretary shall provide for the retrocession of any contract entered into between a participant in the demonstration program described in subsection (a) and the Indian Health Service under the authority of the Indian Self-Determination and Education Assistance Act. All cost accounting and billing authority shall be retroceded to the Secretary upon the Secretary's acceptance of a retroceded contract.

"STUDY OF BARRIERS TO PARTICIPATION

"SEC. 406. (a) The Secretary shall, in consultation with Indian tribes and tribal organizations, conduct a study of any barriers which may exist to the participation of Indians in programs established under title XVIII of the Social Security Act (medicare) or under title XIX of the Social Security Act (medicaid).

"(b) By no later than the date which is 1 year after the date of enactment of the Indian Health Care Amendments of 1985, the Secretary shall submit to the Congress a report on the study conducted under subsection (a). Such report shall include—

"(1) recommendations for legislation which—

"(A) would remove any barriers to participation identified in such study, and

"(B) would encourage participation by Indians in the programs described in subsection (a); and

"(2) estimates by service unit of—

"(A) the potential number of Indians eligible for medicare,

"(B) the potential number of Indians eligible for medicaid,

"(C) the number of Indians participating in the medicare program, and

"(D) the number of Indians participating in the medicaid program.".

TITLE V—URBAN INDIAN HEALTH SERVICES

REVISION OF PROGRAM

SEC. 501. Title V (25 U.S.C. 1651, et seq.) is amended to read as follows:

"TITLE V—HEALTH SERVICES FOR URBAN INDIANS

"PURPOSE

"SEC. 501. The purpose of this title is to encourage the establishment of programs in urban centers to make health services more accessible to urban Indians.

"CONTRACTS WITH URBAN INDIAN ORGANIZATIONS

"SEC. 502. Under authority of the Act of November 2, 1921 (25 U.S.C. 13), popularly known as the Snyder Act, the Secretary, through the Service, shall enter into contracts with urban Indian organizations to assist such organizations in the establishment and administration, within the urban centers in which such organizations are situated, of programs which meet the requirements set forth in this title. The Secretary, through the Service, shall include such conditions as the Secretary considers necessary to effect the purpose of this title in any contract which the Secretary enters into with any urban Indian organization pursuant to this title.

"CONTRACTS FOR THE PROVISION OF HEALTH CARE OR REFERRAL SERVICES

"SEC. 503. (a) Under authority of the Act of November 2, 1921 (25 U.S.C. 13), popularly known as the Snyder Act, the Secretary, through the Service, shall enter into contracts with urban Indian organizations for the provision of health care or referral services for urban Indians residing in the urban centers in which such organizations are situated. Any such contract shall include requirements that the urban Indian organizations successfully undertake to—

"(1) determine the population of urban Indians residing in the urban center in which such organization is situated who are or could be recipients of health care or referral services;

"(2) determine the current health status of urban Indians residing in such urban center;

"(3) determine the current health care needs of urban Indians residing in such urban center;

"(4) identify all public and private health services resources within such urban center which are or may be available to urban Indians;

"(5) determine the use of public and private health services resources by the urban Indians residing in such urban center;

"(6) assist such health services resources in providing services to urban Indians;

"(7) assist urban Indians in becoming familiar with and utilizing such health services resources;

"(8) provide basic health education to urban Indians;

"(9) establish and implement manpower training programs to accomplish the referral and education tasks set forth in clauses (6) through (8) of this subsection;

"(10) identify gaps between unmet health needs of urban Indians and the resources available to meet such needs;

"(11) make recommendations to the Secretary and Federal, State, local, and other resource agencies on methods of improving health service programs to meet the needs of urban Indians; and

"(12) where necessary, provide, or enter into contracts for the provision of, health care services for urban Indians.

"(b) The Secretary, through the Service, shall by regulation prescribe the criteria for selecting urban Indian organizations to enter into contracts under this section. Such criteria shall, among other factors, include—

"(1) the extent of unmet health care needs of urban Indians in the urban center involved;

"(2) the size of the urban Indian population in the urban center involved;

"(3) the accessibility to, and utilization of, health care services (other than services provided under this title) by urban Indians in the urban center involved;

"(4) the extent, if any, to which the activities set forth in subsection (a) would duplicate—

"(A) any previous or current public or private health services project in an urban center that was or is funded in a manner other than pursuant to this title; or

"(B) any project funded under this title;

"(5) the capability of an urban Indian organization to perform the activities set forth in subsection (a) and to enter into a contract with the Secretary under this section;

"(6) the satisfactory performance and successful completion by an urban Indian organization of other contracts with the Secretary under this title;

"(7) the appropriateness and likely effectiveness of conducting the activities set forth in subsection (a) in an urban center; and

"(8) the extent of existing or likely future participation in the activities set forth in subsection (a) by appropriate health and health-related Federal, State, local, and other agencies.

"CONTRACTS FOR THE DETERMINATION OF UNMET HEALTH CARE NEEDS

"SEC. 504. (a) Under authority of the Act of November 2, 1921 (25 U.S.C 13), popularly known as the Snyder Act, the Secretary, through the Service, may enter into contracts with urban Indian organizations situated in urban centers for which contracts have not been entered into under section 503. The purpose of a contract under this section shall be the determination of the matters described in subsection (b)(1) in order to assist the Secretary in assessing the health status and health care needs of urban Indians in the urban center involved and determining whether the Secretary should enter into a contract under section 503 with the urban Indian organization with which the Secretary has entered into a contract under this section.

"(b) Any contract entered into by the Secretary under this section shall include requirements that—

"(1) the urban Indian organization successfully undertake to—

"(A) document the health care status and unmet health care needs of urban Indians in the urban center involved;

"(B) with respect to urban Indians in the urban center involved, determine the matters described in clauses (2), (3), (4), and (8) of section 503(b); and

"(2) the urban Indian organization complete performance of the contract within one year after the date on which the Secretary and such organization enter into such contract.

"(c) The Secretary may not renew any contract entered into under this section.

"EVALUATIONS; CONTRACT RENEWALS

"SEC. 505. (a) The Secretary, through the Service, shall develop procedures to evaluate compliance with, and performance of, contracts entered into by urban Indian organizations under this title. Such procedures shall include provisions for carrying out the requirements of this section.

"(b) The Secretary, through the Service, shall conduct an annual onsite evaluation of each urban Indian organization which has entered into a contract under section 503 for purposes of determining the compliance of such organization with, and evaluating the performance of such organization under, such contract.

"(c) If, as a result of the evaluations conducted under this section, the Secretary determines that an urban Indian organization has not complied with or satisfactorily performed a contract under section 503, the Secretary shall, prior to renewing such contract, attempt to resolve with such organization the areas of noncompliance or unsatisfactory performance and modify such contract to prevent future occurrences of such noncompliance or unsatisfactory performance. If the Secretary determines that such noncompliance or unsatisfactory performance cannot be resolved and prevented in the future, the Secretary shall not renew such contract with such organization and is authorized to enter into a contract under section 503 with another urban Indian organization which is situated in the same urban center as the urban Indian organization whose contract is not renewed under this section.

"(d) In determining whether to renew a contract with an urban Indian organization under section 503, or whether to enter into a contract with an urban Indian organization under section 503 which has completed performance of a contract under section 504, the Secretary shall review the records of the urban Indian organization, the reports submitted under section 507, and, in the case of a renewal of a contract under section 503, shall consider the results of the on-site evaluations conducted under subsection (b).

"OTHER CONTRACT REQUIREMENTS

"SEC. 506. (a) Contracts with urban Indian organizations entered into pursuant to this title shall be in accordance with all Federal contracting laws and regulations except that, in the discretion of the Secretary, such contracts may be negotiated without advertising and need not conform to the provisions of the Act of August 24, 1935, as amended.

"(b) Payments under any contracts pursuant to this title may be made in advance or by way of reimbursement and in such installments and on such conditions as the Secretary deems necessary to carry out the purposes of this title.

"(c) Notwithstanding any provision of law to the contrary, the Secretary may, at the request or consent of an urban Indian organization, revise or amend any contract entered into by the Secretary with such organization under this title as necessary to carry out the purposes of this title, except that whenever an urban Indian organization requests retrocession of the Secretary for any contract entered into pursuant to this title, such retrocession shall become effective upon a date specified by the Secretary not more than one hundred and twenty days from the date of the request by the organization or at such later date as may be mutually agreed to by the Secretary and the organization.

"(d) In connection with any contract entered into pursuant to this title, the Secretary may permit an urban Indian organization to utilize, in carrying out such contract, existing facilities owned by the Federal Government within the Secretary's jurisdiction under such terms and conditions as may be agreed upon for the use and maintenance of such facilities.

"(e) Contracts with urban Indian organizations and regulations adopted pursuant to this title shall include provisions to assure the fair and uniform provision to urban Indians of services and assistance under such contracts by such organizations.

"REPORTS AND RECORDS

"SEC. 507. (a) For each fiscal year during which an urban Indian organization receives or expends funds pursuant to a contract entered into pursuant to this title, such organization shall submit to the Secretary a quarterly report including—

"(1) in the case of a contract under section 503, information gathered pursuant to clauses (10) and (11) of subsection (a) of such section;

"(2) information on activities conducted by the organization pursuant to the contract;

"(3) an accounting of the amounts and purposes for which Federal funds were expended; and

"(4) such other information as the Secretary may request.

"(b) The reports and records of the urban Indian organization with respect to a contract under this title shall be subject to audit by the Secretary and the Comptroller General of the United States.

"(c) The Secretary shall allow as a cost of any contract entered into under section 503 the cost of an annual private audit conducted by a certified public accountant.

"REPORTS REQUIRED

"SEC. 508. By no later than the date which is 1 year after the date of enactment of the Indian Health Care Amendments of 1985, the Secretary, through the Service, shall submit a report to Congress which assesses the health status and health care needs of urban Indians. The report shall—

"(1) specify the health care needs of urban Indians and, with respect to urban centers for which urban Indian organizations have entered into contracts under section 503, whether additional health care personnel are needed to meet such needs;

"(2) make recommendations for additional programs, technical assistance, funding, and additional health care personnel to meet the health care needs of all urban Indians; and

"(3) contain recommendations for legislation and administrative actions to achieve the national goal of providing the best possible health status for urban Indians.

"LIMITATION ON CONTRACT AUTHORITY

"SEC. 509. The authority of the Secretary to enter into contracts under this title shall be to the extent, and in an amount, provided for in appropriation Acts.

TITLE VI—ORGANIZATIONAL IMPROVEMENTS

MANAGEMENT INFORMATION SYSTEM

SEC. 601. (a) Title VI is amended to read as follows:

"TITLE VI—INDIAN HEALTH SERVICE

"MANAGEMENT INFORMATION SYSTEM; ACCESS TO PATIENT'S RECORDS

"SEC. 601. (a)(1) The Secretary shall establish an automated management information system for the Service.

"(2) The information system established under paragraph (1) shall include—

"(A) a cost accounting system,

"(B) a patient care information system for each area served by the Service,

"(C) a privacy component that protects the privacy of patient information held by, or on behalf of, the Service, and

"(D) a services-based cost accounting component that provides estimates of the costs associated with the provision of specific medical treatments or services in each Area office of the Service.

"(3) By no later than September 30, 1986, the Secretary shall submit a report to Congress setting forth—

"(A) the activities which have been undertaken to establish an automated management information system,

"(B) the activities, if any, which remain to be undertaken to complete the implementation of an automated management information system, and

"(C) the amount of funds which will be needed to complete the implementation of a management information system in the succeeding fiscal years.

"(b) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, each patient shall have reasonable access to the medical or health records of such patient which are held by, or on behalf of, the Service.".

(b) The amendment made by subsection (a) shall take effect on the date of enactment of this Act.

INDIAN HEALTH SERVICE PLACED WITHIN PUBLIC HEALTH SERVICE

SEC. 602. (a) Title VI, as amended by section 601 of this Act, is further amended—

(1) by redesignating section 601 as section 602, and

(2) by inserting after the heading of the title, the following new section:

"ESTABLISHMENT OF THE INDIAN HEALTH SERVICE AS AN AGENCY OF THE PUBLIC HEALTH SERVICE

"SEC. 601. (a) In order to more effectively and efficiently carry out the responsibilities, authorities, and functions of the United States to provide health care services to Indians and Indian tribes, as is or may be hereafter provided by Federal statute or treaties, there is established within the Public Health Service of the Department of Health and Human Services the Indian Health Service. The Indian Health Service shall be administered by a Director, who shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. The Director of the Indian Health Service shall report to the Secretary through the Assistant Secretary of Health and Human Services for Health, and shall not report to, or be under the supervision of, any other officer or employee of the Department of Health and Human Services.

"(b) The Indian Health Service shall be an agency within the Public Health Service of the Department of Health and Human Services, and shall not be an office, component, or unit of any other agency of the Department.

"(c) The Secretary shall carry out through the Director of the Indian Health Service—

"(1) all functions which were, on the day before the date of enactment of the Indian Health Care Amendments of 1985, carried out by or under the direction of the individual serving as Director of the Indian Health Service on such day;

"(2) all functions of the Secretary or the Department of Health and Human Services relating to the maintenance and operation of hospital and health facilities for Indians and the planning for, and the provision and utilization of, health services for Indians; and

"(3) all health programs under which health care is provided to Indians based upon their status as Indians which are administered by the Secretary, including (but not limited to) programs under—

"(A) this Act;

"(B) the Act of November 2, 1921 (25 U.S.C. 13);

"(C) the Act of August 5, 1954 (68 Stat. 674);

"(D) the Act of August 16, 1957 (71 Stat. 370);

"(E) the Indian Self-Determination and Education Assistance Act (Public Law 93-638); and

"(F) the Act of December 5, 1979 (93 Stat. 1056).

"(d)(1) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Secretary may not reorganize, alter, or discontinue the Indian Health Service or allocate or reallocate any function which this section specifies shall be performed by the Director of the Indian Health Service or by the Secretary of Health and Human Services through the Director of the Indian Health Service.

"(2) Paragraph (1) shall not apply to any action taken by the Director of the Indian Health Service which the Director of the Indian Health Service determines to be appropriate.

"(e)(1) The Director of the Indian Health Service shall have the authority—

"(A) except to the extent provided in paragraph (2), to appoint and compensate employees for the Service in accordance with title 5, United States Code;

"(B) to enter into contracts for the procurement of goods and services to carry out the functions of the Service; and

"(C) to manage, expend, and obligate all funds appropriated for the Service.

"(2) The provisions of section 12 of the Act of June 18, 1934 (48 Stat. 986; 25 U.S.C. 472), but not the provisions of section 2 of Public Law 96-135 (25 U.S.C. 472a), shall apply to personnel actions taken with respect to positions within the Service.

"(3) The authority of the Director of the Indian Health Service to enter into contracts under this subsection shall be to such extent or in such amounts as are provided in appropriation Acts.".

(b) Section 5315 of title 5, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new item:

"DIRECTOR, INDIAN HEALTH SERVICE, DEPARTMENT OF HEALTH AND HUMAN SERVICES.".

(c) All personnel, records, equipment, facilities, and interests in property that are administered by the Indian Health Service on the day before the date on which the amendments made by this section take effect shall be transferred to the Indian Health Service established by the amendment made by subsection (a) of this section.

(d) By no later than August 30, 1986, the Secretary shall submit to the Congress a plan for the implementation of the amendments made by this section which takes into account—

(1) the results of any study conducted by the Office of Technology Assessment or the Comptroller General of the United States relating to the organizational structure of the Indian Health Service, and

(2) any other relevant study or information relating to the organizational structure of the Indian Health Service.

(e)(1) The requirements of section 601 of the Indian Health Care Improvement Act, as amended by this section, shall be met within 180 days after the date on which the amendments made by this section take effect.

(2) The Secretary of Health and Human Services may waive the application of the Indian preference laws during the 180-day period beginning on the date on which the amendments made by this section take effect on a case-by-case basis for any temporary transfer which is necessary in order to implement the amendments made by subsection (a) of this section.

(f) The amendments made by this section shall take effect on May 30, 1987.

TITLE VII—MISCELLANEOUS

LEASING AND OTHER CONTRACTS

SEC. 701. Section 704 (25 U.S.C. 1674) is amended—

(1) by striking out "Notwithstanding", and inserting in lieu thereof "(a) Notwithstanding", and

(2) by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(b) The Secretary may enter into leases, contracts, and other legal agreements with Indian tribes or tribal organizations which hold—

"(1) title to;

"(2) a leasehold interest in; or

"(3) a beneficial interest in (where title is held by the United States in trust for the benefit of a tribe); facilities used for the administration and delivery of health services by the Indian Health Service or by programs operated by tribes or tribal organizations to compensate such tribes or tribal organizations for costs associated with the use of such facilities for such purposes. Such costs include rent, depreciation based on the useful life of the building, principal and interest paid or accrued, operation and maintenance expenses, and other expenses determined by regulation to be allowable.".

JUVENILE ALCOHOL AND DRUG ABUSE

SEC. 702. Section 706 (25 U.S.C. 1676) is amended to read as follows:

"JUVENILE ALCOHOL AND DRUG ABUSE

"SEC. 706. (a) Within 90 days of the date of enactment of the Indian Health Care Amendments of 1985, the Secretary shall enter into an agreement with the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of Education to coordinate the efforts of their Departments related to alcohol and drug abuse among Indian juveniles. The agreement shall provide for the identification and coordination of available resources and programs to combat Indian juvenile alcohol and drug abuse through prevention, education, counseling, and referral. The Secretary shall publish such agreement in the Federal Register within 120 days of the date of enactment of the Indian Health Care Amendments of 1985.

"(b) The Secretary, acting through the Service and in consultation and cooperation with the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of Education, shall develop a program to provide training in—

"(1) preventive education;

"(2) the identification of juvenile alcohol and drug abusers; and

"(3) counseling techniques on juvenile alcohol and drug abuse.

Such training shall be provided to elementary and secondary teachers and counselors—

"(A) in schools operated by the Bureau of Indian Affairs;

"(B) in schools operated under contract with the Bureau of Indian Affairs; and

"(C) in public schools on or near Indian reservations (including public schools in Oklahoma and Alaska with significant numbers of Indian students).

The Service may provide such training either directly or through contract with qualified private or public entities.

"(c) The Secretary of the Interior, acting through the Bureau of Indian Affairs and in consultation with the Service, shall review existing literature and reports on juvenile alcohol and drug abuse, including studies and school curricula and any other material relevant to an understanding of the problem of juvenile alcohol and drug abuse, and shall make available the results of such review to the schools described in subsection (b).

"(d) The Secretary shall establish an Office of Alcohol and Drug Abuse within the Service which shall be responsible for the administration of the programs and authorities of the Service in the field of alcohol and drug abuse. The Office shall have assigned to it a number of full-time equivalent positions which shall be not less than eight full-time equivalent positions in the Central Office of the Service and one full-time equivalent position in each Service area and Program Office.

"(e) For the purpose of implementing subsection (b), there are authorized to be appropriated $1,500,000 for each of the fiscal years 1986, 1987, 1988, and 1989.".

NUCLEAR RESOURCE DEVELOPMENT HEALTH HAZARDS

SEC. 703. (a) Subsections (a) and (b) of section 707 (25 U.S.C. 1677) are amended to read as follows:

"(a) The Secretary, acting through the Service, shall enter into appropriate arrangements with the National Academy of Sciences, in consultation with the Office of Technology Assessment, to conduct a study of the health hazards to Indian miners and to Indians living on, or near Indian reservations or in Indian communities which result from development of nuclear resources. Such study shall include—

"(1) an evaluation of the nature and extent of nuclear resource development related health problems currently exhibited among Indians and the causes of such health problems;

"(2) an analysis of the potential effect of ongoing and future nuclear resource development on or near Indian reservations and communities;

"(3) an evaluation of the types and nature of activities, practices, and conditions causing or affecting such health problems, including uranium mining and milling, uranium mine tailing deposits, nuclear powerplant operation and construction, and nuclear waste disposal;

"(4) a summary of any findings and recommendations provided in Federal and State studies, reports, investigations, and inspections during the 10-year period ending on the date of enactment of the Indian Health Care Amendments of 1985 that directly or indirectly relate to the activities, practices, and conditions affecting the health or safety of such Indians; and

"(5) an evaluation of the efforts that have been made by Federal and State agencies and mining and milling companies to effectively carry out an education program for such Indians regarding the health and safety hazards of nuclear resource development.

To assist the Academy in conducting such study, the Secretary and the Secretary of the Interior shall furnish at the request of the Academy any information which the Academy deems necessary for the purpose of conducting the study. In addition, they shall cooperate with the Academy in obtaining information necessary to carry out the intent of the study.

"(b) Upon the completion of the study described in subsection (a), the Secretary, acting through the Service, shall develop, on the basis of the results of such study, a health care plan to address the health problems studied under subsection (a). The plan shall include—

"(1) methods for diagnosing and treating Indians currently exhibiting nuclear resource development related health problems;

"(2) preventive care for Indians who may be exposed to such health hazards as a result of nuclear resource development, including the monitoring of the health of individuals who have or may have been exposed to excessive amounts of radiation, or otherwise affected by nuclear development activities that have had or could have a serious impact upon the health of such individuals; and

"(3) a program of education for Indians who, by reason of their work or geographic proximity to nuclear development activities, may experience health problems.".

(b) Subsection (c) of section 707 is amended by striking out "no later than the date eighteen months after the date of the enactment of this Act" and inserting in lieu thereof "by no later than the date which is 18 months after the date of enactment of the Indian Health Care Amendments of 1985".

(c) Subsection (f) of section 707 (25 U.S.C. 1677(f)) is amended to read as follows:

"(f) There are authorized to be appropriated $750,000 for the purpose of conducting the study described in subsection (a). Such funds shall remain available for expenditure until the date which is 18 months after the date such funds are appropriated.".

ARIZONA AS A CONTRACT HEALTH SERVICE DELIVERY AREA; FORMERLY RECOGNIZED TRIBES IN CALIFORNIA

SEC. 704. (a)(1) Subsection (a) of section 708 (25 U.S.C. 1678 (a)) is amended—

(A) by striking out "1984" and inserting in lieu thereof "1989", and

(2) Subsection (c) of section 708 (25 U.S.C. 1678(c)) is amended to read as follows:

"(c) There are authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this section.".

ELIGIBILITY OF CALIFORNIA INDIANS

SEC. 705. Section 709 (25 U.S.C. 1679) is amended to read as follows:

"ELIGIBILITY OF CALIFORNIA INDIANS

"SEC. 709. The following California Indians shall be eligible for care from the Service:

"(1) Any Member of a federally recognized Indian tribe.

"(2) Any descendant of an Indian who was residing in California on June 1, 1852, but only if such descendant—

"(A) is living in California,

"(B) is a member of the Indian community served by a local program of the Service, and

"(C) is regarded as an Indian by the community in which such descendant lives.

"(3) Any Indian who holds trust interests in public domain, national forest, or Indian reservation allotments in California.

"(4) Any Indian in California who is listed on the plans for distribution of the assets of California rancherias and reservations under the Act of August 18, 1958 (72 Stat. 619), and any descendant of such an Indian.

Paragraph (4) shall not apply after September 30, 1988.".

CALIFORNIA AS A CONTRACT HEALTH SERVICE DELIVERY AREA

SEC. 706. Section 710 (25 U.S.C. 1680) is amended to read as follows:

"CALIFORNIA AS A CONTRACT HEALTH SERVICE DELIVERY AREA

"SEC. 710. The State of California, excluding the counties of Alameda, Contra Costa, Los Angeles, Marin, Orange, Sacramento, San Francisco, San Mateo, and Santa Clara, shall be designated as a contract health service delivery area by the Service for the purpose of providing contract health services to Indians in such State.".

CONTRACT HEALTH FACILITIES

SEC. 707. (a) Title VII is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"CONTRACT HEALTH FACILITIES

"SEC. 711. (a) The Indian Health Service shall provide funds for health care programs and facilities operated by tribes and tribal organizations under contracts with the Indian Health Service under the Indian Self-Determination Act—

"(1) for the maintenance and repair of clinics owned or leased by such tribes or tribal organizations,

"(2) for employee training,

"(3) for cost-of-living increases for employees, and

"(4) for any other expenses relating to the provision of health services, on the same basis as such funds are provided to programs and facilities operated directly by the Indian Health Service.

"(b) In the case of eligible California Indians as defined by section 709 who are not members of Indian tribes or eligible for membership in such tribes, the Secretary may not enter into a contract to provide health services to such Indians under section 103 of the Indian Self-Determination Act if 51 percent of the adult population of such Indians object prior to the award of such contract through any legally established organization of Indians representative of such Indians, in which case the Secretary, acting through the Service, shall make alternate arrangements for the delivery of health care services to such Indians. In making such alternative arrangements for such Indians, the Service may—

"(1) provide services directly to some or all of such Indians through its own facilities,

"(2) purchase services for some or all of such Indians on a contract basis,

"(3) contract with a qualified organization representing some or all of such Indians for the provision of services under the terms of the third proviso of the first paragraph under the heading "Secretary" in the division relating to general provisions of the Act of April 30, 1908 (35 Stat. 71, chapter 153; 25 U.S.C. 47), popularly known as the Buy Indian Act, or

"(4) make other effective arrangements for the delivery of health care services to such Indians.

"(c) Nothing in this section shall be construed to restrict or interfere with the right of any Indian tribe to contract for health services on behalf of its own members.".

(b)(1) The Secretary of Health and Human Services shall determine whether the provisions of subsection (b) of section 711 of the Indian Health Care Improvement Act have interfered with the effective administration of contracts entered into under section 103 of the Indian Self-Determination Act (25 U.S.C. 450g).

(2) The Secretary of Health and Human Services shall submit to the Congress a report on the determination made under paragraph (1) by not later than the date that is 18 months after the date of enactment of this Act.

NATIONAL HEALTH SERVICE CORPS

SEC. 708. (a) Title VII, as amended by section 707 of this Act, is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"NATIONAL HEALTH SERVICE CORPS

"SEC. 712. (a) The Secretary of Health and Human Services shall not—

"(1) remove a member of the National Health Service Corps from a health facility operated by the Indian Health Service or by a tribe or tribal organization under contract with the Indian Health Service under the Indian Self-Determination Act; or

"(2) withdraw funding used to support such member, unless the Secretary, acting through the Service, has ensured that the Indians receiving services from such member will experience no reduction in services.".

(b) The amendment made by subsection (a) of this section shall take effect as of May 1, 1984.

ADDITIONAL PROVISIONS

SEC. 709. Title VII, as amended by sections 707 and 708 of this Act, is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sections:

"SERVICE TO INELIGIBLE PERSONS

"SEC. 713. (a)(1) The Secretary, acting through the Service, may provide or authorize the provision of medical care, treatment, or benefits by the Service to persons who are not otherwise eligible for such services in health facilities maintained by the Service or contracted under the Indian Self-Determination and Education Assistance Act (Public Law 93-638) or through contract health care services, subject to the limitations of this section.

"(2) Persons eighteen years of age or under who are the natural or adopted children (including foster- and step-children), legal wards, or orphans of an eligible Indian person and who are not otherwise eligible for the medical care, treatment, or benefits of the Service shall be eligible for all such services on the same basis and subject to the same rules as apply to eligible Indians until their nineteenth birthday. The existing and potential medical needs of such persons shall be taken into consideration by the Service in determining the need for, or the allocation of, its health resources. Any such person who has been determined to be legally incompetent prior to their nineteeth birthday shall remain eligible for such services until one year after the date such disability has been removed.

"(3) Non-Indian spouses of eligible Indians or spouses of Indian descent who are not otherwise eligible for the medical care, treatment, or benefits of the Service shall not be eligible for such service unless they are made eligible, as a class, by an appropriate resolution of the governing body of the relevant Indian tribe. The medical needs of persons made eligible under this subsection shall not be taken into consideration by the Service in determining the need for, or allocation of, its health resources.

"(b)(1)(A) At the request of the Indian tribe or tribes included within the service area of any service unit of the Service, the Secretary may authorize the medical care and treatment of otherwise ineligible persons residing within such service area in health facilities maintained and operated by the Service.

"(B) Persons receiving medical care and treatment under this subsection shall be liable for the payment for such services under a fee schedule adopted by the Secretary which, in the judgment of the Secretary, shall result in reimbursement in an amount not less than the actual cost of providing the service. Fees collected under this subsection, including medicare or medicaid reimbursements under titles XVIII and XIX of the Social Security Act, shall be credited to the account of the facility providing the service and shall be used solely for the provision of health services within that facility.

"(2)(A) Except as provided in subparagraph (B), where the governing body of an Indian tribe or, in the case of a multi-tribal service area, any Indian tribe revokes its concurrence to the provision of services under paragraph (1)(A), the Secretary's authority to provide such service shall terminate at the end of the fiscal year following the fiscal year in which such revocation was adopted.

"(B) In California, in the case of a multi-tribal service area, unless 51 percent or more of the Indian tribes in the Service area revoke their concurrence to the provision of services under paragraph (1)(A), the authority to provide such service shall not be affected.

"(3)(A) In the case of health facilities operated directly by the Service, such medical care and treatment may be provided under this subsection only where the Secretary and the affected tribe or tribes have jointly determined that—

"(i) the provision of such service will not result in a denial or diminution of services to eligible Indian persons; and

"(ii) there is no reasonable alternative health facility or service, within or without the service unit area, available to meet the medical needs of such persons.

"(B) In the case of health facilities operated under contract under the Indian Self-Determination and Education Assistance Act, the governing body of the Indian tribe or tribal organization providing health services under a contract with the Service under the Indian Self-Determination Act is authorized to determine the eligibility for such services of persons who are not otherwise eligible for such services. Such determination shall be in accordance with the requirements of this section.

"(4) The Service may continue to provide medical care, treatment, and benefits to persons not provided service under subsections (a) or (b) to achieve stability in a medical emergency, to prevent the spread of a communicable disease or otherwise deal with a public health hazard; to provide care to non-Indian women pregnant with an eligible Indian's child for the duration of the pregnancy through post partum, or to immediate family members of an eligible person where such care is directly related to the treatment of the eligible person.

"(5) Hospital privileges in health facilities operated and maintained by the Service or operated under contract under the Indian Self-Determination and Education Assistance Act may be extended to non-Service health care practitioners under a plan adopted under subsection (d) of this section. Such non-Service health care practitioners shall not be regarded as employees of the Federal Government for purposes of sections 1346(b) and 2671 et seq. of title 28 of the United States Code relating to Federal tort claims even if providing services to eligible persons as a part of the condition under which privileges are extended.

"RESTRICTIONS ON THE USE OF INDIAN HEALTH SERVICE APPROPRIATIONS

"SEC. 714. Unless otherwise specifically provided, any restriction placed on the use of appropriations for Indian health services shall not be interpreted—

"(1) to apply to the use of funds other than such appropriated funds by an entity with a contract with the Indian Health Service;

"(2) to prohibit the support of litigation with such other funds; or

"(3) to prohibit the promotion of public support for or opposition to any legislative proposal with such other funds.

"INFANT AND MATERNAL MORTALITY

"SEC. 715. (a) Not later than January 1, 1986, the Secretary shall develop and begin implementation of a plan to achieve the following objectives by January 1, 1991:

"(1) Reduction of the rate of Indian infant mortality in each Area Office of the Service to twelve deaths per one thousand live births or to that of the United States population, whichever is lower.

"(2) Reduction of the rate of maternal mortality in each Area Office of the Service to five deaths per one hundred thousand live births or to that of the United States population, whichever is lower.

"(b) The President shall include with the budget submitted under section 1105 of title 31, United States Code, for each fiscal year a separate statement which specifies the total amount obligated or expended in the most recently completed fiscal year to achieve each of the objectives described in subsection (a).

"REDUCTION AND CONTROL OF HEPATITIS-B IN ALASKA

"SEC. 716. (a)(1) By no later than the date which is 1 year after the date of enactment of the Indian Health Care Amendments of 1985, the Secretary, through the Service and in conjunction with the State of Alaska and the Center for Disease Control, shall complete the implementation of a program to provide for—

"(A) screening and reporting of cases of,

"(B) vaccinations for the prevention of, and

"(C) control of the incidence of, hepatitis-B in Alaska.

"(2) By no later than December 31, 1987, the Secretary shall submit to the Congress a report concerning the activities carried out under the program described in paragraph (1). The report shall include—

"(A) a description of any activities which, on the day the report is submitted, need to be carried out to control the incidence of hepatitis-B in Alaska, and

"(B) a schedule for the completion of such activities.

"(b) The Secretary shall include in the budget submitted under section 1105(a) of title 31, United States Code, for each of the fiscal years succeeding the fiscal year in which the Indian Health Care Amendments of 1985 are enacted, a request for budget authority for, and estimates of outlays for, a program to control the incidence of hepatitis-B in Alaska.

"CONTRACT HEALTH SERVICES FOR THE TRENTON SERVICE AREA

"SEC. 717. The Secretary, acting through the Service, is directed to provide contract health services to members of the Turtle Mountain Band of Chippewa Indians that reside in the Trenton Service Area of Divide, McKenzie, and Williams counties of North Dakota and the adjoining counties of Richland, Roosevelt, and Sheridan in the State of Montana. The Secretary is directed to conduct a population survey of Indians residing in the Trenton Service Area for the purpose of determining the basis for the distribution of equity health care funds and the provision of contract health care. Should the results of the population survey indicate that additional eligible members of the Turtle Mountain Band of Chippewa Indians reside outside the boundaries of the named North Dakota and Montana counties, the contract health service delivery area shall be defined to include those additional counties of North Dakota or Montana in which such eligible tribal members reside.".

"STUDY OF HEALTH CARE NEEDS OF NATIVE HAWAIIANS AND OTHER NATIVE PACIFIC ISLANDERS

"SEC. 718. (a)(1) The Secretary shall conduct a study of the physical and mental health care needs of Native Hawaiians and other Native American Pacific Islanders.

"(2) In conducting the study required under paragraph (1), the Secretary shall consult with the Commissioner of the Administration for Native Americans, the Administrator of the Alcohol, Drug Abuse, and Mental Health Administration, the Director of the Indian Health Service, leaders in the field of health care, and representatives of Native Hawaiians and other Native American Pacific Islanders.

"(b) By no later than the date that is 1 year after the date of enactment of the Indian Health Care Amendments of 1985, the Secretary shall submit to the Congress a report on the study conducted under subsection (a). Such report shall include—

"(1) an assessment of the access of, and barriers to, Native Hawaiians and other Native American Pacific Islanders in receiving physical and mental health care services,

"(2) an assessment of the physical and mental health care needs of Native Hawaiians and other Native American Pacific Islanders, and

"(3) specific recommendations for the development of a national strategy to address such needs.".

SEVERABILITY

SEC. 710. If any provision of this Act, any amendment made by this Act, or the application of such provision or amendment to any person or circumstances is held to be invalid, the remainder of this Act, the amendments made by this Act, and the application of such provision to persons or circumstances other than those to which it is held invalid shall not be affected thereby.●

● Mr. ABDNOR. Mr. President, I am pleased to join with Senator MARK ANDREWS, distinguished chairman of the Senate Select Committee on Indian Affairs, and my other colleagues in reintroducing legislation to reauthorize and amend the Indian Health Care Improvement Act.

Similar legislation was passed in the 98th Congress by both the Senate and the House—only to be vetoed by the President because of the inclusion of several amendments which the Department of Health and Human Services opposed. I strongly disagreed with the action of the President and continue to believe that the legislation which Congress passed should have been signed into law.

Now, we begin again. Native Americans continue to experience the lowest health status of all Americans. Infant mortality rates continue to be among the highest in our Nation. If you are a native American—you are six times more likely to contract tuberculosis than other Americans. Cancer and heart disease are above the national norm as well. Alcohol abuse and related medical problems are prevalent both on and off the reservations. This is a situation which demands attention.

I am especially pleased that this new bill is similar to last year's legislation in that it continues to place a major emphasis on preventive health care and health education programs. Prevention is much more successful than finding cures and it will have a positive impact on the lives of native Americans for years to come. If we are to make major strides in improving native American health care we must have proper preventive care and education and basic health services on and off the reservations.

In addition, this legislation addresses the serious needs in areas such as direct patient care, mental health, dental care, and alcohol abuse treatment. Legislative authority for urban and rural Indian health programs will also be extended. This bill also attempts to address the serious shortage of physicians, medical assistants, and nurses. This is especially important for native Americans located in rural areas where many of our reservation are located and where medical problems are most acute.

Since this legislation was debated extensively in the last Congress, it is my hope that the Congress will move quickly to pass this legislation and send it on to the President. I know first-hand of the health needs of nearly 50,000 native Americans in South Dakota and I hope that my colleagues in the Senate will join with me in working together to reauthorize this vital national program which will address many of the long-standing health problems of native Americans in our Nation.●

● Mr. PRESSLER. Mr. President, today we are again introducing desperately needed Indian health care legislation. The provisions of this bill which the President objected to in his veto statement have been removed. I would hope that this legislation can now be promptly approved once again by Congress and signed into law by President Reagan.

In my home State of South Dakota, the services provided as a result of the Indian Health Care Improvement Act are invaluable. The necessary services must continue and we must also fulfill our commitment to provide quality health care to the Indian population of this country. The quantity and quality of health care on the reservations must continue to improve.

There are several unique situations on the reservations, such as high rates of infant mortality, suicide, and alcoholism. These problems are not going to go away. The Indian Health Care Amendments are a step in the right direction toward finding solutions to these ever-present problems.

We now have the opportunity to pass this legislation and send it to the President for his approval. I believe the time has come for us to approve this bill and show our true commitment to the Indian population of our country.

Mr. President, I ask my colleagues to support this important Indian health care reauthorization legislation.●

● Mr. DURENBERGER. Mr. President, I am pleased to join my colleagues in the introduction of Indian Health Care Amendments of 1985. This bill reauthorizes and amends the Indian Health Care Improvement Act of 1976 to provide funds for the improvement of the health status of our country's American Indians and Alaskan Natives. It is essential that the act is reauthorized this year to ensure quality health care services are available to all Americans.

I am particularly concerned about title V of this act which provides funding for Indian Health Programs in urban areas. The Indian Health Board of Minneapolis represented the original model for title V and was selected by Congress in 1972 to document the health care needs of the urban Indian population. Since its beginning, the Indian Health Board has served over 19,000 patients and has demonstrated the efficient delivery of health care services to the Indian population. This program has served the area well. In Minneapolis the services provided to pregnant women and children have helped to reduce the infant mortality rate from 29.6 deaths per 1,000 in 1975-77 down to 15.7 deaths per 1,000 for 1977-79. However, the latest statistics show that infant mortality rate in Minneapolis was back up to 25.4 deaths per 1,000 in 1979-81. This concerns me greatly.

While the Indian Health Service has made marked improvements in the health status of American Indians across the country, their health status is still way below that of the general population. The infant death is still over 20 percent greater than that of the general population and the Indian death rate for tuberculosis is still four times greater than the general U.S. population. In addition, while 66 percent of the general population will reach the age of 65, only 35 percent of the Indian population ever will.

These statistics show that the objective of the Indian Health Care Improvement Act of 1976—to raise Indian health status to that of the general population—has not been reached. The Indian Health Care Amendments of 1985 represents society's commitment to the improvement of the health status of American Indians. The concerns of the President regarding last year's bill have been addressed and passage of this year's bill is vital. I strongly support this bill and urge the Congress and the President to do the same.●

● Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I am proud to be a cosponsor of the Indian Health Care Amendments of 1985—it was a good bill when we passed it last fall, and I believe it is an even stronger bill now.

In Alaska the inherent difficulties of providing adequate health care services to a predominantly rural population are made even more acute by the extremes of distance, climate, and isolation that shape the lives of most Native Alaskans. A number of the programs authorized by this bill directly address the needs of these communities—in preventive as well as direct care programs, including mental health services and alcoholism prevention programs. The bill also includes authorization of a hepatitis-B immunization and eradication program which formalizes the intent of the ongoing effort in my State to protect the high risk population of Alaska Natives from this serious, sometimes fatal, disease. The Medicare and Medicaid collections demonstration program which my colleague, FRANK MURKOWSKI, and I offered as an amendment when the bill was on the floor last fall, is incorporated into the main body of the bill before us today. This demonstration program will test the feasibility of those tribal contractors which operate Indian Health Service facilities to directly bill for and retain 100 percent of the Medicare and Medicaid reimbursements they collect for services provided at their facility. In turn, we will be able to evaluate if this capability on the part of tribal contractors results in increased collections, as well as more completely fulfilling the intent of Public Law 98-638 contracts by giving contractors complete control over the financial management of the facilities they operate.

Most important, however, is the overall intent of the Indian Health Care Amendments of 1985 to raise the health status of all American Indians and Alaska Natives to a level more on a par with that of the rest of the country. Current Indian Health Service data indicate that the incidence of diseases such as pneumonia, influenza, and diabetes among native Americans is well above the national averages for all other races in the United States. The rate of tuberculosis is six times greater than that of the general population, and the infant mortality rate is 11 percent higher. Epidemics of bubonic plague in the Southwest, and hepatitis-B in Alaska, also point to the discrepancy between the health status of native Americans and that of other Americans. The Indian Health Care Amendments of 1985, if enacted, will make significant inroads toward correcting this appalling inequity.●

● Mr. MURKOWSKI. Mr. President, I rise in support of the reauthorization of the Indian Health Care Improvement Act which was passed by the Congress last year but was vetoed by the President. As I have stated before, passage of this legislation is essential to ensure the continued delivery of health care to American Indians and Alaska Natives.

The measure that was passed in the 98th Congress was the product of many hours of hearings, meetings, and thoughtful consideration and had strong bipartisan support. It is my hope that we can build upon the work of the last Congress and get speedy passage of the bill.

Many of the concerns outlined in President Reagan's veto message have been addressed in this new legislation. The controversial Montana provision has been dropped and certain provisions in the elevation of the Indian Health Service process have been modified. The spending authorizations have also been reduced.

Native Americans are probably the most medically underserved population in the country and there are statistics to prove it. In Alaska, for example, the mortality rate for Natives is substantially higher than that of non-Natives. Alaska Natives comprise only 16 percent of the State's population, but 27 percent of the State's mortality. Alaska Native infant mortality is also several percentage points higher than that of non-Natives. In fact the American Indian infant death rate is approximately 20 percent greater than that of the general population.

Recognizing our responsibility to address this matter, we have included in the reauthorization bill a specific requirement that the Secretary of Health and Human Services develop and begin to implement a plan to reduce the rate of Indian infant mortality.

The incidence of alcoholism among American Indians and Alaska Natives also far exceeds national averages. In Alaska, alcohol abuse remains one of the five leading causes of hospital discharges in the Alaska area. The Indian health care amendments establish an Office of Alcohol and Drug Abuse within the Indian Health Service which will have the responsibility for administering prevention, education, counseling, and referral services. This, in my opinion, is one of the most important sections of the bill. We must educate our youth about the dangers of drug and alcohol abuse.

The Indian Health Care Improvement Act also authorizes funds for the Hepatitis-B Screening Program in Alaska. A program is now in place that will eradicate this serious health problem. The bill authorizes the funds necessary to complete the program.

Prompt passage of this bill will be a confirmation to American Indians and Alaska Natives that the Federal Government intends to fulfill its responsibility to provide health care services to native Americans.

I am pleased to cosponsor this important legislation.●

S. 278. A bill to amend the Agricultural Act of 1949 and the Dairy Stabilization Act of 1983 to provide for a 6-month extension of the milk diversion program from April 1, 1985, to September 30, 1985; to the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry.

MILK DIVERSION PROGRAM EXTENSION ACT

Mr. KASTEN. Mr. President, today I am introducing legislation to extend the Milk Diversion Program.

During these difficult times for the dairy industry, the worst thing we could do is settle for a Federal dairy policy that is inconsistent and unpredictable. Yet unless Congress acts quickly, we will have exactly that in 1985.

The Milk Diversion Program is currently scheduled to expire on March 31. After that date, dairy farmers will face one price support cut on April 1, are likely to face another on July 1, and will have to deal with a completely new policy on October 1—assuming that Congress is able to pass a farm bill by then. So many changes in Government policy in 1 year just do not allow farmers to plan.

This bill, which has been introduced in the other Chamber by my colleague from Wisconsin, Mr. GUNDERSON, would provide a stable dairy policy during the time that Congress is debating the 1985 farm bill. It would extend the Milk Diversion Program through September 30, 1985, the date all the other commodity programs are scheduled to expire. It would also cancel the Secretary of Agriculture's authority to cut the support price in April and again in July. This authority is not required if our objective is a predictable dairy policy this year.

Mr. President, the Milk Diversion Program has done what it was intended to do; it has reduced spending on the Dairy Price Support Program, and it has done it quickly. In fiscal year 1984, the taxpayers saved over $1 billion as a result of greatly reduced Government purchases of surplus dairy products. The diversion program deserves much of the credit for this.

No one questions the need for reductions in Government spending to bring the deficit down and lower the high interest rates which hurt farmers most of all. Until Congress is able to come up with a new dairy program for the 1985 farm bill, why not continue a program which has saved the taxpayers money, has been funded entirely by the dairy farmers themselves, and has not raised the price of milk and other dairy products to the consumer? If Congress is able to come up with something better in the farm bill, fine; but until then, let's stay with the program that is working well right now.

Mr. President, I ask that the complete text of my legislation be printed in the RECORD at this point, and I urge all my colleagues to join me in cosponsoring this important agricultural initiative.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 278

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. This Act may be cited as the "Milk Diversion Program Extension Act of 1985".

SEC. 2. Section 201(d)(1)(B) of the Agricultural Act of 1949 (7 U.S.C. 1446(d)(1)(B)) is amended to read as follows:

"(B) Effective for the period beginning on the first day of the first calendar month following the date of enactment of the Dairy Production Stabilization Act of 1983 and ending on September 30, 1985, the price of milk shall be supported at a rate equivalent to $12.60 per hundredweight for milk containing 3.67 per centum milkfat.".

SEC. 3. Section 201(d)(2)(A)(i) of the Agricultural Act of 1949 (7 U.S.C. 1446(d)(2)(A)(i)) is amended to read as follows:

"(i) Effective for the period beginning with the first day of the first calendar month following the date of enactment of the Dairy Production Stabilization Act of 1983 and ending on September 30, 1985, to encourage the adjustment of milk production to levels consistent with the national demand for milk and the products of milk, the Secretary shall provide for a reduction of 50 cents per hundredweight to be made in the price received on all milk produced in the United States and marketed by producers for commercial use.".

SEC. 4. Section 201(d)(3) of the Agricultural Act of 1949 (7 U.S.C. 1446(d)(3)) is amended to create a new subparagraph (P) as follows:

"(P) The Secretary shall, on April 1, 1985, offer to extend the diversion contact, at any time up to May 1, 1985, of any producer who participated in the milk diversion program provided by this paragraph for an additional six-month period beginning on April 1, 1985, and ending on September 30, 1985, under the same terms and conditions for reductions in marketings and diversion payments as provided in this paragraph and by that contract, except that—

"(i) a producer need not submit another plan describing how that producer will accomplish the intended reduction in marketings; and

"(ii) the marketing history of a producer shall be the marketings of milk by such producer for commercial use during the period beginning April 1, 1982, and ending September 30, 1982, or, at the option of the producer, the average marketings of milk during that period and the period beginning April 1, 1981, and ending September 30, 1981, and may be adjusted and transferred only as provided in this paragraph.".

SEC. 5. The amendments made by this Act are effective on and after March 31, 1985.

By Mr. SYMMS (for himself, Mr. STAFFORD, Mr. ABDNOR, and Mr. DOMENICI):

S. 279. A bill to approve the Interstate and Interstate Substitution Cost Estimates; to the Committee on Environment and Public Works.

EMERGENCY HIGHWAY AND TRANSIT COST ESTIMATES APPROVAL ACT

Mr. SYMMS. Mr. President, I am pleased to introduce highway legislation today at the request of the administration. This legislation—the Emergency Highway and Transit Cost Estimates Approval Act of 1985—is similar to legislation (S.J. Res. 8) that Environment and Public Works Committee Chairman STAFFORD and I introduced on the first day of the 99th Congress. I understand that since then, several other bills to approve the interstate cost estimate [ICE] and interstate substitute cost estimate [ISCE] have either been introduced or are being considered by my colleagues in both the Senate and the House of Representatives. I welcome these collective efforts to secure congressional passage of clean ICE-ISCE legislation.

Three weeks ago in introducing Senate Joint Resolution 8, I said that over $7 billion in already authorized funds for interstate highway construction and interstate highway and transit substitute projects was in effect frozen, despite the fact that highway users are continuing to pay their taxes into the Highway Trust Fund. However, without congressional approval, those funds cannot be released to the States, and vital interstate construction and substitute projects have had to be indefinitely postponed.

In the past, the ICE and ISCE approvals have been very routine, noncontroversial, and timely. Unfortunately, the process has been complicated and seriously delayed for over a year by several major, extraneous issues. The administration bill would release interstate construction funds for fiscal years 1985 and 1986 which were available in fiscal years 1984 and 1985, release the remaining interstate substitution funds for fiscal years 1984 and 1985, and permit the apportionment of minimum allocation funds. If the ICE and ISCE had been approved on schedule, 2 years of funding could have been apportioned to the States, but so far Congress has only been able to pass interim legislation providing 6 months of funding. Public Law 98-229 was signed by the President on March 9, 1984, and the fraction of funding it provided has long since run out.

In submitting the administration bill, Secretary Dole said:

I hope . . . that we can work together for rapid approval of this emergency legislation so that we can get these vital programs moving again. However, I must note that the Administration will oppose enactment of emergency ICE/ISCE legislation that adds to the cost of the Interstate system, revises existing programs, creates new spending authorizations, or earmarks existing programs.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the entire text of Secretary Dole's letter as well as the section-by-section analysis of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE SECRETARY OF TRANSPORTATION,
Washington, DC, January 14, 1985.

Hon. GEORGE BUSH,
President of the Senate,
Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: We face a very serious transportation problem in this country. Construction of the Interstate highway system, which is critical to interstate commerce and the Nation's defense capability, has come to a near standstill because of Congressional inaction on an Interstate Cost Estimate (ICE) which is necessary to release more than $5 billion in Interstate construction funds. Other critical highway and transit construction activity has also been delayed by inaction on the Interstate Substitution Cost Estimate (ISCE).

I am required by 23 U.S.C. 104(b) to submit a new ICE for use in apportioning Interstate construction funds available in fiscal years 1986 and 1987. That ICE is attached. Additionally, I am taking this opportunity to submit a draft bill entitled:

"The Emergency Highway and Transit Cost Estimates Approval Act of 1985."

As described in detail below, it is essential that Congress act quickly to approve these cost estimates.

This bill would authorize the apportionment of the remaining Interstate construction funds for fiscal years 1985 and 1986 (which were available in 1984 and 1985) and the remaining Interstate substitution funds for fiscal years 1984 and 1985. By so doing it would also permit the apportionment of minimum allocation funds under 23 U.S.C. 157. This transmittal includes all of the information necessary to permit rapid action by the Congress. The bill would release Interstate construction funds on the basis of the tables in the 1985 ICE which I am now submitting. It would apportion Interstate substitution funds on the basis of the factors contained in committee print 98-36 of the House Committee on Public Works and Transportation.

Action on the ICE and ISCE is critical. More than $7 billion in Interstate construction, Interstate substitution, and minimum allocation funds, with the potential of providing more than 220,000 person-years of employment, is waiting to be released. Projections of the amount that each state is estimated to receive are shown in enclosure 5. Currently, 40 states are without sufficient Interstate funds to move forward with projects, and every state is being denied some Federal-aid of much-needed transportation improvements. Because of the delay in release of funds, work is not being done to close gaps in the Interstate highway system. Indeed, the entire 1985 construction season is now in jeopardy for many states, with serious safety, economic and convenience consequences to motorists.

Further, this disruption will ripple through related industries, adversely affecting contractors, materials suppliers, equipment manufacturers, and many others. Delays are adding to the cost of the system. By January, the loss of purchasing power due to these delays in apportioning fiscal years 1985 and 1986 funds will reach approximately $159 million and this figure could increase by an additional $18 million each month the ICE approval is delayed beyond January. A satisfactory bill needs to be enacted by March 1, 1985, to give the states time to advertise and award construction contracts in time for the summer construction season.

The failure to make this funding available will undermine efforts for timely completion of the Interstate System and substitute highway and transit projects, goals that were envisioned when Congress passed the Surface Transportation Assistance Act (STAA) of 1982 (Pub. L. 97-424) and increased user charges supporting the Highway Trust Fund. We do believe, however, there is sufficient time through the remainder of the 1980's to make up the ground lost in 1984, so long as there are no further disruptions in the flow of funds to the states.

The Federal-aid highway program has been financed directly through user fees since passage of the 1956 Federal-Aid Highway Act which established the Highway Trust Fund. Over the years, there has been strong support for the highway user fees which finance new and improved highways. However, if the funds are not distributed for the most important and significant highways in the nation, the Interstate System, the credibility of user fee financing becomes lost.

Because of the importance of quick approval of the ICE and ISCE, we have not included any highway program changes in this bill. We are proposing that the 1985 ICE be used as the basis for apportioning the remaining Interstate construction funds for fiscal years 1985 and 1986 because it reflects the most current estimate of the proportionate needs of each state to complete the Interstate System. As an example of how the situation has changed since the 1983 ICE, the cost to complete the Interstate System is estimated to be $26 billion in the 1985 ICE, compared to $36 billion in the 1983 ICE. The substitute highway and transit apportionment factors, as included in committee print 98-36, are recommended for use in apportioning remaining substitution funds for fiscal years 1984 and 1985. These factors are a revision of the 1984 ISCE transmitted by the Department in February. These ISCE tables were used by the Congress in allocating the Department's fiscal year 1985 discretionary funds.

In the spring, we will submit a comprehensive proposal for a post-1986 program, which is necessary since the STAA of 1982 authorizes most funds only through FY 1986. Further Congressional action will be necessary to apportion fiscal years 1987 and 1988 Interstate construction and fiscal year 1986 Interstate substitution funds, which need to be apportioned next October 1. I believe the proposal for the post-1986 program will provide the appropriate forum for debating program changes that were included in the ICE legislation which was considered but not passed by the 98th Congress. I hope that you will agree with this approach and that we can work together for rapid approval of this emergency legislation so that we can get these vital programs moving again. However, I must note that the Administration will oppose enactment of emergency ICE/ISCE legislation that adds to the cost of the Interstate System, revises existing programs, creates new spending authorizations, or earmarks existing programs.

The Office of Management and the Budget advises that enactment of this proposed legislation would be in accord with the program of the President.

Sincerely,

ELIZABETH HANFORD DOLE.

SECTION-BY-SECTION ANALYSIS

Section 1 gives the short title of the bill.

Section 2(a) requires the Secretary of Transportation to apportion the remaining Interstate construction funds previously authorized for the fiscal year 1985 and 1986 using the apportionment factors from the 1985 Interstate Cost Estimate (ICE). This section makes available over $5 billion for Interstate construction projects in states across the country. The apportionment factors for each state are shown in table 5 of the 1985 ICE Report.

Section 2(b) approves the 1983 ICE for technical and conforming purposes. It does not affect the apportionments of Interstate construction funds.

Section 3 requires the Secretary to apportion remaining Interstate substitution funds for the fiscal years 1984 and 1985. The factors that are approved are used to apportion funds made available for highway and transit projects by the withdrawal of unbuilt Interstate highway segments under the provisions of 23 U.S.C. § 103(e)(4). The areas that benefit from this approval and their apportionment factors are shown in tables 3 and 4 of committee print 98-36 of the House Committee on Public Works and Transportation.

Mr. SYMMS. Certainly I share the Secretary's hope, and I am encouraged by the growing number of highway users and Government officials who strongly support a clean 18-month ICE-ISCE approval, unencumbered by controversial policy changes and large, new special interest authorizations.

At their annual meeting last month, the American Association of State Highway and Transportation Officials [AASHTO] adopted a resolution in favor of a clean ICE and ISCE and did so by more than a two-thirds majority vote of all States.

Recently, the Environment and Public Works Committee asked AASHTO to survey all State departments of highways and transportation on their outlook for the Federal-aid highway program and the effect of the delayed ICE-ISCE approvals on each of the 50 States. This week AASHTO provided the survey results. To date, 239 projects worth approximately $1.2625 billion have been delayed. If there is no ICE-ISCE approval by October 1, 1985, the States estimate that nearly five times as many projects, 1,174 projects in all, worth $4.0522 billion will be on hold.

My own State, Idaho, described the problem shared by so many other States. as a result of withheld interstate funding, manpower and other resources have had to be shifted to noninterstate projects. The 1990 target date set by Congress for completion of the Interstate System has been jeopardized. Highway planning and research funding has been delayed. And there has been a significant economic impact due to the loss of construction activity and jobs.

According to the Federal Highway Administration, the present disruption has had a ripple effect through related industries, adversely affecting contractors, materials suppliers, equipment manufacturers, and many others. Delays are adding to the cost of the system. By the end of January, the loss of purchasing power due to these delays in apportioning fiscal years 1985 and 1986 funds will reach approximately $159 million and this figure could increase by an additional $18 million eah month the ICE approval is delayed beyond January.

The Road Information Program [TRIP], a nonprofit highway research group, has looked in particular at the economic impacts caused by the ICE/ISCE freeze. According to TRIP's analysis which will be released in its entirety next Monday:

More than 417,000 jobs, including a direct construction payroll of $3.2 billion, are being lost due to slow congressional action on passage of the interstate cost estimate.

Some $7 billion already earmarked primarily for the interstate highway system has not been released, leaving 43 States without enough money to build even 1 mile of interstate highway.

This money would create or sustain 184,100 construction and related jobs and another 233,100 "multiplier effect" jobs as the ICE funding moves through local and State economies.

"These jobs are critical to the Nation's continued economic recovery," said Donald S. Knight, executive director of TRIP.

Mr. President, I might just say that the money has already been raised. The taxpayers have already been asked to allocate these resources to the highway trust fund. So that money is not available to be spent on some other type of human activity or endeavor. It has already been allocated by the taxpayers to the Federal highway trust fund and now is being held hostage.

I agree, and I think the U.S. and State transportation departments agree. The Environment and Public Works Committee will be marking up ICE/ISCE legislation on Tuesday, January 29. I believe there is an urgent need for congressional approval of these estimates so that States will have time to advertise and award construction contracts in time for the summer construction season. I hope we can move as quickly as possible to report legislation out of committee and bring it to the Senate floor. There is growing national support for release of the more than $7 billion in interstate construction and substitute funding that has already been paid for in highway user taxes.

The Federal-aid highway program has been financed directly through user fees since passage of the 1956 Federal-Aid Highway Act which established the Highway Trust Fund. Over the years, there has been strong support for the highway user fees which finance new and improved highways. However, if the funds are not distributed for the most important and significant highways in the Nation, the Interstate System, the credibility of user fee financing becomes lost.

Even more importantly, we will begin to experience serious safety and economic consequences nationwide. I urge my colleagues to join in a concerted effort to pass clean ICE/ISCE legislation as soon as possible, or the closest thing to it we can pass. Each and every State will then at long last receive the funding it needs for vital transportation improvements.

Mr. President, I urge my colleagues to examine the two or three different bills that we have before us in the Environment and Public Works Committee and advise those of us on the committee who are working on the highway legislation which bill they would feel more comfortable with.

Last year, at the close of the 98th Congress, there was a very responsible approach. We did give some ground to some of the wishes with respect to some of the demonstration projects, but we did it in a way that we did not completely break the budget. The new wave of budget concern and spending reductions that is in the forefront here in the Nation's Capital at this point in time however, makes me think that probably the responsible thing for us to do would be to pass legislation very close to this that I now introduce by request for the administration.

Mr. President, I introduce this legislation on behalf of myself, by request from the administration, and for Senators STAFFORD, ABDNOR, and DOMENICI, and I ask unaminous consent that the bill be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Illinois is recognized.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, may I say to my distinguished friend and colleague from Idaho that I congratulate him upon the introduction of this clean ICE. He knows we were engaged in a considerable amount of discussion at the conclusion of the last session on differences over the formula for allocation of funds, some of which I felt impacted unfavorably on my State of Illinois. I have always supported, as my friend from Idaho knows, the passage of clean ICE. It is desperately needed in all parts of the country and in my State. I assure him he has my warm support as this matter comes to fruition.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this bill may be cited as the "Emergency Highway and Transit Cost Estimates Approval Act of 1985."

SEC. 2. (a) The Secretary of Transportation shall apportion for each of the fiscal years ending September 30, 1985, and September 30, 1986, the remaining funds to be apportioned for such years under section 104(b)(5)(A) of title 23, United States Code, using the apportionment factors from the Interstate Cost Estimate submitted to the Congress in January of 1985.

(b) The Interstate Cost Estimate submitted to the Congress in March of 1983 as it appears in the committee print numbered 98-202 of the Committee on Environment and Public Works of the United States Senate is approved for any statutory purpose other than the apportionment of funds.

SEC. 3. The Secretary of Transportation shall apportion for each of the fiscal years ending September 30, 1984 and September 30, 1985, the remaining sums to be apportioned for such years under section 103(e)(4) of title 23, United States Code, using the apportionment factors contained in the committee print numbered 98-36 of the House Committee on Public Works and Transportation.

By Mr. DURENBERGER (for himself and Mr. BOSCHWITZ):

S. 280. A bill entitled the "Food Stamp Redemption Act of 1985"; to the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry.

FOOD STAMP REDEMPTION ACT OF 1985

● Mr. DURENBERGER. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce the Food Stamp Redemption Act. In brief, this bill prohibits financial institutions from charging retail food stores service charges for the redemption of food stamp coupons. It is identical to legislation I introduced last session. I would like to make clear that, while I am the first Member of the Senate to introduce legislation to accomplish this end, I am not the only Member of the Senate to express an interest in this matter. In particular, I would like to express my gratitude and appreciation for the fine work which has been done on this by my two distinguished colleagues, Senator BOSCHWITZ and Senator DOLE.

This bill is an outgrowth of a series of meetings I have had with small, independent grocers in Minnesota and, after listening to their concerns, I am not sure we should not call this legislation the Food Stamp Preservation Act. The problem this legislation is designed to address is one which threatens the efficiency, if not the viability, of the Food Stamp Program.

In a nutshell, financial institutions have instituted a policy of charging retailers service charges for processing food stamp coupons. These charges apparently are not uniform, ranging from $1.50 per bundle to 8 cents per coupon. Many of my grocers tell me that these fees could very well exceed their margin of profit on food stamp transactions. If these service charges are allowed to continue unchecked, they could force many small grocers to withdraw from the program. This is a development to be avoided at all costs, and I am hopeful that this bill will prevent that development from occurring.

A similar provision can be found in the House-passed Hunger Relief Act of 1984.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the bill and a statement by James Toll on behalf of the National Grocers Association be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 280

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. This Act may be cited as the "Food Stamp Redemption Act".

SEC. 2. (a) Section 10 of the Food Stamp Act of 1977 (7 U.S.C. 2019) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence: "No financial institution may impose on or collect from a retail food store a fee or other charge for the redemption of coupons that are submitted to the financial institution in a manner consistent with the requirements, other than any requirements relating to cancellation of coupons, for the presentation of coupons by financial institutions to the Federal Reserve Banks".

(b) The Secretary, in consultation with the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, shall issue regulations implementing the provisions of subsection (a).

STATEMENT OF JAMES A. STOLL ON BEHALF OF NATIONAL GROCERS ASSOCIATION

I. INTRODUCTION

My name is James Stoll, president and chairman of Stoll's Foods, Inc., headquartered in New Philadelphia, Ohio. My company operates three stores in eastern Ohio and has been in the retail grocery business since 1972.

I am a past chairman of the National Association of Retail Grocers in the United States (NARGUS), which in October 1982 merged with the Cooperative Food Distributors of America (C.F.D.A.) to form the National Grocers Association (N.G.A.). As a member of the N.G.A. Board of Directors and its Executive Committee, I am pleased to present this testimony on its behalf.

N.G.A. is a national trade association representing over fifteen hundred independent retail grocers, sixty-six retailer-owned cooperative warehouses which serve over twenty-eight thousand food stores, and fifty-six state and local food distributor associations. N.G.A. members serve consumers in every type of community—rural, suburban, urban and inner city—by operating supermarkets, small and medium size grocery stores, as well as warehouse and convenience stores.

I wish to commend the Chairman and this Subcommittee for holding a hearing on the food stamp program and for providing N.G.A. with this opportunity to comment upon the increasing amount and types of fees which many banks are imposing upon food retailers making food stamp deposits. While new and escalating bank fees borne by consumers and business have received recent Congressional and media attention, these food stamp charges levied on an instrument intended to help feed the needy in our society are particularly objectionable.

My testimony will focus upon these food stamp-related bank fees, the resulting costs to retail food stores, the inequities of the situation and the need for corrective Congressional action.

II. FEDERAL FOOD STAMP REQUIREMENTS

The Food Stamp Act of 1977, 7 USC Section 201, et seq., states that food coupons must be redeemed for face value:

Coupons issued and used as provided for in this chapter shall be redeemable at face value by the Secretary through the facilities of the Treasury of the United States. 7 U.S.C. Section 2012(a).

Additionally, USDA regulations require retail stores participating in the food stamp program to accept coupons "for eligible foods at the same prices and on the same terms and conditions applicable to cash purchases of the same foods at the same store." 7 CFR Section 278.2(b)

Therefore, pursuant to federal law and in accordance with USDA regulations, food retailers are explicitly prohibited from discriminating against food stamp recipients by charging higher prices or by imposing special fees.

Nevertheless, more and more banks are penalizing grocery stores, and indirectly the food stamp user, by assessing special fees for food stamp deposits. N.G.A. submits that this discriminatory banking practice is contrary to federal law and USDA regulations and should not be permitted to continue.

III. BANK CHARGES FOR ACCEPTING FOOD STAMPS

The members of N.G.A. are distressed that many financial institutions are discounting the face value of food stamps deposited by grocery stores, as well as charging a fee for the food stamp deposit itself. As discussed above, federal law prohibits retailers from discriminating against food stamp recipients. On the other hand, many financial institutions are penalizing grocery stores by assessing special fees for food stamp deposits. In turn, these banking fees are indirectly discriminating against consumers who rely upon food stamp assistance to feed themselves and their families.

Food retailers participating in the food stamp program incur additional labor and administrative costs. For example, time management studies document that food stamp transactions take a cashier longer to complete than cash or check purchases of grocery items. In addition, many banks require retailers to bundle or wrap coupons before they will accept them for deposit. Also, because some banks have established minimum amounts for food stamp deposits, many retailers are forced to hold the food stamps for days or weeks until an amount sufficient for a bank deposit accumulates. Throughout this waiting period, these coupons represent another cost—a negative cash flow—for the retailer.

In order to comply with federal law and department regulations, food retailers must allocate labor and administrative cost associated with accepting food stamps throughout their overall cost of doing business. However, in an industry in which the average annual margin or profit is 1 percent, the allocation of any extra costs, including the labor and administrative costs of accepting food coupons, has a significant impact upon the economic viability of the retail food store.

A survey of N.G.A. members conducted last year discloses that a substantial number of its members are being assessed a food stamp handling fee. About 20 percent of the respondents indicate that they are being charged a fee by at least one bank in over twenty states. Over two-thirds of those being charged indicate that they are being charged for each coupon. The charges range from a low of $.025 per 100 coupons to a high of 6 cents per coupon reported by a retailer in Minnesota. A summary of typical food stamp redemption fees reported by representative retailers in several key states appears in Appendix A.

In my business, each of my three stores makes approximately 20 food stamp deposits per month. My bank is charging me a fee of $.25 for each individual deposit. In addition, the bank requires food stamps to be bundled for deposit and charges me for the special strap or wrapper which must be used. Also, each food stamp deposit must be accompanied by a special deposit slip, for which I am charged, too.

Other retailers throughout Ohio are incurring greater processing fees by banks which are charging on a per coupon basis, instead of a per deposit basis. For example, Russo's Eagle Supermarket in Cleveland, Ohio, whose annual sales exceed $1 million, including a large percentage of food stamp purchases, is being charged a $.02 per coupon fee by its bank, regardless of the face value of the coupon. Also in the Cleveland area, Dave's Eagle Supermarket and Wayside Eagle Supermarket were paying to its bank a $.05 and $.04 per coupon fee, respectively. In an attempt to avoid these charges, both retailers "shopped" for another bank. However, the "best deal" in their local areas still requires them to pay a food stamp charge for each deposit.

This is not a local or regional problem. Indeed, N.G.A. members throughout the country are having their food stamps discounted by banks. Specifically, Macey's Inc., a six-store Utah retailer doing business as Sack N' Save, has been assessed by its banks fees of various kinds and amounts on food stamps deposits. Its highest volume store was being charged a $.03 per coupon fee. Although its bank has recently acquiesced to the store's complaints and reduced the processing fee, this store is still being charged $0.01 for each food stamp coupon.

Other Sack N' Save stores have been given three fee options by the banks with which they do business. First, loose coupon deposits would cost the retailer $0.0475 per deposit. Second, if the retailer cancels and bundles the coupons itself, then the bank would charge it $0.50 per 100 coupons. Finally, in addition to cancelling and bundling the coupons, if the retailer bags and seals them for direct delivery to the Federal Reserve, then the bank's processing fee would be $2.00 per bag.

By opting for the last alternative, these Sack N' Save stores have reduced their monthly food stamp charges from $350 to $10, but they have increased their labor and administrative costs. Moreover, each deposit contains nearly $12,000 worth of food stamps, representing a significant security risk in the event that they are lost, stolen or destroyed prior to the deposit. During the time that it takes to fill each bag with food stamps, they represent a negative cash flow to each individual store, as well.

So while this particular Utah retailer has reduced, but not eliminated, his direct bank charges for processing food stamps, the stores have increased their internal costs, assumed a constant security risk and absorbed a continual negative cash flow. In the meantime, each Sack N' Save store continues to accept food stamps from its customers in a nondiscriminatory way, as federal law requires.

Likewise, retailers throughout Northern California are being assessed processing fees on food stamps. On the lower end of the spectrum is a charge of 1.4 cents per unit (each food stamp is considered a unit regardless of its face value) reported by Sure Save Market in Madera. Larry's Market in Arcata, CA, is being charged 3 cents for coupons in bundles of a minimum of 100 stamps and 3.9 cents for each loose coupon. Also, Pacific Foodland in Cresecent City, CA. reports that all but one of the banks in the area are charging .05 cents for each coupon deposited. The only bank that has yet to institute a food stamp processing fee has informed Pacific Foodland that it intends to do so, shortly.

As the Subcommittee might suspect, these food stamp fees are part of many new and increased service fees being assessed by banks throughout the country. Appendix B contains a list of a variety of charges, including food stamp fees, which banks are passing to retail grocery stores and to other commercial customers.

Based upon the foregoing information, N.G.A. respectfully submits that this is a nationwide problem which is having a detrimental impact upon a federally-funded benefit program, thereby clearly justifying Congressional inquiry and action.

IV. USDA REFUSES TO CORRECT INEQUITABLE SITUATION

Before turning to Congress to resolve this inequitable situation, N.G.A. and other retail food trade associations, including the Food Marketing Institute and the National Association of Convenience Stores, had worked with the U.S. Department of Agriculture throughout 1983 in an attempt to resolve the problem. In a series of meetings with the Secretary of Agriculture and the Administrator of the Food and Nutrition Service, N.G.A. urged that the Secretary exercise his authority contained in the Food Stamp Act of 1977 to stop banks from continuing this costly practice.

A reading of the Act reveals that the Secretary of Agriculture, in cooperation with the Department of Treasury, has the authority to regulate financial institutions participating in the food stamp redemption process. Specifically, Section 2019 of the law, 7 USC, states:

Regulations issued pursuant to this chapter shall provide for the redemption of coupons accepted by retail food stores through approved wholesale food concerns or through financial institutions which are insured by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, with the cooperation of the Department of Treasury.

The regulations, which the Secretary of the Agriculture has promulgated under the law, clearly govern both retail stores and banks which participate in the food stamp program. For example, Section 278.5, 7 CFR Part 278.5, specifically regulates the redemption of coupons by banks, requiring Federal Reserve Banks to act as "fiscal agents of the United States (to) receive canceled coupons for collection as cash items."

Because the Secretary of the Agriculture has already exercised authority under the Food Stamp Act to regulate banks participating in the food stamp program, N.G.A. believes he has the authority to prohibit banks from charging redemption fees to retail stores, in the present instance. Unfortunately, the department has refused to exercise this authority. In a letter dated December 6, 1983, John W. Bode, Deputy Assistant Secretary for Food and Consumer Services, wrote to N.G.A. President Thomas K. Zaucha, stating "we have determined not to initiate a rulemaking to preclude financial institutions from charging fees for the redemption of food stamp coupons." (See Appendix C.)

In light of the increasing number of financial institutions throughout the country assessing processing fees on food stamp coupons and the decision of the Secretary of the Agriculture not to take appropriate action, the country's retail food industry is forced to turn toward Congress to correct this growing problem.

V. LEGISLATIVE ACTION IS NECESSARY AND APPROPRIATE

Despite language in the Food Stamp Act requiring food retailers to treat food stamp transactions as cash transactions and requiring banks to exchange coupons for their face value, more and more banks are proceeding to adopt a practice which discounts the face value of the food stamp and assesses a processing fee to the retailer participating in the food stamp program. While grocers are prohibited from discriminating against food stamp users, banks are proceeding to do so. On its face this is an inequitable situation which threatens to undermine the integrity of a major component of our federal feeding programs.

Accordingly, N.G.A. respectfully urges this Subcommittee to amend the act to prevent a practice which is contrary to the intent of the law, that is unfair to retail food stores and coupon users, and allows banks to profit improperly from the food stamp program—a program which was designed to aid the poor, not to assist the banks. To this end, the association would wholeheartedly support a clarifying amendment prohibiting all institutions participating in the food stamp program, including retail grocery stores, food wholesalers and banks, to pay or assess any fees or charges in connection with the acceptance, processing the redemption of these food coupons.

VI. CONCLUSION

On behalf of the National Grocers Association, I want to thank Chairman Panetta and the members of this Subcommittee for allowing me the opportunity to testify on this matter of great importance to our industry. In addition, I wish to commend Mr. Panetta for holding hearings on this issue, as well as on the overall effectiveness of our federal food programs. In this regard, H.G.A. commends Congressman Panetta for introducing H.R. 5151, the "Hunger Relief Act of 1984," and hopes that our recommended prohibition on charging processing fees for redeeming food stamps can become part of this commendable legislative proposal.

APPENDIX C

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, DC, December 6, 1983.

Mr. THOMAS K. ZAUCHA,
President, National Grocers Association, Reston, VA.

DEAR MR. ZAUCHA: Thank you for meeting with us to express the views of the National Grocers Association (NGA) regarding bank service charges incurred by grocery retailers for food stamp redemption. We have thoroughly reviewed the matter.

We share your concern that a growing number of retailers who honor food stamps are being charged a handling fee by banks. We see these charges as part of a larger trend among financial institutions. Specifically, a growing number of these institutions charge fees for various services such as handling cash and checks.

Consistent with the deregulatory effort in financial institutions, the Food and Nutrition Service (FNS) has promulgated regulations which permit savings and loan institutions, as well as banks, to redeem food stamp coupons. This new rule is intended to expand the number of financial institutions at which retailers may redeem coupons. Increased competition will help curtail financial institution service fees.

As you know, FNS is experimenting with alternatives to the food coupon in the operation of the Food Stamp Program, and eventually some of these ideas may alleviate the significant costs associated with redeeming coupons. Thereby, the pressure for financial institution service fees would be relieved.

In light of these efforts and our reluctance to expand the scope of FNS regulatory activities to a broad new class of institutions, we have determined not to initiate a rulemaking to preclude financial institutions from charging fees for the redemption of food stamp coupons.

We will, however, continue to monitor this situation and work with representatives of the financial community in an effort to limit this practice.

Sincerely,

JOHN W. BODE,
DEPUTY ASSISTANT SECRETARY for Food and Consumer Services.●

By Mr. PRYOR (for himself, Mr. HEINZ, Mr. NUNN, Mr. ZORINSKY, Mr. SASSER, Mr. QUAYLE, and Mr. BOREN):

S. 281. A bill to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 to add a section dealing with public safety vehicles; to the Committee on Finance.

TAX TREATMENT OF PUBLIC SAFETY VEHICLES

● Mr. PRYOR. Mr. President, today I am introducing a bill to correct what I believe is a very serious flaw in our existing Tax Code and Treasury regulations. It is in the area of fringe benefits and involves the question of whether or not an individual, like a sheriff's deputy, is taxable on any portion of the use of his patrol car. The bill I am introducing today will ensure that public safety employees are not taxable on any use of a specially equipped vehicle. It adds a new subsection (6) to section 132(h) of the Internal Revenue Code (added by last year's Tax Reform Act) to provide that any use of a public safety vehicle shall be treated as a working condition fringe benefit, and therefore, not taxable.

Mr. President, last year in our deliberations on the tax bill, we discussed the issue of fringe benefits. The final version of the act (Public Law 98-369) added a new section to the Tax Code—Section 132. This section provides four general fringe benefit categories. If an employer-provided benefit fits into one of these categories, then the employee does not have any income to the extent of the benefit provided. The four types of benefits are the working condition fringe, the no-additional-cost fringe benefit, the qualified employee discount, and the de minimis fringe. Included in the statute are certain special rules dealing with automobile salesmen, parking, and athletic facilities. The bill I am introducing today adds a new special rule to section 132 covering the use of a public safety vehicle by a public safety employee.

Pursuant to new section 132, Mr. President, temporary and proposed regulations were issued by the Internal Revenue Service on December 31, 1984. These regulations have certain rules dealing with employee use of cars, whether for full-time use, or solely for commuting purposes. Generally, if certain requirements are met, and the car is used only for commuting purposes, the regulations provide that the employee has additional income of $4 per day. If the conditions for the special $4 per day rule aren't met, then the individual is taxable for the percentage of personal use of the vehicle. This percentage is applied against the annual lease value of the car, depending upon the fair market value. In order to figure personal use, Mr. President, travel logs must be kept. As I understand the regulations that have been proposed, Mr. President, there is no exemption from these rules for our law enforcement and fire officials. If this is the case, then they'll have taxable income of $4 per day, or alternatively, will be taxed on a portion of the annual lease value and have to keep a travel log.

Mr. President, it seems to me that this is the wrong result. The bill I'm introducing will provide a statutory exemption. The reason an exemption is needed is clear—these men and women protect the public safety and every time they're in their vehicles they are "on duty." Even though their shift might end in a technical sense, they are constantly on call and respond to emergencies at all hours of the day and night. Further, they respond to emergencies whenever they are in their vehicles, whether driving around town or out on the highways. Therefore, it seems to me that these public safety personnel are always "on duty." Every State trooper, sheriff, deputy sheriff, city policeman, and emergency medical worker I know in Arkansas is always on duty, ready to respond to any type of emergency. These perople work extremely long hours, in good weather and bad, and it just seems to me that we should not impose any tax or require travel logs when they drive these vehicles.

If we don't change this, consider the alternatives. Before going anywhere after their shift ends, they'll probably have to keep a log. Also, during their shift, they could conceivably have to keep a log to record any "personal use." What if, instead of having to have an extra $4 per day in compensation, a trooper or deputy decided to leave the patrol car at the courthouse and commute in his own car or truck? When an emergency occurs they would have to go to the courthouse, get the patrol car, and then respond.

For all of these reasons, Mr. President, I think the statute should have a clear exemption for the use of public safety vehicles. The bill defines a "public safety vehicle" as any type of specially equipped transportation used by a public safety employee. Under the bill, a "public safety employee" is a person working in law enforcement; fire protection; emergency medical services (like an ambulance driver or emergency medical technician); or any other activity, as defined by the Secretary, where a substantial portion of the work involves the protection of public safety.

Mr. President, I urge my colleagues to join me in this effort. I strongly believe this is something we should do for our public safety employees, and I think it will correct a serious flaw in this area of employee use of an automobile.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 281

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That

(a) Section 132 (h) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 is amended by inserting a new paragraph "(6)" to read as follows:

"(6) PUBLIC SAFETY VEHICLES.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—For purposes of subsection (a) (3), any use of a public safety vehicle by a public safety employee shall be treated as a working condition fringe.

(B) PUBLIC SAFETY VEHICLE.—For purposes of subparagraph (A), the term 'public safety vehicle' means any type of specially equipped transportation used by a public safety employee.

(C) PUBLIC SAFETY EMPLOYEE.—For purposes of subparagraphs (A) and (B), the term 'public safety employee' means any person working in law enforcement, fire protection, emergency medical services, or any other employment as defined by the Secretary, wherein a substantial portion of the work involves protection of public safety."

(b) The amendments made by this Act shall be effective for taxable years beginning on or after January 1, 1985●

By Mr. HOLLINGS:

S. 282. A bill to establish a National Trade Council within the Executive Office of the President, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Governmental Affairs.

NATIONAL TRADE COUNCIL ACT OF 1985

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, no problem we face—and we face many—holds more peril to our future than the growing noncompetitiveness of the United States in the global economic contest. In calendar year 1984, we suffered a trade deficit of $130 billion and this year, that will rise easily to $150 billion unless we sober up and straighten out our Government's twisted sense of priorities. Just as surely as $200 billion budget deficits have busted the Federal Government, these gigantic and totally unprecedented trade deficits are breaking the economy. Indeed, this Nation of once huge trade surpluses—this country of Yankee traders, hard bargaining, and world commerce—has come a cropper. We are now, believe it or not, a debtor Nation, in hock to the rest of the world. Worse, at the whim of the world, for if these other investing countries decide to pull the plug on America and take the billions they have invested here home, we would be washed right down the money drain.

There is no mystery as to the cause of our trade malady. Oh, some will tell you that it's because other peoples have surpassed the American worker in productivity. That is profoundly false. The Bureau of Labor Statistics and the chamber of commerce both agree that the American is still the most productive worker in the world. While the rates of increase here the past few years have lagged behind increases elsewhere, in absolute terms we are still measurably ahead in the productivity index. Others will argue that we lack the research and technology and this is wherein America fails. While it is true we have exported much of our expertise, America still has the lead in creativity, research know-how, education, and industrial innovation. Nor is our problem any lack of competitive zeal among our business leaders and their employees. The captains of American industry have been retooling, modernizing, finding new ways to compete. Unfortunately, for want of encouragement to produce here at home, many have taken this know-how—and the jobs it produces—offshore. Not because they are unpatriotic, but because they are denied the help of their Government in the international trade competition.

This is the nub of the problem. All around this world of ours, countries are throwing their resources into taking over America's markets and picking off America's jobs. Governments everywhere work with business people to give them the advantage. They erect every sort of barrier imaginable to keep our products out of their markets and they confer on their producers every advantage imaginable to corner our markets. Tax rebates on exported goods, complicated licensing requirements, lengthy inspection practices at the foreign dock, remote port facilities overseas, direct and indirect subsidies, government research and planning, government-backed loans, government procurement, government financing, government monetary and trade policies—you name it and it's being used against us even as we speak.

While other nations are down on the field competing for jobs, dollars, and markets, America sits up in the stands with our leaders caterwauling free trade, protectionism, free trade protectionism as if the world hadn't moved on since the turn of the century. Their debate is as remote from the realities of today's world competition as the clipper ship is to the world of modern commerce. For in truth, what is at issue here is simple and stark. At issue are our jobs, our standard of living, our national security.

Jobs.—Every billion dollars in America's trade imbalance is 25,000 lost jobs. Figure it out. Last year's trade deficit translates into 3,250,000 job opportunities lost to the United States.

Standard of living.—The shirt I am wearing can be produced in Shanghai for 18 cents an hour. Would the free traders reduce America's standard of living to 18 cents an hour? Public policy exacts of America's industry certain costs of doing business. We require a minimum wage, a safe working place, product liability for defects, unemployment compensation, Social Security, clean air, clear water—together they constitute the American standard of living. Impose these standards on others and their costs rise too. But others don't require that standard. Safeguarding it is not undercutting any overseas comparative advantage. In this modern world, any product can be produced anywhere. The point is, we produce in a society where production must meet certain high standards vital to us all.

National security.—The United States is the leader of the free world. Upon the success of our economy rests the future of enterprise, the future of freedom. The world's leader cannot denude itself of the capacity to produce and still expect to lead. As a world power, we must have the capacity to produce steel, rubber, glass, textiles, machine tools, automobiles, rolling stock. You cannot deliver your wheat on an optic fiber. You cannot go to war in foreign uniforms. We cannot sustain without basic industry. We must disenthrall ourselves. What has been visited on basic industry is now experienced by every sector of American enterprise, including the electronics, computers, and high tech which were supposed to be our salvation.

Mr. President, Congress over the years has responded to our growing trade vulnerability. It has enacted statutes to protect against dumping, overshipments, foreign subsidization and other unfair and illegal trade practices being deployed against America. We have on the books a host of remedies which, if enforced, would level the field of play and give America's business and America's workers the chance to compete and show their stuff. We have countervailing duties, antidumping duties, section 201 actions, section 301 actions, section 406 actions, and section 337 actions. We have had escape clauses, peril points and trigger prices put on the books. We have established agencies and tribunals to monitor America's trade condition. We have armed ourselves to compete.

Unfortunately, Presidents come to town and refuse to use the weapons provided. They get caught up in the State Department mentality of turning the other cheek whenever somebody infringes our markets. Because, after all, if we aren't nice to anyone, we won't have any friends left. This sounds nonsensical and is nonsensical, but that's been standard operating procedure down in Foggy Bottom and standard operating procedure in the Oval Office too. And nowadays, that mentality is further entrenched by an overlay of free trade ideology making this administration even blinder than most of its dim-eyed predecessors.

Mr. President, after World War II, with communism on the march and America's well-being threatened, we instituted in the President's office the National Security Council. It was formed to coordinate the bureaucracies of the State and Defense Departments, to evaluate and distill the conflicting advice and competing constituencies of all the agenices of the government involved in our national security. The object: To give the President the unvarnished facts and unbiased perspective from which to act quickly and effectively in the national interest. That procedure has served America well.

Now it is time to be equally serious about our dismal performance in the global economic contest. For on the outcome of this contest hinges perpetuation of our jobs, our standard of living, our very national security.

Today I introduce legislation to establish a Trade Council in the White House, analogous to the National Security Council. My legislation is patterned directly on the legislation which authorized the National Security Council. The Trade Council would coordinate all those departments and agencies of government, and they are legion, who dip into trade policy. It would coordinate the Departments of State, Treasury, Commerce, Defense, Labor, Agriculture, and the U.S. Trade Representative into a coherent and competitive trade policy. Just as there is an assistant to the President for National Security Affairs, so would there be an assistant to the President for Trade Policy. The Council would be charged with advising the President on the totality of our competitive position and mandated to consider the standard of living and national security ramifications of America's trade policy.

The Trade Council would call on America's best and brightest in its deliberations. This legislation would provide an advisory board from science and education to counsel on research and technology. There would be an advisory council of business and labor to understand that in the enforcement of our laws, investments should go for jobs and increased productivity, and to ensure consideration of America's standard of living in all trade deliberations. There would be a food and fiber board advising the Trade Council so that once again we can become a reliable supplier of foodstuffs the world around.

A Trade Council brings a focus to trade decisions and provides the President with the unvarnished facts and the unbiased advice that only a council within the White House can provide. It makes no sense to continue down the road we have been traveling, with one agency deciding on relief only to have a bureaucrat in another agency or a Cabinet head in another department reverse the decision. A Trade Council confers on trade the high priority it demands. Don't come with suggestions to add the word "trade" to an old Cabinet department and call that meaningful. Don't come with suggestions simply to move the deck chairs around on the Titanic. That may improve the appearance of the ship on the surface, but the ship is sinking. America is sinking, and unless trade is given the focus and the priority attention which only a Trade Council can provide—unless there is a Trade Council above the bureaucratic fray to give the President what he needs to act—then we continue to sink until we are out of sight and out of breath.

Mr. President, I hereby introduce this important Trade Council legislation, and I request its joint referral to the Senate Committee on Commerce, the Senate Committee on Governmental Affairs, and the Senate Committee on Finance.

S. 282

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "National Trade Council Act of 1985".

ESTABLISHMENT

SEC. 2. There is established in the Executive Office of the President a council to be known as the National Trade Council (hereinafter referred to as the "Council").

MEMBERSHIP OF THE COUNCIL

SEC. 3. (a) The Council shall be composed of—

(1) the President;
(2) the Vice President;
(3) the Secretary of State;
(4) the Secretary of the Treasury;
(5) the Secretary of Defense;
(6) the Secretary of Agriculture;
(7) the Secretary of Commerce;
(8) the Secretary of Labor; and
(9) the United States Trade Representative.

(b) The President shall preside over meetings of the Council. In the President's absence, the President may designate a member of the Council to preside in the President's place.

FUNCTIONS OF THE COUNCIL

SEC. 4. (a) The Council shall advise the President with respect to the integration of national and international policies relating to trade so as to enable the President and the departments and agencies of the Federal Government to cooperate more effectively in matters involving international trade.

(b) In addition to performing such other functions as the President may direct, for the purposes of more effectively coordinating the policies and functions of the departments and agencies of the Federal Government relating to international trade and making recommendations to the President, the Council shall, subject to the direction of the President—

(1) assess and appraise the Nation's international trade policies (including commodity and direct investment matters) and international trade objectives;

(2) consider policies on matters of common interest to the departments and agencies of the Federal Government concerned with international trade;

(3) consider the relationship between the Nation's standard of living and its international trade policies; and

(4) evaluate the effects of the Nation's international trade policies and objectives on the national security.

EMPLOYEES OF THE COUNCIL

SEC. 5. The Council shall have a staff to be headed by an executive secretary who shall be appointed by the President. The executive secretary, subject to the direction of the Council and in accordance with the provisions of title 5, United States Code, may appoint and fix the compensation of such personnel as may be necessary to perform such duties as may be prescribed by the Council in connection with the performance of its functions.

RECOMMENDATIONS AND REPORTS

SEC. 6. The Council shall, from time to time, make such recommendations and such other reports to the President as the Council considers to be appropriate or as the President may require.

ADVISORY COMMITTEES

SEC. 7. (a)(1) The Council shall appoint a Food and Fibre Advisory Committee to advise the Council regarding the production and distribution of food and food products in international trade.

(2) The Council shall appoint a Business and Labor Advisory Committee to advise the Council regarding methods to increase the productivity of the Nation's workforce so as to improve international trade.

(3) The Council shall appoint a Research and Development Advisory Committee to advise the Council regarding technological research and development, in order to improve international trade. Members of such Advisory Committee shall be selected on the basis of their expertise in the fields of science and education.

(b) The Council may appoint such other advisory committees and employ, consistent with the provisions of this Act, such part-time advisory personnel as the Council may consider necessary in carrying out its functions under this Act.

(c) Members of advisory committees established pursuant to this section who are employees of the Federal Government shall receive no additional compensation for their service on such advisory committees. Members of such advisory committees who are not employees of the Federal Government shall be entitled to receive compensation at a daily rate not to exceed the daily equivalent of the rate of pay in effect for grade GS-18 of the General Schedule established by section 5332 of title 5, United States Code.

Mr. KASTEN subsequently said: Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the previous request of Senator HOLLINGS dealing with a joint referral be temporarily vitiated. I would like to inform the Senate that this request has been cleared with Senator HOLLINGS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

By Mr. MITCHELL (for himself, Mr. CHAFEE, Mr. STAFFORD, Mr. MOYNIHAN, Mr. LAUTENBERG, Mr. CRANSTON, Mr. DODD, Mr. COHEN, Mr. RUDMAN, Mr. LEAHY, Mr. KASTEN, Mr. HUMPHREY, Mr. HOLLINGS, Mr. PELL, and Mr. BAUCUS):

S. 283. A bill to amend the Clean Air Act to better protect against interstate transport of pollutants, to control existing and new sources of acid deposition, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Environment and Public Works.

ACID DEPOSITION CONTROL ACT

● Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I am today introducing, for the third time, comprehensive legislation to deal with the problem of acid rain. This bill requires a 10-million-ton reduction in sulfur dioxide emissions within 10 years after enactment. It is virtually identical to the legislation I introduced for Senate consideration in the 97th Congress and again in the 98th Congress.

Twice the Committee on Environment and Public Works has approved a slightly modified version of my legislation by an overwhelming margin, in 1982 and in 1984. Twice it has not been scheduled for consideration by the full Senate. I hope that this will not be the case in the 99th Congress.

The evidence of environmental damage from acid precipitation continues to grow. While I would prefer to have been successful in my efforts to enact legislation, the accumulation of scientific knowledge over the past 5 years makes me confident that we will eventually have a meaningful acid rain control program. There is no question as to whether we will act, only a question as to when we will act. To the extent that we wait, the reductions required will likely increase, and the program will be more comprehensive.

There can be no serious doubt that acid precipitation has damaged lakes and streams. Evidence is also mounting that acid rain may indeed be causing forest damage in the United States. And we are beginning to see evidence of human health damage that is associated with current levels of acidic compounds.

I know of no other situation in which so much evidence for action has been available, but has been ignored by policymakers. We will pay for this shortsightedness in increased environmental damage, and perhaps in the cost of a control strategy. There may be disagreement as to the details of a control strategy. This is to be expected. My frustration has been the inability to discuss and debate such issues openly in the Congress. Only when this occurs can we fashion a program which addresses the legitimate concerns of Members of this body.

The U.S. Congress, and in particular this body, has always acted to address an environmental problem when action has been needed at the Federal level. We have been leaders. Such an opportunity presents itself now. It is my hope that we will once again provide such leadership, to assure that further losses to our water resources are prevented, and potential losses to our agriculture and forest resources are not realized.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a description of the bill be printed following my statement, as well as the full text of the bill.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DESCRIPTION OF ACID RAIN LEGISLATION, INTRODUCED BY SENATOR GEORGE J. MITCHELL, JANUARY 24, 1985

ACID RAIN REGION

1. A 31-State acid rain mitigation region, consisting of all States east of or bordering on the Mississippi River is established.

2. The Environmental Protection Agency shall conduct a study of the long-range transport of air pollutants in the regions of the continental United States not included in the acid rain region, and report the results of the study to the Congress within two years after enactment.

SULFUR REDUCTION STRATEGY

1. Sulfur dioxide emissions in the acid rain region shall be ten million tons below 1980 levels within ten years after enactment.

Sources which will achieve sulfur reductions through fuel switching must be in compliance with their mandated reductions six years after enactment. Sources which will comply through installation of control technology or installation of replacement capacity must be in compliance ten years after enactment.

2. During and after the reduction period, increases in the emission rates of sulfur dioxide and nitrogen oxides from existing and new sources must be offset by reductions from sources within the acid rain region.

3. The ten million ton reduction is to be apportioned among the 31-States. Each State's sulfur reduction share is to be determined by the amount of sulfur dioxide being emitted at a rate in excess of 1.2 lbs per million Btu in each State relative to the total amount of sulfur dioxide being emitted in the region at a rate greater than 1.2 lbs per million Btu.

4. The mandated reductions are to be planned for and accomplished according to the following schedule:

The Governor of each State in the 31-State acid rain region shall submit to the Federal Environmental Protection Agency for approval a plan to achieve its required sulfur reduction.

The EPA Administrator shall approve within six months each State's plan if it is adequate to achieve the mandated reduction within the specified time.

If a State does not submit a plan to achieve its mandated reductions, or its plan is disapproved by the Administrator, a fallback cleanup strategy will go into effect in that State.

The owner or operator of each fossil-fuel burning electric generating facility located in that State must comply with an emission limitation at all of its facilities in the region which is equivalent to an average of 1.2 lbs. of sulfur dioxide per million Btu among those facilities.

18 months after State plans are submitted (four years after enactment), sources subject to sulfur reduction requirements must state whether they will achieve reductions through fuel switching or the installation of technology, which may be either retrofit of an existing source or the installation of replacement capacity for a retiring source.

Within 24 additional months (six years after enactment) sources subject to sulfur reduction requirements must either switch fuel or enter into binding contractual commitments for control technology.

Within ten years after enactment, conventional retrofit technology must be in operation.

5. In addition to all conventional methods of compliance currently authorized by the Clean Air Act such as installation of control technology and fuel switching, the following methods of emissions reduction are authorized: least emissions dispatch, early retirement of sources, energy conservation, interstate trading of emission reductions, and precombustion cleaning of fuels.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "Acid Deposition Control Act".

SEC. 2. Title I of the Clean Air Act is amended by adding the following new part:

"PART E—INTERSTATE TRANSPORT AND ACID PRECURSOR REDUCTION

"FINDINGS AND PURPOSES

"SEC. 180. (a) The Congress finds that—

"(1) the long-range transport of pollutants and their transformation products is an interstate and international problem;

"(2) current levels of emissions of air pollutants from existing sources as well as increased emissions from new existing sources threaten public health and welfare and the environment in States and countries other than those in which emitted;

"(3) reduction of total regional atmospheric loading of pollutants such as sulfur oxides and nitrogen oxides will enhance protection of public health and welfare and the environment;

"(4) more effective regulation of the interstate transport of air pollutants is needed in order to protect the health and welfare of the citizens of downwind States and the economic growth opportunities of downwind States; and

"(5) in particular—

"(A) the deposition of acid compounds from the atmosphere is causing and contributing to widespread long-term ecosystem degradation;

"(B) the principal source of the acid compounds in the atmosphere, and their precursors, is the combustion of fossil fuels;

"(C) the problem of acid deposition is of national and international significance and cannot be addressed adequately without Federal intervention;

"(D) control strategies and technology for precursors to acid deposition exist now that are economically feasible; and

"(E) current and future generations of Americans will be more adversely affected by delayed action, so that efforts to remedy the problem should commence now.

"(b) The purposes of this part are to:

"(1) protect public health and welfare and the environment from any actual or potential adverse effect caused by ambient concertrations or deposition of air pollutants, including the products of atmospheric transformation of pollutants; and

"(2) preserve the rights and responsibilities of States to protect the public health and welfare and the environment of their citizens from air pollution originating in other States.

"ESTABLISHMENT OF REGION

"SEC. 181. (a) There is hereby established a long-range transport corridor, hereafter referred to as the 'acid deposition impact region,' consisting of the States of Alabama, Arkansas, Connecticut, Delaware, Florida, Georgia, Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Kentucky, Louisiana, Maine, Maryland, Massachusetts, Michigan, Minnesota, Mississippi, Missouri, New Hampshire, New Jersey, New York, North Carolina, Ohio, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, South Carolina, Tennessee, Vermont, Virginia, West Virginia, Wisconsin, and the District of Columbia.

"(b) The Administrator shall conduct a study of air pollution problems associated with long-range transport of pollutants in the portions of the continental United States not included in (a) of this section. Not later than two years after the enactment of this section, the Administrator shall report to the Congress the results of such study.

"ACID PRECURSOR CONTROLS

"SEC. 182. (a) Emissions of sulfur dioxide and of oxides of nitrogen from stationary sources in the acid deposition impact region established under section 181(a) of this Act shall not be allowed to increase over the total actual emissions of each pollutant in such region as of January 1, 1981. No major stationary source in operation in such region before January 1, 1981, or which began operation in such region after January 1, 1981, shall increase its actual rate of emissions of sulfur dioxide or oxides of nitrogen over that experienced by such source during the calendar year 1980, unless there has been identified for such source in accordance with section 185 of this Act a simultaneous net reduction in emissions of such pollutant at one or more points in such region in excess of the proposed increase in emission rate, and not otherwise required by a State implementation plan under section 110 of this Act or under section 183 or 184 of this part.

"(b) There shall be achieved a reduction in annual emissions of sulfur dioxide in the acid deposition impact region established under section 181(a) of this Act of 10,000,000 tons from the total actual annual level of such emissions between January 1, 1980, and December 31, 1980. Such reduction shall be achieved pursuant to a phased reduction and completed no later than ten years after the enactment of this part.

"STATE SULFUR DIOXIDE REDUCTION REQUIREMENTS

"SEC. 183. (a)(1) Each State shall be required to achieve within its borders a reduction in annual sulfur dioxide emissions equal to that fraction of 10,000,000 tons which is the ratio of all the actual utility emissions in such State in excess of 1.2 pounds of sulfur dioxide per million British thermal units to the total in all States in the region of all the actual utility emissions in excess of 1.2 pounds of sulfur dioxide per million British thermal units.

"(2) The Governors of any two or more States within the region may by agreement reallot among agreeing States the reductions required under paragraph (1) provided that the total reductions equal the total required under (a)(1).

"(b)(1) Not later than two years after the enactment of this part, each State shall adopt enforceable measures to achieve the reduction in sulfur dioxide emissions required by subsection (a) of this section, including emission limitations and schedules for compliance for sources within such State and other means of emission reduction in accordance with section 185 of this Act. The Governor of such State shall submit such measures to the Administrator for review in accordance with paragraph (2) of this subsection, and to the Governors of all other States in the acid deposition impact region for comment.

"(2) The Administrator shall approve within six months such measures submitted under paragraph (1) of this subsection if, taking into consideration the comments of Governors of other States in such region, the Administrator finds that such measures (A) contain enforceable requirements for continuous emission reduction, (B) contain requirements for monitoring by the source and enforcement agencies to assure that the emission limitations are being met, and (C) are adequate to achieve the reduction in sulfur dioxide emissions for such State required by this section within the time specified in section 182(b) of this Act.

"(3) Not later than four years after the enactment of this part, each major stationary source subject to an emission limitation established under this subsection shall notify the Governor of the State in which it is located of its intended method of compliance. The Governor shall submit such notifications to the Administrator.

"(4) Each emission limitation, schedule for compliance or other measure adopted and approved under this subsection shall be deemed a requirement of the State implementation plan approved or promulgated for such State under section 110 of this Act.

"(c)(1) Not later than six years after the enactment of this part, each major stationary source which pursuant to subsection (b)(3) of this section or section 184 states that it will comply with an emission limitation established under subsection (b) of this section or section 184 through the use of fuel substitution shall be in compliance with such emission limitation.

"(2)(A) Not later than six years after the enactment of this part, each major stationary source which pursuant to subsection (b)(3) or section 184 states that it will comply with an emission limitation established under subsection (b) of this section or section 184 through the installation of a technological system of continuous emission reduction or the replacement of existing facilities with new facilities with substantially lower emissions, shall enter into binding contractual commitments to acquire, install, or construct such system or facilities.

"(B) Not later than ten years after the enactment of this part, each major stationary source subject to this paragraph shall be in compliance with an emission limitation established under subsection (b) of this section or section 184.

"MAJOR STATIONARY SOURCE SULFUR DIOXIDE REDUCTION REQUIREMENTS

"SEC. 184. In any State in the acid deposition impact region established by section 181(a) of the Act which has not in accordance with section 183(b)(1) of this Act adopted measures to achieve the reduction required by section 183(a) of this Act within two years after enactment, or which has not had such measures approved by the Administrator under section 183(b)(2) of this Act within two years and four months after enactment of this Act, the owner or operator of each fossil-fuel-burning electric generating facility which is a major stationary source which is not subject to section 111(a) and which emitted at an annual rate equal to or greater than 1.2 pounds of sulfur dioxide per million British thermal units during 1980 shall comply with an emission limitation or limitations for all such facilities owned or operated by the same entity equivalent to an average among such facilities of 1.2 pounds of sulfur per million British thermal units on a thirty-day average. The owner or operator of each such facility shall submit to the Administrator a plan and schedule of compliance for achieving such emission limitation or equivalent emission reduction in accordance with section 185 of this Act, not later than three years after the enactment of this part. The Administrator shall approve such plan and schedule for compliance if it (A) contains enforceable requirements for continuous emission reduction, (B) contains requirements for monitoring by the source and enforcement agencies to assure that the emission limitations are being met, and (C) will achieve the emission reduction required by this section at the earliest practicable date, but no later than the deadlines established under section 183. Failure of such owner or operator to submit such approvable plan and schedule within three years after enactment of this part, failure to comply with the plan and schedule of compliance, and failure to achieve the emission reduction required by this section at the earliest practicable date, but no later than the deadlines established under section 183 shall be violations of emission limitations for the purposes of sections 113, 120, and 304 of this Act.

"ENFORCEABLE EMISSION REDUCTION PROGRAMS

"SEC. 185. (a) For the purposes of maintaining the limitation on emissions required by section 182(a) of this Act or attaining emission reductions required by section 182(b), 183, or 184 of this Act, the following methods or programs for net emission reduction may be used, in addition to enforceable continuous emission reduction measures, by a State or the owner or operator of a source, if emission limitations under such methods or programs are enforceable by the Federal Government, States other than those in which the emissions occur, and citizens under section 304 of this Act:

"(1) least emissions dispatch to meet electric generating demand at existing generating capacity;

"(2) retirement of major stationary sources at an earlier date than provided in schedules on file with the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission, the Internal Revenue Service, or State utility regulatory agencies;

"(3) investments in energy conservation where reductions in emissions can be identified with such investments;

"(4) trading of emission reduction requirements and actual reductions on a State or regional basis, for which States and the Administrator are authorized to establish emission reduction banks or brokerage institutions to facilitate such trading; and

"(5) precombustion cleaning of fuels.

"(b) A State or the owner or operator of a source required to achieve emission reductions under section 182, 183, or 184 of this Act may substitute reduction in emissions of oxides of nitrogen for required reductions in emissions of sulfur dioxide, at a rate of two units by weight of oxides of nitrogen for each unit of sulfur dioxide.".

SEC. 3. Section 110(1)(2)(E) of the Clean Air Act is amended by inserting after "visibility," the following: "or (III) contribute to atmospheric loadings of pollutants or their transformation products which may reasonably be anticipated to cause or contribute to an adverse effect on public health or welfare or the environment in any other State or foreign country.".●

● Mr. PELL. Mr. President, I am joining today with my distinguished colleague, the Senator from Maine [Mr. MITCHELL], in introducing legislation that would require a 10-million-ton reduction of the pollutants linked with acid rain within 10 years.

I have cosponsored, supported and testified in favor of this key environmental protection legislation in the past and I am pleased to join in the continuing effort to enact the provisions of this vital measure.

We urgently need to address the problem of acid rain by taking action. We must not be satisfied with merely continuing to study the problem. The action detailed in this legislation is a sound step in the right direction.

This legislation would require that, within a 31-State region comprising all States east of or bordering the Mississippi River, sulfur dioxide emissions shall be 10 million tons below 1980 levels within 10 years of enactment.

During and after the reduction period, increases in the emission rates of sulfur dioxide and nitrogen oxides from existing and new sources must be offset by reductions from sources within the acid rain region.

In my own State of Rhode Island we suffer from acid rain, largely attributed to air pollutants emitted in States to the south and west of Rhode Island. Although our own emissions are slight, transported pollutants from other States are believed to threaten our waters, marine life, and even our buildings.

Rhode Island is one of 15 States that were identified several years ago as extremely vulnerable to the harmful effects of acid rain. This identification was made in a National Wildlife Federation study of 26 States east of the Mississippi River.

Studies have found our rainfall in Rhode Island averages about 4.4 on the pH scale. The pH scale, on which zero is the most acid and 14 is the most alkaline, sets the neutral level of distilled water at 7 and normal rainfall as slightly acidic at 5.6. Each numerical decrease means a tenfold increase in acidity.

Although 4.4 was identified as our average rainfall, I have been advised by the Rhode Island Department of Environmental Management that our State is seeing rainfall even higher in acidity—in the range of 3 to 4 on the pH scale.

Most average waterways in Rhode Island have very low buffering capacities and Fish and Wildlife Division records indicate a threatening increase in acidity over the years in our waterways.

There is no question that acid rain exists and little doubt that it is caused when sulfur and nitrogen oxide emissions from coal-burning powerplants, motor vehicles, and other sources combine with rain and snow.

There also is a growing body of evidence that acid rain also threatens even the buildings we erect—sometimes as the seat of our governments. I understand that the old State House, a limestone building in Providence, and our new State House, a marble building are particularly vulnerable.

Both limestone and marble deteriorate as they are eaten away by acid rain.

An expert panel of the National Research Council noted, more than 3 years ago, that:

> Continued emissions of sulfur and nitrogen oxides at current or accelerated rates, in the face of clear evidence of serious hazard to human health and to the biosphere, will be extremely risky.

I hope and trust that we will not continue to take that risk too much longer. We must not wait until our buildings crumble, our water turns to vinegar, and our fish disappear. It is incumbent upon us to act now to control the pollutants that contribute to the threat of acid rain.

I continue to believe that strong environmental legislation is an investment in our future and a key to preserving the public health.●

● Mr. COHEN. Mr. President, I am once again pleased to be a cosponsor of S. 283, legislation introduced by my colleague from Maine [Mr. MITCHELL], which establishes an acid rain control strategy for the eastern half of the United States. I must state at the outset that if it were not for my colleague's perseverance in placing the issue of acid rain before the Senate and the Nation, there would be much less attention paid to this significant problem.

As in the past two Congresses, my cosponsorship of this particular acid rain control legislation is based on the growing body of evidence demonstrating the deleterious effects of manmade pollutants which cause acid rain. Both the prestigious National Academy of Sciences and the administration's own interagency task force on acid rain have documented the environmental relationship between sulfur emissions from powerplants and industrial sources and the existence of heavily acidic lakes, streams, and forests. The damage to our environment from acid deposition is widespread and growing, and will continue to pose a serious threat if we do not curb the emission of sulfur dioxide into the atmosphere. The time to act is now.

On January 18, 1985, researchers at the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service laboratory in Orono, ME, released a report which details the dangerously high levels of acid found in the smaller streams of eastern Maine. These findings are particularly alarming because they focus on the damage to streams which serve as the principal spawning areas for the only wild populations of sea-run salmon remaining in the eastern United States. Acid rain has already killed salmon and other fish in many rivers in Nova Scotia and Scandinavia, and I believe the conclusions found in the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service report require immediate action. The Federal Government, State, and local authorities, as well as numerous private citizens and groups, have invested an extraordinary amount of time, effort, and money in the restoration of the Atlantic salmon to Maine's rivers. It would be an unforgivable waste if we were to let this valuable resource, in addition to many others, perish as a result of our inability to move forward with acid rain controls.

In the Portland, ME, Press Herald of January 22, 1985, columnist Bill Caldwell likened the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service reports findings on salmon habitat to the canary in the coal mine test used by coal miners many years ago. The death of a single species like the Atlantic salmon may not, in and of itself, constitute the evidence which justifies the need for acid rain controls. It might, however, be viewed as a harbinger of more widespread damage in the years to come should we fail to take decisive action now.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that at the conclusion of my statement the commentary by Bill Caldwell entitled "Canaries and salmon" be printed in the RECORD.

It is extremely frustrating that the problem of acid rain is not being given the legislative and executive attention it deserves. The administration continues to minimize the reality of the damage that is occurring to our natural resources at the hands of manmade pollution. There is no time like the present for the United States to resume its leadership role on this issue and work with Canada and the European countries toward the reduction of sulfur dioxide emissions and the diminution of the impact of acid rain on the world's environment.

During the 98th Congress the Senate Environment and Public Works Committee demonstrated its leadership on the acid rain issue by reporting to the Senate legislation similar to that being introduced today. The committee's legislative solution was part of its proposed amendments to the Clean Air Act. Unfortunately, the reauthorization of this important law was never placed on the Senate Calendar. I hope that this year, or at least during the present Congress, the full Senate will finally have the opportunity to consider a control program for acid rain. I urge my colleagues to support the legislation offered today.

There being no objection, the article was printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Portland (ME) Press Herald Jan. 22, 1985]

CANARIES AND SALMON

(By Bill Caldwell)

Maine salmon cannot get in out of the rain and so we may lose our famous sport fish to pollution from heaven.

Acid rain from factories in the Midwest is the predator which may kill our salmon and our trout. A Maine Sunday Telegram article by Bob Cummings reported that the Maine streams where salmon breed are on the verge of becoming too acidic to support them. These conclusions are part of a new study by federal fish and wildlife researchers, working out of Ontario.

The acids which do the damage arrive in clouds, descend in rain drops and are formed when oil and sulphur coal are burned in power plants and industrial boilers far distant from Maine.

Reading the Telegram article, I wondered whether the legislation to reduce acid rain stands much chance of being passed in Congress. Sen. George Mitchell and others have been pushing for it without much success for the past four years. While most people don't want to sacrifice the lordly salmon, which has accompanied man since the Ice Age, only a few people, comparatively, seem willing to limit the industrial freedom which produces the acid rain, the salmon's ultimate killer.

If the choice were simply between keeping salmon or keeping factory jobs, the jobs would surely win.

But is the death of salmon from acid rain an early warning signal of worse to come?

Years before there were scientific instruments to detect first warnings of dangerous gases in coal mines, miners used to carry canaries in cages down into the mine pits. They'd put the canary beside them where they were cutting coal. The job of the canary was not to sing but to die. The tiny yellow birds were very susceptible to the first fumes of dangerous gases. The canary would keel over and die before the miners even smelled danger. The canary was their early warning system; when the canary died, they fled. They took positive action.

Are these salmon our early warning system? I put it this way because I doubt whether enough people are concerned about acid rain just because it could kill off the breeding streams of sea-run Atlantic salmon. But if these salmon are looked at as an early warning system of other, different and more frequent deaths to come, then a wider public may be alerted and roused to support efforts to restrict the production of even more dangerous acid rain.

The scenario has already played in Norway and Sweden. Acid rain, originating in the factories of Western Europe, was discovered in their famous fishing rivers in the 1960s. By the 1970s, there were no fish. The same story is told in Nova Scotia. There, nine once-famed salmon rivers now have no salmon left.

Salmon have over the centuries been threatened by development. But at the last moment, a limit was put on development to protect salmon. King Ethelred II forbid the sale of young salmon in the year 996. In 1318 the king ordered that salmon nets be spaced far enough apart at the mouth of rivers so that a sow and her pigs (a measure used then) would have room enough to grow. Called the King's Gap, it gave spawning salmon easy access to their breeding grounds.

In Maine, we have built fishways for the same purpose. We lost our great salmon rivers such as the Penobscot and Kennebec to industrial and municipal sewage. Then Maine passed laws to clean up our rivers and these salmon are back.

But the important fact is not really that the salmon are back. The important point is that the beautiful rivers are alive again. All life flourishes better in the clean rivers and along the banks of the clean rivers. And that emphatically includes a better life for man along the riverbanks.

It is easy to make a mistake of writing off the death of salmon by saying, in effect, "If acid rain is the price of jobs and industry and power, and salmon are the only casualty, let's pay the price." That is the moment to remember the canaries. Their death was the early warning signal by which miners saved their lives. The dangerous gases were not, outlawed by government to save canaries, but to save people. And so it may be with the salmon and the acid rain. These could be yet another early warning signal given to we humans who are thick-headed about such matters.●

By Mr. LEVIN:

S. 284. A bill to make certain amendments to title 18, United States Code, relating to rights of witnesses appearing before grand juries; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

RELATING TO RIGHTS OF WITNESSES APPEARING BEFORE GRAND JURIES

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, today, I am introducing legislation I have sponsored in previous Congresses, which amends the Federal Criminal Code to allow witnesses called before Federal grand juries to be accompanied by an attorney in the grand jury room. According to an analysis prepared by the Library of Congress, 16 States permit counsel to be present in the grand jury room under some circumstances. The American Bar Association, which supports this most basic grand jury reform proposal, has reported that "The experience to date in those States that allow counsel in the grand jury room has been good."

Allowing counsel to advise Federal grand jury witnesses—without permitting counsel to actually participate in the proceedings—is necessary in order to ensure that witnesses are not deprived of important rights and privileges available to them, such as the right against self-incrimination.

Furthermore, this reform will provide some protection against prosecutorial abuse. Hearings held in 1978 on a broader grand jury reform bill sponsored by Senator Abourezk revealed abuses of power on the part of some prosecutors which transformed the grand jury into a "rubber stamp" of the prosecutor.

Under current Federal law witnesses must leave the room to seek the advice of counsel. This process is disruptive, burdensome and can create prejudices in the minds of some jurors, without providing any commensurate law enforcement benefits. My proposal will not turn the grand jury's proceeding into an adversarial one since the attorney would only be present to advise the witness in the same manner counsel can now advise the witness outside the grand jury room.

My bill specifically states that—

Counsel shall be allowed to be present only during the questioning of the witness and shall be allowed only to advise the witness. Such counsel shall not be permitted to address the attorney for the Government or the grand jurors, or otherwise take part in the proceedings before the grand jury.

Few attorneys would risk disrupting the grand jury proceedings by ignoring these rules, but if this should ever occur, the court would have authority to remove such counsel.

The American Bar Association has long supported legislation which will allow a lawyer to accompany his client into the grand jury room. In addition, the American Law Institute supported this reform in its 1975 Model Code of Pre-Arraignment Procedure. I hope my colleagues will join me as a cosponsor of this important grand jury reform measure.

Mr. President. I ask unanimous consent that a copy of this legislation be printed following my remarks.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 284

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That (a) chapter 215 of title 18, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"§ 3329. Counsel for grand jury witnesses

"(a) Each witness subpenaed to appear and testify before a grand jury impaneled before a district court or to produce books, papers, documents, or other objects before such grand jury shall be allowed the assistance of counsel during such time as the witness is questioned in the grand jury room. Such counsel may be retained by the witness, or counsel shall be appointed, as provided in section 3006A of this title, for any person financially unable to obtain counsel.

"(b) Such counsel shall be allowed to be present in the grand jury room only during the questioning of the witness and shall be allowed only to advise the witness. Such counsel shall not be permitted to address the attorney for the Government or the grand jurors, or otherwise take part in the proceedings before the grand jury.

"(c) A lawyer shall not represent more than one client in a grand jury proceeding if the exercise of the independent judgment of the lawyer on behalf of one of the clients will be or is likely to be adversely affected by his representation of another client. If the court determines that this principle is violated, it may order separate representation of witnesses, giving appropriate weight to a right of the individual to counsel of his own choosing.

"(d) The court shall have the power to remove such counsel, and appoint new counsel or order the witness to obtain new counsel, whenever the court finds that the counsel has violated subsection (b) of this section, or that such removal and replacement is necessary to insure that the activities of the grand jury are not unduly delayed or impeded. This subsection does not affect the contempt powers of the court or the power of the court to impose other appropriate sanctions.

"(e) Upon service of any subpena requiring any witness to testify or produce information at any proceeding before a grand jury impaneled before a district court, the witness shall be given adequate and reasonable notice of his or her right to counsel as provided in this section.".

(b) The table of sections for chapter 215 of title 18, United States Code, is amended by inserting after the item for section 3328 the following:

"3229. Counsel for grand jury witnesses.".

By Mr. GORTON (for himself, Mr. MATHIAS, Mr. SARBANES, Mr. LONG, and Mr. JOHNSTON):

S. 287. A bill to provide stability in the location of professional sports teams, to establish a procedure by which important community interests are considered in the relocation of such teams, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation.

PROFESSIONAL SPORTS TEAM COMMUNITY PROTECTION ACT

Mr. GORTON. Mr. President, one of the subjects with respect to which I intended to propose legislation when I first came to the Senate, concerned the arbitrary movement of professional sports teams. My interest was, unfortunately, based on first-hand experience. In 1970, during my tenure as attorney general of the State of Washington, I sued the American League when the Seattle Pilots left that fine city after only one season of play. After several years of procedural maneuvering the case went to trial. Midway through the trial, the American League settled the suit by agreeing to expand to Seattle—and to Toronto as well.

In 1981, the interest of many fans, including some who happen to be Senators, was aroused by the then proposed move of the Oakland Raiders to Los Angeles. That interest was not sufficiently broad based, however, to prompt congressional action. Last year, following the incredibly callous treatment of the people of Baltimore by the Baltimore Colts' organization, I introduced S. 2505, the Professional Sports Team Community Protection Act. Although that bill was reported by the Senate Commerce Committee, there was insufficient time left in the session for its consideration by the full Senate. And frankly, the attitude of many of my colleagues was that the Raiders and the Colts moves were the exceptions. Moreover, they asked, what could the legitimate interest of Congress in this field possibly be?

Mr. President, in January 1985, no city can feel confident that its professional sports teams will be back for the next season. One needs a scorecard to keep track of the moves being threatened by teams within the several leagues. Cities are forced to make unreasonable concessions to owners as a team is auctioned to the highest bidder, or as each owner looks for greener pastures. Ironically, the winner of this bidding war has merely set itself up to be the next victim. In short, the situation is totally out of hand.

For those of my colleagues whose State contains a professional sports team, the bill I am introducing today, together with Senators MATHIAS, SARBANES, LONG, and JOHNSTON, represents a fair balance between the legitimate interests of our cities and the interests of the leagues and members of the leagues in relocating in the rare instance in which such a relocation is necessary and appropriate. I commend the bill to those Senators for their support.

For those for whom the Federal interest in this area is still not self-evident, I will briefly state the case. First, only a very few teams among the four sports covered by the bill play in stadiums built with private funds. Surely, if our cities were asked to, and did build steel mills, the interest in the continued operation of those mills in the community would be a legitimate one. Second, the phenomenon we see today is most simply the result of a demand which has far exceeded the supply. The face of the country is changing.

Many of our cities are just emerging as social and commercial centers and with that development comes a desire to be considered "big league." For instance, the demand of a growing and prospering Indianapolis for a National Football League team and the failure to meet that demand by the NFL was a necessary element in the move of the Colts. And the list is growing, Phoenix, Tampa, Sacramento, Birmingham. No city alone can stem the tide.

Could Baltimore have protected itself from the move of the Colts with Indianapolis prepared to match any offer or to provide better terms in any lease? And finally, as legislators we like to hang our hats on tangibles—tell us what the loss of the Colts means to Baltimore in lost dollars. But the fact is, there is a vital role played by a professional sports team in the psyche of a city. That role cannot be underestimated. Mayor Good of Philadelphia was responding to more than the potential for lost revenues when he negotiated with the Philadelphia Eagles to have that team stay in Philadelphia. Local politicians understand this. We must recognize it as well.

Before I set forth a summary of the provisions of the bill, I must point out that, in terms of the cities, the heart of the bill lies in two of its aspects. First, unlike the type of bill the leagues would prefer, this bill guarantees that the legitimate interests of the city will be reviewed by someone without any interest in the outcome. It is cold comfort to a city that the league may summarily reject proposed moves, if the league can also summarily approve a move. And second, to require stability without requiring an increase in the number of teams is simply unfair to the cities which believe they can support a team but which do not now have one.

Who in this body wants to tell the people of Phoenix that they will have to wait for the NFL to expand before they can have an NFL team, when that expansion may never come? To the knowledge of this Senator, the NFL has never expanded as a result of an acknowledgement that there were cities who wanted a team and who could support them. Rather, expansion has been more closely linked to the desire of the NFL to achieve some legislative goal. For that reason, it is necessary to force expansion.

SUMMARY

TITLE I

Title I requires that before a professional sports team can relocate it must first obtain the approval of the relevant league. The bill requires that that approval take the form of a determination that the move is a necessary and appropriate one. The determination is made by the league after the specific consideration of nine factors, taking into account the findings, purpose and policy of the Act. Those factors are:

First, the adequacy of the stadium in which the team played its home games in the previous season and the willingness of the stadium authority to remedy any deficiencies in such facility;

Second, the extent to which fan support for the team has been demonstrated during the team's tenure in the community;

Third, the extent to which the team has, directly or indirectly, received public financial support by means of any publicly financed playing facility, special tax treatment, and any other form of public financial support;

Fourth, the degree to which the owner or management of the team has contributed to any circumstance which might otherwise demonstrate the need for such relocation;

Fifth, whether the team has incurred net operating losses, exclusive of depreciation and amortization, sufficient to threaten the continued financial viability of the team;

Sixth, the degree to which the team has engaged in good faith negotiations with members and representatives of the community concerning terms and conditions under which the team would continue to play its games in such community;

Seventh, whether any other team in its leagues is located in the community in which the team is currently located;

Eighth, whether the team proposes to relocate to a community in which no other team in its league is located; and

Ninth, whether the stadium or arena authority, if public, is not opposed to such relocation. Nothing in this title prohibits a league from denying a proposed relocation pursuant to any lawful rule it may have.

Once the team has received a determination by the league that the move is necessary and appropriate, the team must get the approval of an ad hoc arbitration board. The board will consist of three members, one appointed by the league, one by the community and one by the President of the American Arbitration Association. The board will consider, de novo, whether the factors as applied to the proposed move demonstrate that the move is necessary and appropriate.

If the board finds the move is not necessary and appropriate, there can be no relocation. If the board finds that the move is necessary and appropriate, then the board evaluates offers of retention, that is, offers to purchase or offers of terms and conditions which would keep the team in its current location. If any of the offers is equal to or greater in value than the offer associated with the proposed relocation, then there can be no relocation. This process takes place over a 3-month period, at the end of which the board goes out of existence.

This title provides for a limited degree of judicial review. An aggrieved party may seek review of the determination of the league or the board as to whether the move is necessary and appropriate, but only on the issue of whether the nine factors wer specifically considered. The courts will not be placed in the position of second guessing the leagues or the boards which may exist from time to time. Nor will a league be subjected to substantial damage awards against it if it has proceeded in accordance with the act. The issue of the value of the offer of retention or the value of there location offer, however, is reviewable under the standard used in administrative appeals, that is whether the decision was arbitrary and capricious or an abuse of discretion.

Finally, the league is given a chance to review any offer of retention equal to or greater in value to the offer of relocation to ensure that any new member of the league would meet league's criteria for membership. That review, however, is limited to considerations which would not otherwise violate Federal or State law. Any such decision would be fully reviewable under the applicable Federal or State law.

Nothing in this title is intended to or does supersede any contract between a professional sports team and any stadium or person, unless such contract is inconsistent with the provisions of the title.

TITLE II

Title II contains two provisions. The first, codifies the existing practices of the leagues in sharing revenues under their television contracts. Although 15 U.S.C. 1291, allows the leagues to collectively bargain for the sponsored telecasting of games, it is silent on how the league may distribute the revenue among its members. This section clarifies that aspect of such agreements and requires that any expansion team be given its proportional share of revenues under any contract in effect when such team enters the league. The section also clarifies that the league may compel its members to enter into collective bargaining for telecasting if that is the league's intent. The 1961 act is unclear about the impact of a decision by a member of the league not to enter such collective bargaining.

The second provision of title II provides that publically owned or operated playing facilities must be made available to any team on a fair and nondiscriminatory basis. Currently, new leagues have difficulty getting access to facilities. Although a concerted effort by members of a rival league to freeze such a new league out of facilities would be a violation of the antitrust laws, such cases are lengthy, expensive and proof of a conspiracy is a difficult undertaking. The provision does protect the legitimate concerns of teams with current contracts with the facility that their use and enjoyment under the lease not be adversely affected by any use by a new team.

TITLE III

Title III addresses the concerns of those cities who continue to demand professional sports teams in baseball and football and whose demand has been unmet. The title would require professional baseball to expand by two teams to commence play at the start of the 1988 season. The National Football League is required by this title to expand by two teams in 1988, one of which is to be located in Baltimore, MD, and two more teams in 1990, one of which will be located in Oakland, CA, unless Oakland has an NFL team by the first expansion or by a successful conclusion to its eminent domain proceeding against the Raiders.

Mr. President, although I think that certain elements are essential to any bill on this subject if we are fairly to deal with the cities who have, and hope to keep, and the cities who have not, and hope to gain, I will be happy to work with any of my colleagues, or other interested parties including owners, cities, and fans to broaden the base of support for this bill. The uncertainty of the current situation aids no one. Even owners who may initially benefit from the bidding wars among the cities will lose when public support for the leagues is eroded, as it must be by these types of activities.

Congress has intervened in the free enterprise system's application to professional sports teams in the past, and may unwittingly have helped to create this chaos. It is time for us to either engage in a modest degree of regulation, or to return to a true state of free enterprise in professional sports, that is, application of the antitrust laws without exemptions and for all sports. That is a result which the leagues would surely oppose.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 287

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "Professional Sports Team Community Protection Act".

TITLE I

FINDINGS AND POLICY

SEC. 101. (a) The Congress finds that—

(1) professional sports teams achieve a strong local identity with the people of the community in which they play, and provide a source of pride and entertainment to their supporters;

(2) professional sports teams are invested with a strong public interest;

(3) the public, through a municipal stadium authority, generally authorizes capital construction bonds to finance the construction of the stadium in which a professional sports team plays;

(4) in some cases, the lease or use agreement between the municipal stadium authority and the professional sports team sets rent to defray only the operating costs of the stadium, and does not reimburse the public for the costs of constructing the stadium;

(5) professional sports stadiums often serve as focal points for substantial urban renewal projects in many communities, and often such projects involve a significant amount of Federal assistance;

(6) despite the close association with and support from the people in the community in which it plays, a professional sports team may be enticed from time to time to relocate to a new geographical location without regard to important interests and considerations which may be thought to be inconsistent with immediate financial gain for the owner of such a team;

(7) stability in the location of professional sports teams which are members of leagues subject to the provisions of this title enhances the quality of athletic competition in leagues in which such teams operate;

(8) it is difficult for any single community or State to provide adequate protection against those professional sports team relocations which are not consistent with the public interest; and

(9) communities in which professional sports teams play derive substantial revenues and employment opportunities from the operation of such teams.

(b) It is the policy of the Congress in this title to discourage the unnecessary relocation of any professional sports team which is receiving adequate support from the people in the community in which such team plays, and to encourage, to the extent practicable, continuity and stability in the location of professsional sports teams. The increased frequency of biding contests between communities regarding the location of professional sports teams (which contests are in most cases not in the best interests of such communities) has necessitated the establishment of a procedure by which important community interests are considered in the relocation decision process.

PURPOSE

SEC. 102. It is the purpose of this title—

(1) to provide stability in the location of professional sports teams;

(2) to provide predictability with respect to the relocation of professional sports teams; and

(3) to ensure that the interests of communities which have supported such teams are considered through an equitable procedure.

DEFINITIONS

SEC. 103. As used in this title, the term—

(1) "Board" means the Professional Sports Team Arbitration Board established in section 106 of this title;

(2) "community" means the Standard Metropolitan Statistical Area in which the team plays its home games or its assigned territory, whichever is smaller;

(3) "offer of retention" means any offer to purchase a professional sports team and to continue to locate such team in the community in which it then plays, or to provide terms not involving a transfer of ownership which will ensure that such team continues to be located in the community in which it then plays;

(4) "proposed relocation" means a proposal to relocate a team by the owner of such team who intends to retain ownership, or either the acceptance of an offer of sale of a team by the owner or the offering to purchase a team by any person, as a result of which such team will not continue to be located in the community in which it then plays;

(5) "stadium" means the principal physical facility within which a professional sports team plays the majority of its home games; such term includes any arena, coliseum or sports complex; and

(6) "territory" means the geographic area within which a professional sports team has agreed to operate and play the majority of its home games, as that territory is defined by the relevant league.

AUTHORITY FOR RELOCATION

SEC. 104. (a) No person may change the community location of any professional sports team unless—

(1) the relevant league determines, in accordance with subsection (b) of this section, that the proposed relocation is necessary and appropriate; and

(2) such person has received the approval of the Board pursuant to section 107 of this title, unless the relevant community has provided notice (in accordance with section 106(a) of this title) that it does not desire that such a Board be established.

(b) The league shall make its determination under subsection (a)(1) of this section pursuant to such rules as the league may adopt. In making such determination, the league shall specifically consider, taking into account the findings, policy and purpose of this title—

(1) the adequacy of the stadium in which the team played its home games in the previous season and the willingness of the stadium authority to remedy any deficiencies in such facility;

(2) the extent to which fan support for the team has been demonstrated during the team's tenure in the community;

(3) the extent to which the team has, directly or indirectly, received public financial support by means of any publicly financed playing facility, special tax treatment, and any other form of public financial support;

(4) the degree to which the owner or management of the team has contributed to any circumstance which might otherwise demonstrate the need for such relocation;

(5) whether the team has incurred net operating losses, exclusive of depreciation and amortization, sufficient to threaten the continued financial viability of the team;

(6) the degree to which the team has engaged in good faith negotiations with members and representatives of the community concerning terms and conditions under which the team would continue to play its games in such community;

(7) whether any other team in its league is located in the community in which the team is currently located;

(8) whether the team proposes to relocate to a community in which no other team in its league is located; and

(9) whether the stadium authority, if public, is not opposed to such relocation.

(c) Nothing in this section shall affect in any manner—

(1) the decision of a league, pursuant to any lawful rule of such league, to refuse to allow the relocation of any team which is a member of that league; or

(2) the validity or application of any rule of a league regarding any proposed relocation within the community in which the relevant team is currently located.

NOTICE

SEC. 105. (a) Any person seeking to relocate a professional sports team to a new community location shall furnish notice of such proposed relocation to the appropriate stadium authority and to the county in which the stadium is located at least three months before the proposed date for such relocation.

(b) Such notice shall—

(1) be in writing;

(2) be delivered through certified mail or be personally delivered;

(3) contain a statement of intention to relocate, the new location, reasons for such relocation, and the date on which such relocation is scheduled to occur; and

(4) a certifed copy of the determination of the league pursuant to section 104 of this title that the proposed relocation is necessary and appropriate.

(c) On the date that such a person furnishes notice pursuant to this section, such person shall also transmit to the league a cashier's check in the amount of $50,000. The league shall deposit such check in an escrow account which it establishes for such purpose. Amounts deposited under this subsection shall be used for activities of the Board established under section 106 of this title. Any amounts remaining in such account after the termination of the Board pursuant to section 106(b) of this title which are not required for expenses incurred by the Board shall be returned to such person.

ARBITRATION BOARD

SEC. 106. (a) In any case involving a proposed relocation of a professional sports team and within 30 days after notice of such proposed relocation is delivered pursuant to section 105 of this title, there shall be established a Professional Sports Franchise Arbitration Board to carry out the activities of this section, unless the chief executive officer of the relevant community notifies the President of the American Arbitration Association in writing that the community does not desire that such a Board be established.

(b) The Board shall be composed of three members, of whom—

(1) one member shall be appointed by the relevant league;

(2) one member shall be appointed by the governmental authority which operates the studium or, if no governmental authority operates the stadium, by the city or county in which such stadium is located; and

(3) one member shall be appointed by the President of the American Arbitration Association.

(c) No individual may serve on the Board if such individual has or might have (as a result of the relocation or sale of such team) a financial or other pecuniary interest in any professional sports team which engages in—

(1) the same sport as the professional sports team involved in the proposed relocation; or

(2) any other sport regularly played in the same community where the team then plays or in the community of the proposed relocation.

(d) The Board shall select a chairman from among its members.

(e) Any member of the Board who is not an officer or employee of the Federal Government shall be entitled to receive compensation at a rate not to exceed the daily equivalent of the annual rate of basic pay in effect for grade GS-18 of the General Schedule under section 5332 of title 5, United States Code, for each day (including traveltime) during which the member is engaged in the actual performance of the duties of the Board.

(f) The Board shall terminate when it reaches a final decision with respect to a proposed relocation or offer of retention in accordance with the provisions of this title.

RESPONSIBILITIES OF THE BOARD

SEC. 107. (a) All information required to be provided by this title shall also be furnished promptly to the Board. Any person who makes an offer to purchase a team or accepts an offer which would result in the relocation of a team, and any owner transmitting any notice under this title, shall, upon request of the Board, provide access to all relevant financial records necessary to allow the Board to make the determination required in subsection (e) of this section. The Board may, notwithstanding any other provision of this title, disapprove a proposed relocation if any information requested by the Board is not submitted in a timely manner.

(b)(1) Within two months after the establishment of the Board, any person wishing to make an offer of retention under this title shall make such offer and furnish notice of such offer in accordance with the provisions of this subsection.

(2) Such notice shall be furnished to the team, to the relevant league, to the stadium authority, to the county in which such team plays, and to the Board. Such notice shall—

(A) be in writing;

(B) be delivered through certified mail or be personally delivered; and

(C) contain a statement of intention to purchase such team and to continue thereafter to locate the team in the same community or to provide terms not involving a transfer of ownership which are more favorable to such team than the terms currently in effect.

(c)(1) Not earlier than two months nor later than three months after notice is furnished pursuant to section 105(a) of this title, the Board shall conduct a formal hearing on the record—

(1) to consider de novo whether, after specifically considering the factors identified in section 104(b) of this title and taking into account the findings, policy and purpose of this title, the proposed relocation is necessary and appropriate; and

(2) if it appears to the Board that the proposed relocation is necessary and appropriate, to take evidence and consider testimony regarding the estimated value of any such proposed relocation or offer of retention.

(d) If the Board determines that the proposed relocation is not necessary and appropriate, the Board shall disapprove the proposed relocation.

(e) After the hearing required by subsection (c) of this section and not later than three months after notice is furnished pursuant to section 105(a) of this title, if the Board determines that the proposed relocation is necessary and appropriate, it shall determine whether any offer of retention is equal to or greater in value than the proposed relocation. The Board may contract with an independent actuary for all such valuations.

(f)(1) If the Board determines under subsection (e) of this section that it has received an offer of retention which does not involve a change of team ownership and which is of a value equal to or greater than the proposed relocation, it shall disapprove the proposed relocation. If an offer of retention which would involve a change in team ownership is determined by the Board to be of a value equal to or greater than the proposed relocation, the Board shall, before approving or disapproving the proposed relocation, transmit all necessary and appropriate information concerning such offer of retention to the relevant league.

(2) After receipt from the Board of the information regarding the offer of retention, the league shall review such offer under its applicable rules for a transfer of league membership. If, by vote of a simple majority of its members and based upon a written record, the league determines that the person making such offer of retention satisfies the criteria of the league for a transfer of league membership, it shall so inform the Board, and the Board shall then disapprove the proposed relocation. If, by vote of a simple majority of its members and based upon a written record, the league determines that the person making the offer of retention does not satisfy the criteria of the league for a transfer of membership, it shall so inform the Board, and the Board shall then approve the relocation. If more than one offer of retention is transmitted by the Board to the league for its consideration, the league, if it determines that more than one offer of retention has been made with respect to which the offeror satisfies the criteria of the league for a transfer of membership, may indicate to the Board its order of preference for membership. If the team owner elects to accept any such offer, the team owner shall accept any offer which is preferred by the league.

(g) If the Board determines that the proposed relocation is necessary and appropriate and that it has received no offer of retention which is of a value equal to or greater than the proposed relocation, the Board shall approve the relocation.

(h) No decision of the Board under this section shall become effective until five days after such decision is made. A court may, in accordance with section 108 of this title, stay the effective date of such decision during the pendency of judicial review proceedings under such section.

(i) Any information submitted to the Board which relates to the financial condition of the team seeking to relocate shall be confidential and shall not be disclosed, except when required under court order or as required in the course of judicial review of any decision made by the Board pursuant to the provisions of this title. Any such disclosure shall be made under such terms and conditons as the reviewing court may direct.

(j) The Board may obtain the assistance of counsel regarding its activities or in response to any action brought under section 108 of this title.

JUDICIAL REVIEW

SEC. 108. (a) Except as provided in this section, no person (including a team, league or community) may bring a civil action seeking judicial review of any act or decision made pursuant to any authority specifically provided in this title. For purposes of this section—

(1) a determination by a league, after specific consideration of the factors set forth in section 104 of this title, that a proposed relocation is or is not necessary and appropriate shall be considered to be an act or decision made pursuant to authority specifically provided in this title; and

(2) any act or decision by a league under section 104(c) of this title shall not be considered to be an act or decision made pursuant to authority specifically provided in this title.

(b) No team, community or other person aggrieved by a decision of a league under section 104 of this title may seek judicial review of the decision, but any such community may seek judicial review in the district court of the United States for the district in which the team is currently located solely regarding whether the league specifically considered the factors identified in section 104(b) of this title. The court may award such equitable relief, other than an award of damages, as the court considers appropriate.

(c) No team, community or other person aggrieved by a decision of the Board pursuant to section 107(d) or (g) of this title may seek judicial review of the decision, but such team, community or person may seek judicial review in the district court of the United States for the district in which the team is currently located solely regarding whether the Board specifically considered the factors identified in section 104(b) of this title. If such review is sought, the court may stay the effective date of any such decision during the period of such review.

(d) Any person wishing to seek judicial review under subsection (b) or (c) of this section shall seek such review within 30 days after the decision of the league or Board, as appropriate.

(e) Any person aggrieved by any decision made by a league pursuant to section 107(e) of this title or by the Board pursuant to section 107(f)(2) of this title may seek judicial review of such decision in the district court of the United States for the district in which the team is currently located. In any such review, the court shall consider whether such decision was arbitrary, capricious or an abuse of discretion, or was a violation of any applicable Federal or State law. The procedures relevant to such standard of review in chapter 7 of title 5, United States Code, shall apply to such review.

(f) Any person may bring an action in the district court of the United States for the district in which the team is currently located or was located in the previous season to enjoin a failure to comply with any provision of this title regarding relocation of a professional sports team or a failure to comply with any decision by a league or the Board under this title, unless such decision is the subject of judicial review under subsection (b) or (c) of this section.

EFFECT ON CONTRACTS

SEC. 109. Nothing in this title shall affect in any manner any contract between a professional sports team and any stadium or other person, unless such contract is inconsistent with the provisions of section 110 of this title.

APPLICABILITY

SEC. 110. This title applies to any proposed relocation of a professional baseball, basketball, football or hockey team which plays its home games in a community within the United States and which is a member of a league subject to the provisions of this title, if such relocation occurs or is scheduled to occur on or after January 24, 1985, except that nothing in this title shall affect in any manner the decision of any court to order the relocation of any professional sports team subject to the provisions of this title, in connection with any litigation regarding the location of such team which was pending on January 24, 1985.

AGREEMENTS RELATING TO SPONSORED TELECASTING

SEC. 201. The antitrust laws, as defined in the Federal Trade Commission Act (15 U.S.C. 41 et seq.) and in the first section of the Clayton Act (15 U.S.C. 12), shall not apply to an agreement by a majority of the members of any professional sports league to require such members to participate in or to share revenues generated by any contract pursuant to which the rights of such members in the sponsored telecasting of any game of such league are sold or otherwise transferred (in whole or in part). Any such agreement relating to the sharing of revenues shall provide that any person who becomes a member of such league after the date of such agreement will share in such revenues in the same manner and to the same extent as the members of such league as of the date of such agreement, except that any such person will only share in such revenues in proportion to the period of time during such contract that the person is a member of such league.

ACCESS TO FACILITIES

SEC. 202. (a)(1) Each publicly-owned or operated facility for the public display of games of professional sport shall be available for use by all professional sports teams on fair and reasonable terms and without unfair discrimination. Each stadium shall be made available for use by professional sports teams under nondiscriminatory and substantially comparable rates, rentals and other charges and under nondiscriminatory and substantially comparable rules, regulations and conditions. The right of any professional sports team which submits a request under this subsection to use any such facility shall not be unreasonably denied, notwithstanding the fact that there is an existing contract or arrangement between such facility and any other professional sports team in effect for the season within which the requested dates occur.

(2) Whenever any professional sports team submits to any such public authority a written request for the use of such facility for team contests and exhibitions, such public authority shall, except as provided in subsection (b) of this section, permit such team to use the facility in accordance with the provisions of paragraph (1) of this subsection.

(b) No such public authority shall be required under this section to permit a professional sports team which submits a request under subsection (a) of this section to use any such facility if—

(1) the date of the requested use is the same date on which any other user of such facility has a right (under any contract or other agreement in effect on the date of the request) to use such facility for scheduled exhibitions or contests; or

(2) the requested use will impose a significant burden on the continued use of such facility by any such user who is entitled to use the facility pursuant to any contract or other agreement in effect on the date of such request.

(c) Any such public authority which receives a request for use by a professional sports team under this section shall make such reasonable efforts as may be necessary to permit the use of the facility by such team.

(d) Any professional sports team which submits a request for use under this section may bring an action in any appropriate district court of the United States against any such public authority which fails to comply with the provisions of this section. The court may award damages and such equitable relief, including injunctive relief, as the court considers appropriate.

(e) As used in this section, the term "facility" includes facilities associated with any publicly-owned or operated facility for the public display of games of professional baseball, basketball, football or hockey.

(f) As used in this section, the term "professional sports league" shall have the meaning given to such term in section 401(2) of this Act, without regard to the length of time such league has been engaged in competition in such sport.

TITLE III

DEFINITION

SEC. 301. As used in this title, the term "antitrust laws" has the meaning given to such term in the Federal Trade Commission Act (15 U.S.C. 41 et seq.) and in the first section of the Clayton Act (15 U.S.C. 12).

FINDINGS

SEC. 302. The Congress finds and declares that—

(1) in the past, professional sports leagues have received special treatment by Congress with respect to the application of the Federal antitrust laws;

(2) relocations of professional sports teams are likely to occur more frequently, when the number of communities which believe they can adequately support a team exceeds the number of franchises made available by professional sports leagues;

(3) because maintaining the number of franchises in a league below the level of demand increases the value of the existing franchises, increases the bargaining power of the holders of existing franchises with stadium authorities, and causes revenues from broadcasting (to the extent such revenues are shared) to be shared by fewer teams, previous increases in the number of franchises in any league generally have not been solely in response to the demand of the communities which seek such a franchise;

(4) the failure of the National Football League to respond to the demand for teams by communities such as Jacksonville, Florida, Memphis, Tennessee, Phoenix, Arizona, and Indianapolis, Indiana, was a contributing factor in the recent move of the Baltimore Colts football team from Baltimore, Maryland;

(5) since there is a significant difference in the value to the City of Oakland, California, between the location in such city of the professional football team presently known as the Los Angeles Raiders and a new professional football team, it is appropriate that the City of Oakland be allowed to continue to pursue its eminent domain proceeding or other litigation which was pending on January 1, 1984 against the Los Angeles Raiders; and that, although section 303(a) of this title requires that the National Football League locate a new professional football team in the City of Oakland, California, if such city is not successful in such proceeding or other litigation, such location will only partly mitigate the loss to such city caused by the relocation of the Los Angeles Raiders to Los Angeles, California;

(6) there exists a clear, reasonable, and, as yet, unmet demand by certain communities in the United States for a National Football League franchise or a Major League Baseball franchise;

(7) it is unlikely that the National Football League or Major League Baseball will voluntarily increase the number of franchises in each league in the near future; and

(8) to the extent that continued or expanded special treatment under the Federal antitrust laws may, as a consequence, contribute to the perpetuation of a scarcity of franchises for professional sports teams, it is necessary to couple such continued or expanded special treatment with measures designed to prevent an unreasonable failure by such leagues to respond to the demand of communities for such franchises.

RESTRICTION AGAINST CERTAIN ACTIONS

SEC. 303. (a) Any of the following actions constitutes a violation of section 2 of the Sherman Act (15 U.S.C. 2):

(1) The failure of Major League Baseball to increase its membership by two new members over the total number of its members on January 24, 1985, and to ensure that such new members will commence play in the 1988 season.

(2) The failure of the National Football League to increase its membership by two new members over the total number of its members on January 24, 1985, and to ensure that (A) both of such new members will commence play in the league in the 1988 season, and (B) one of such new members will be located in, and play its home games in, Baltimore, Maryland.

(3) The failure of the National Football League to increase its membership by two new members over the total number of its members after the increase specified in paragraph (2) of this subsection, and to ensure that (A) both of such new members will commence play in the league no later than the 1990 season, and (B) that one of such new members will be located in Oakland, California.

Paragraph (3)(B) of this subsection shall not constitute an unfair and exclusionary practice of the relevant league in violation of section 2 of the Sherman Act (15 U.S.C. 2) if, prior to the increase in membership specified in such paragraph, a member of the National Football League has been located in Oakland, California, either pursuant to any eminent domain proceeding or other litigation regarding such matter which was pending on January 1, 1984 or pursuant to the increase specified in paragraph (2) of this subsection.

(b) Any person who submits to Major League Baseball or the National Football League an application to operate a franchise specified in subsection (a) of this section may maintain an action pursuant to section 4 of the Clayton Act (15 U.S.C. 15) if the relevant league fails, within the time specified in subsection (a) of this section, to increase the number of franchises in such league as specified in such subsection.

(c) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, for purposes of this title, Major League Baseball is a business involved in interstate commerce and is subject to the provisions of section 2 of the Sherman Act (15 U.S.C. 2) and any other provision of the antitrust laws necessary for the enforcement of such section.

(d) For purposes of this section, discussions among members of the National League and the American League of Major League Baseball regarding the number and the location of members of such Leagues shall not be considered to be a violation of the antitrust laws.

TITLE IV

DEFINITIONS

SEC. 401. As used in this Act, the term—

(1) "person" means any individual, partnership, corporation, or any unincorporated association, or any combination or association thereof, or any political subdivision;

(2) "professional sports league" or "league" means, except as provided in section 202(f) of this Act, an association composed of two or more professional sports teams which has adopted, accepted or put into effect rules for the conduct of professional sports teams which are members of that association and the regulation of contests and exhibitions in which such teams regularly engage, and which has been engaged in competition in such sport for more than seven years; and

(3) "professional sports team" or "team" means, in accordance with section 110 of this Act, any group of professional athletes organized to play major league baseball, basketball, football or hockey and which is also a member of a league subject to the provisions of this Act; the term includes all equipment and memorabilia associated with current or former athletes playing on such a team.

APPLICABILITY

SEC. 402. Nothing in this Act shall be construed to affect in any way eminent domain proceeding or other litigation by the City of Oakland, California, against the professional football team presently known as the Los Angeles Raiders which was pending on January 1, 1984, or otherwise to affect adversely the position or rights of the City of Oakland with respect to such proceeding or litigation, including any right which may exist to relocate such professional football team in the City of Oakland.

OVERSIGHT

SEC. 403. The Senate Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation shall conduct periodic oversight hearings on the effects of this Act no less often than annually for the first 3 years following the date of enactment of this Act. As part of such hearings, the Committee will consider testimony from the Federal Trade Commission, consumers, members of professional sports leagues, and players for professional sports teams. The Committee shall also consider the need or desirability, or both, of the establishment of a national policy regarding the expansion of professional sports leagues.

SEVERABILITY

SEC. 404. If any provision of this Act, or the application of such provision to any person or circumstance, is held invalid, the remainder of this Act, or the application of such provision to persons or circumstances other than those with respect to which it is held invalid, shall not be affected by such invalidation.

Mr. MATHIAS. Mr. President, today I join Senators GORTON and SARBANES in offering legislation that will clarify the legal relationship between sports franchises and their hometowns. I have been involved with the issue for several years, and the urgency for congressional action has grown each year.

Professional sports are an important part of American life. Baseball is called our national pastime, and along with apple pie, serves as a standard analogy for what is American. Teams are sources of community cohesion and civic pride. And these teams make a tremendous contribution to the economic life of a community, in terms of jobs, taxes, and tourism.

Over the years, owners have generally respected the interests of the local community and dedicated fans, but occasionally their selfish interests have overwhelmed their sense of civic obligation. We all saw what happened to Baltimore and Oakland. Some of us even remember what happened to baseball right here in Washington when we were victims of a double whammy, losing one team to Minneapolis, and a second to Arlington, TX. Even threatened team relocations can be costly to communities. Recently, Buffalo, Minnesota, Philadelphia, and St. Louis have made enormous concessions at public expense to keep team owners happy.

All of these events remind us that it is not the sporting contests, civic pride, or fan loyalty that determine team location, but hard-boiled business interests. In each of these cases, private interest outweighed any public interest. It is the sports industry and those interests that we are discussing today.

More cities want sports teams than there are teams available. This situation creates competition among cities that is more intense than the competition between teams on the field; we've got to change that. Cities competing for teams become locked in bidding wars that only the owners can win.

For an owner, moving a franchise is relatively easy. For an owner, the value of the team stems from league revenue-sharing arrangements, TV revenue-sharing agreements, and player contracts, all of which can be traded over the counter and moved in a briefcase. Communities cannot move, nor can the publicly financed highways, stadiums and sports complexes that have been built to serve teams be packed up, sold, and shipped to a new city. When a team moves, the owner reaps the harvest, and the city is left only with some pretty expensive chaff on its hands in the form of a deserted stadium.

Normally, our system relies on competition to protect economic freedom and promote efficient markets. With the antitrust laws, the Government safeguards the public interest by encouraging competition. But enforcement of the antitrust laws against the owners and the leagues would drastically change the way the sports industry operates. Under the umbrella of their limited antitrust immunity, the leagues, representing the owners, negotiate TV deals, divide up the crop of new players, and made decisions every day that would in any other business violate the antitrust laws. So the sports industry enjoys a preferred status under the antitrust laws.

What we've got to do in the public interest, is impose a little restraint on owner whim in exchange for this preferred status under the antitrust laws. This is a justifiable exercise of the power of Government, especially since self-regulation has failed. We have to ensure that the major markets—our great cities—can keep their sports teams if they want them, and if they are supported by the fans and by the taxpayers.

The bill we introduce today balances those interests, recognizing that the interests of the public, owners, and the leagues do not always coincide. We cannot expect the owners to forgo considerations of private gain for the sake of public benefit. But we ask them to share with us these decisions to relocate. When an owner wants to move, or when the sale of a team would result in a move, this bill would set out clear standards and procedures for evaluating that request. First, the question of relocation would go to the league with guidelines from Congress. Second, if the league allowed the relocation, an arbitration board would be convened to consider whether it meets the standards set by the bill—such as stadium inadequacy or financial hardship. If the board concludes that the move is justified, the community has the right of first refusal—an opportunity to match the financial package offered by another community or new owner, in order to retain the team.

The bill strikes a nice balance between the rights of business owners in our free enterprise system, and the rights of the people to impose a modest degree of regulation on businesses, when required by the public interest. I urge all of my colleagues to support it.

● Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, I rise today to join Senator GORTON and my colleagues in reintroducing the Professional Sports Team Community Protection Act, which I cosponsored in the last Congress. This important legislation will give sorely needed, responsible protection to sports fans and sports leagues alike against a growing problem—the abrupt and unwarranted relocation of professional sports teams. The recent history of professional sports in this country has shown us the great need for this legislation.

On March 10, 1980, the National Football League voted 22 to 0 against allowing the Oakland Raiders to move to Los Angeles. The Raiders defied that vote and successfully sued the NFL for antitrust law violations. Four years later, the NFL was unable to prevent the owner of the Baltimore Colts from spiriting the team away under cover of darkness. Less than a year later, the city of Philadelphia had to put up $30 million to prevent the owner of the NFL Eagles from moving his team to Phoenix. The NFL's St. Louis Cardinals are reported to be considering such a move, as are baseball's Pittsburgh Pirates and Minnesota Twins. The National Basketball Association has filed a suit to send the new Los Angeles Clippers back to San Diego after they moved last year without league approval.

No one can say when this game of musical chairs will end. Indeed, unless Congress acts, it will not end. Our Nation's cities will be left scrambling to lure professional sports teams away from each other.

In testimony before the Senate Commerce Committee last year, the commissioner of the NFL, Pete Rozelle said "Federal law as currently developed ignores fan, league, and public interests that need protection." The legislation that we introduce today strikes a responsible balance among many legitimate, competing interests. It provides the leagues with the opportunity to regulate their own affairs while requiring that they utilize certain reasonable criteria in making their decisions. It provides communities with guarantees that their voices will be heard and gives them a right of first refusal.

Perhaps the real cause of team instability is the artificial scarcity of teams caused by the leagues' refusal to expand into new cities. At every meeting of the leagues' representatives of cities are on hand to lobby for expansion clubs. In response, a viable new football league has emerged, with highly professional playing standards. Despite league arguments to the contrary, there is no shortage of fans, players or host communities, just a shortage of teams. For that reason, this legislation will mandate expansion in major league baseball and in the NFL.

This expansion in baseball and the NFL will help meet this need. It will also redress the loss of NFL football to the people of Baltimore and Oakland, by 1988 and 1990.

With this legislation we seek to provide a stable framework of professional sports with the support of the communities in which they play. It is the responsibility of Congress to provide this carefully defined framework.●

By Mr. GORTON (for himself and Mr. HARKIN):

S. 288. A bill to provide Federal coordination for the continued development and commercialization of food irradiation through the establishment of a Joint Operating Commission for Food Irradiation in the Department of Agriculture and through other means; to the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry.

FEDERAL FOOD IRRADIATION DEVELOPMENT AND CONTROL ACT

● Mr. GORTON. Mr. President, today I have the distinct pleasure of joining with our new and distinguished colleague, Senator HARKIN, to introduce legislation to promote the use of ionizing radiation as a postharvest treatment for food commodities. This bill, the Federal Food Irradiation Development and Control Act of 1985, builds upon legislation Representative SID MORRISON and I introduced in the 98th Congress—S. 2254, S. 2652, H.R. 4544, H.R. 5605—and a proposed Food and Drug Administration regulation [48 FR 5714] which was promulgated in February 1984. Representative MORRISON is introducing legislation identical to this bill today.

Just this afternoon, Senator HARKIN, Representative MORRISON, and I joined about 100 other hungry souls for a hearty lunch consisting of Iowa pork, a dish which more than pleased the Senator from that fine farm State, seafood from the Northwest, which made my palate yearn for home, new potatoes, Washington State apple pie, and numerous other dishes, all of which were processed using irradiation to retain the foods' freshness and wholesomeness. None of the irradiated foods were treated chemically at any time during their trip from the farm or ocean to the table. That is a claim that is hard to believe in this age of pesticides and chemical preservatives.

Food irradiation means exposing fruits, vegetables, meats, and other foodstuffs to low doses of gamma-, beta-, and x rays. The irradiation is merely ionizing energy which penetrates through food killing microorganisms. The ionizing energy used is similar to microwaves. It leaves no residue in the food, which absorbs only the energy of the radioactive source, not the sources radioactivity. Irradiation delays spoilage of fruits and vegetables; disinfects cereals, fruits, and vegetables of all insects, insect eggs, and fungi; tenderizes meat; and inhibits the natural sprouting of potatoes and onions. It can kill the trichinae larvae in pork and can replace the use of ethyl dibromide [EDB] as a postharvest treatment. There are also a variety of current or potential uses for irradiation beyond processing of food, including sterilization of surgical instruments and other medical products, sterilization of baby powder, manufacture of nonstick cookware, treatment of cosmetic products, pasteurization and sterilization of sewage sludge, soil and timber fumigation, seed stimulation, processing of polymers, production of chemicals, and many others.

Currently, irradiation is defined by a statute as a food additive. In addition to being illogical, this definition means that irradiated food is considered adulterated unless the irradiation process conforms to complex and burdensome regulations. This legislation would exempt sources of irradiation from the definition of food additive, and instead subject food irradiation to the same regulations which are applied to pesticide chemicals used on raw agricultural commodities.

Irradiation represents an exciting innovation in food processing. It was developed 30 years ago by the Army Research Laboratory in Natick, MA. Irradiation has now been approved for various foods by approximately 28 countries. Japan, India, and the Netherlands make extensive use of the process. Canada recently decided to treat irradiation as a food process rather than a food additive, which is the approach taken by this bill.

If anyone doubts the relevancy of food irradiation technology to the problems of food preservation that confront the world in 1985 need only look to Africa where hundreds of thousands have died from starvation and more are threatened. No, irradiation is not a panacea, but it does offer hope for those nations where refrigeration is an uncommon luxury and protein-rich foods necessary for good health spoil easily. Irradiation is an alternative for much of the Third World and can surely be a part of the solution to the global malnutrition problem. Here, at home, irradiation offers a safe alternative to chemical treatments now widely used in food processing.

Another indication of the salience of the food irradiation issue is the huge volume of public comments responding to the FDA's proposed rule, which would permit limited application of food irradiation primarily for fresh fruits and vegetables up to a dose of 100 kilorads, a dose which is one-tenth of the standard now accepted by most international authorities. The public comments have been insightful as well as plentiful. As I did last year, I would like to take this opportunity to commend the FDA and the Secretary of Health and Human Services Margaret Heckler for this important first step in promoting this promising new technology.

The specifics of the legislation are outlined in greater detail in the section-by-section analysis. I hope this new bill and the FDA regulation will contribute to the advancement of food irradiation as a safe and effective food preservation technique.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of this bill and a section-by-section summary of its provisions be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 288

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SHORT TITLE

SECTION 1. This Act may be cited as the "Federal Food Irradiation Development and Control Act of 1985".

FINDINGS AND PURPOSES

SEC. 2. (a) The Congress finds that—

(1) irradiation of food at regulated doses is recognized by international authorities and the Department of Health and Human Services as safe and wholesome;

(2) irradiation of food inhibits or destroys the bacteria and other microorganisms which cause food to spoil and eliminates trichinosis in pork, insect pests in fruits, vegetables and grains, and food-borne pathogens, such as salmonella and botulinum in red meats, poultry, and fish products;

(3) irradiation of food is one of the substitutes for many of the post harvest fumigants including ethylene dibromide;

(4) radiation sources used for irradiation process including 5 MeV (million electron volts) for gamma rays and x-ray, and 10 MeV for electrons cannot induce added risks to consumers from radioactivity in food;

(5) irradiation of food is a process, much like cooking in a microwave oven, boiling, or freezing;

(6) additional research and development is needed to determine the optimum dose level for irradiation on foods and the appropriate marketing factors in order to apply the benefits of irradiation to a variety fo products assuring public safety;

(7) there needs to be national uniformity in the regulation of irradiation processing of food;

(8) public understanding of ionizing radiation is essential to develop widespread commercial opportunities and to promote consumer acceptance of food irradiation;

(9) irradiation is currently approved in the United States for use of spices, fresh potatoes to inhibit sprouting, wheat and wheat flour for disinfestation, and twenty-five other countries have approved application of food irradiation on at least 40 different food items;

(10) there are a variety of current or potential uses for irradiation beyond processing of food, including sterilization of surgical instruments and other medical products, sterilization of baby powder, manufacture of non-stick cookware, treatment of cosmetic products, pasteurization and sterilization of sewage sludge, soil and timber fumigation, seed stimulation, processing of polymers, production of chemicals, and many others;

(11) there is an acute shortage of United States source material required for food irradiation process and current supplies are unable to meet projected demand;

(12) the Federal Government owns by-products materials as part of our defense nuclear waste program;

(13) a significant return on investment can come back to the United States Treasury through the lease of irradiation source materials to private and public agencies;

(14) there needs to be coordination with international organizations and state governments on research, development, applications, and standards for irradiation and among the many Federal agencies involved, including the Department of Agriculture, the Department of Energy, the Food and

Drug Administration, the Department of Health and Human Services, the Environmental Protection Agency, the Nuclear Regulatory Commission, the Department of Commerce, and the Agency for International Development; and

(15) there needs to be coordination between the Federal Government and the private sector for the purpose of encouraging private enterprise development and utilization of irradiation processing.

(b) the purposes of this Act are to—

(1) change the definition of food irradiation so that it is defined as a food process, subject to existing regulatory authority of the Food and Drug Administration;

(2) expand research and development of ionizing radiation in order to facilitate commercialization of a variety of beneficial use technologies;

(3) provide for education regarding food irradiation by ionizing radiation in order to promote public understanding and acceptance;

(4) provide for national uniformity in the regulation of irradiation processing of food;

(5) ensure adequate supplies of source material by providing for the safe domestic leasing of nuclear byproduct material for use in commercial applications of food irradiation and continue the current foreign nuclear byproduct distribution program; and

(6) provide for the creation of a Joint Operating Commission for Food Irradiation within the Department of Agriculture to serve as an intermediary with private enterprise, Federal and State government agencies, international organizations, and the public.

DEFINITIONAL AND REGULATORY CHANGES

SEC. 3. (a) Section 201(s) of the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act (21 U.S.C 321(s)) is amended by—

(1) striking out "; and including any source of radiation intended for any such use" in the first parenthetical material;

(2) striking out "or" at the end of paragraph (4), and by striking out the period at the end of paragraph (5) inserting in lieu thereof ";or"; and

(3) adding the following new paragraph at the end thereof:

"(6) food irradiation process.".

(b) Section 201 of such Act (21 U.S.C. 321) is amended by adding the following new subsection at the end thereof:

"(bb) The term 'food irradiation process' means a food treatment in which ionizing energy is applied to raw agricultural commodities, processed foods, or other foods to destroy the organisms which cause infestation in food, to inhibit or destroy bacteria and other mircoorganisms which among other things cause food to spoil or make the food unwholesome, to inhibit sprouting, to retard the postharvest ripening of foods, and to improve the food's functional properties.".

(c)(1) Section 409 of such Act (21 U.S.C. 348) is amended—

(A) in subsection (a) by—

(i) inserting "or food irradiation process" after "food additive" each place it appears;

(ii) inserting "or process" after "such additives" and after "such additive";

(iii) inserting "or clause (7)" after "clause (2)(C)"; and

(iv) inserting "or having been treated by such a process" after "such an additive";

(B) in subsection (b) by—

(i) inserting "or food irradiation process" after "food additive" in paragraph (1);

(ii) inserting "for such additive" after "including" in paragraph (2)(A);

(iii) inserting "or process" after "such additive" each place such term appears except the first time it appears in paragraph (2)(B) and except in paragraphs (2)(C), (2)(D) and (3);

(iv) inserting "or the source of the food irradiation process" after "food additive" in paragraph (2)(A);

(v) inserting "or the proposed procedures and methods for conducting the food irradiation process" after the first time "such additive" appears in paragraph (2)(B);

(vi) inserting ", unless the level of the proposed food irradiation process has already been recognized to be safe by the Secretary" before the period at the end of paragraph (2)(E);

(vii) inserting "in the case of a food additive," after "(or," and "food irradiation process or" after "for," in paragraph (3); and

(viii) inserting ", or in the case of food irradiation process, such information as the Secretary requests" before the period at the end of paragraph (4);

(C) in subsection (c) by—

(i) inserting "or food irradiation process" after "food additive" and "food additives" each place such terms appear;

(ii) inserting "or process" after "such additive" the first place it appears in paragraph (1)(A) and each place it occurs in clause (i) of the proviso of paragraph (3)(A) and in paragraph (4)(A);

(iii) inserting "or process" after "no additive" in paragraph (3)(A), after "the additive" in paragraph (3)(B), and after "an additive" in paragraph (4); and

(D) in subsection (d) by—

(i) inserting "or food irradition process" after "food additive"; and

(ii) inserting "or process" after "such additive"; and (E) in subsection (i) by—

(i) inserting "or food irradiation process" after "food additive"; and

(ii) inserting "or treated by such process" after "such additive".

(2) The heading of section 409 of such Act (21 U.S.C. 348) is amended by inserting "AND FOOD IRRADIATION PROCESS" after "ADDITIVES".

(3) The heading of section 409(a) of such Act (21 U.S.C. 348(a)) is amended by inserting "and Food Irradiation Process" after "Additives".

NATIONAL UNIFORMITY

SEC. 4. (a) It is declared to be the express intent of Congress to require national uniformity in the regulation of irradiation processing of food in order to permit national marketing of all irradiated food without jurisdictional barriers.

(b) No State or political subdivision thereof may establish or continue in effect any requirement relating to the irradiation processing of food, or to the labeling or marketing of irradiated food, which is in addition to or different from the requirements of the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act and the Fair Packaging and Labeling Act, and the regulations and interpretations issued thereunder.

(c) Any State or political subdivision thereof may exercise concurrent jurisdiction with the Secretary of Health and Human Services over the irradiation processing of food, and the labeling and marketing of irradiated food, for the purpose of enforcing requirements identical with those established in the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act, the Fair Packaging and Labeling Act, and the regulations and interpretations issued thereunder.

(d) Any State or political subdivision thereof may petition the Secretary of Health and Human Services to adopt by regulation as a Federal requirement any requirement relating to the irradiation processing of food or to the labeling or marketing of irradiated food.

LEASING OF NUCLEAR BYPRODUCT MATERIAL FOR FOOD IRRADIATION

SEC. 5. (a) The third sentence of section 81 of the Atomic Energy Act of 1954 (42 U.S.C. 2111) is amended—

(1) by inserting "at rates that reflect fair market value" before the comma at the end of clause (a);

(2) in clause (b), by inserting "commercial or other" before "use";

(3) by striking out "and" at the end of clause (b); and

(4) by inserting before the period at the end thereof the following: ", and (d) will encourage commercial applications of byproduct material as defined in section 11 e. (1), particularly as a source for food irradiation process".

(b) The fourth sentence of section 81 of such Act (42 U.S.C. 2111) is amended—

(1) by striking out "either"; and

(2) by inserting ", in commercial applications of food irradiation process," after "development".

(c) The changes made by this section to section 81 of such Act (42 U.S.C. 2111) are intended to apply only to byproduct material produced as a result of the defense nuclear waste program.

ESTABLISHMENT OF JOINT OPERATING COMMISSION FOR FOOD IRRADIATION

SEC. 6. (a) There hereby is established within the Department of Agriculture a commission to be known as the Joint Operating Commission for Food Irradiation (hereafter in this section referred to as the "Commission"). The Commission shall carry out the functions specified in subsection (c), subject to the supervision of the Secretary of Agriculture.

(b)(1) The Commission shall consist of eight members as follows:

(A) one individual, appointed by the President, who is representative of the interests of the general public and who is not an officer or employee of the Federal Government;

(B) one individual appointed by the Secretary of Agriculture from among the officers and employees of the Department of Agriculture;

(C) one individual appointed by the Secretary of Health and Human Services from among the officers and employees of the Department of Health and Human Services;

(D) one individual appointed by the Secretary of Energy from among the officers and employees of the Department of Energy;

(E) one individual appointed by the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency from among the officers and employees of the Environmental Protection Agency;

(F) one individual appointed by the Nuclear Regulatory Commission from among the officers and employees of the Nuclear Regulatory Commission;

(G) one individual appointed by the Secretary of Commerce from among the officers and employees of the Department of Commerce; and

(H) one individual appointed by the Administrator of the Agency for International Development from among the officers and employees of the Agency for International Development.

(2) The appointments of the initial members of the Commission shall be made before the expiration of the 90-day period following the date of the enactment of this Act.

(3) Each member of the Commission shall report directly to the authority appointing such member and each Commission member shall serve for such period of time as the authority appointing such member considers appropriate.

(4) A vacancy in the Commission shall be filled before the expiration of the 60-day period following the date on which such vacancy occurs, and in the same manner in which the original appointment was made.

(5)(A) Any member of the Commission who is a full-time officer or employee of the Federal Government shall receive no additional pay, allowances, or benefits by reason of the service of such member on the Commission.

(B) Each member of the Commission not described in subparagraph (A) shall be paid at a rate equal to the daily equivalent of the minimum annual rate of basic pay payable for grade GS-15 of the General Schedule for each day, including travel time, during which such member is engaged in the actual performance of duties vested in the Commission. Each such member shall be reimbursed for actual expenses, including travel expenses, incurred in the course of performing such duties.

(c) It shall be the function of the Commission—

(1) to coordinate and review all research, development, and demonstration activities of the Federal Government relating to the use of irradiation in agricultural production including food irradiation process and the food irradiation process activities of the Department of Energy, except that any additional research determined by the Commission to be required for the commercialization of food irradiation process and the use of irradiation in agricultural production including post-irradiation monitoring and inline dosimetry shall, to the maximum extent practicable, be conduced at existing laboratories of the Agricultural Research Service of the Department of Agriculture, at landgrant institutions of higher education, and at existing federal multiprogam laboratories;

(2) to collect and consolidate the data produced by all Federal agencies as a result of research, development, and demonstration activities relating to food irradiation process;

(3) to coordinate informational exchange and educational activities with respect to food irradiation process with appropriate Federal agencies, the States including appropriate interstate compacts, commodity groups, export trading groups, other interested private organizations, and the general public;

(4) to encourage interest and investment by private enterprises in the development and application of food irradiation process;

(5) to consider and make recommendations to decision-making bodies on the labelling, packaging, and handling of food products processed with irradiation;

(6) to encourage a better understanding by the general public with respect to food irradiation process;

(7) if determined by the Commission to be appropriate, to petition the Food and Drug Administration under section 409 of the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act (21 U.S.C. 348) to expand the scope of regulation allowing for commercial application of food irradiation process; and

(8) to submit annually to the Congress a report setting forth the specific progress made by and future plans of the Commission in carrying out the functions described in paragraphs (1) through (7).

(d) The Secretary of Agriculture shall provide the Commission with such staff and office facilities as the Secretary, following consultation with the Commission, considers necessary to permit the Commission to carry out its functions under this section.

(e) There are authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this section.

SECTION-BY-SECTION SUMMARY OF FOOD IRRADIATION BILL

SECTION 1.—SHORT TITLE

The bill is called the "Federal Food Irradiation Development and Control Act of 1985".

SECTION 2.—FINDING AND PURPOSES

The bill declares that food irradiation at regulated doses is safe and wholesome, is effective as a food preservative technique, and is one of the substitutes for postharvest fumigants, including ethylene dibromide (EDB). The bill further finds that irradiation is a process and does not induce radioactivity in food. Finally, Congress finds that a coordinated effort to advance food irradiation is needed.

SECTION 3.—DEFINITIONAL AND REGULATORY CHANGES

Section 201(s) of the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act is amended by deleting "sources of radiation" from the definition of food additive and further exempting "food irradiation treatment" from being defined as an additive. A definition is added to the Act which defines "food irradiation process" as a food treatment in which ionizing energy is applied to food to destroy microorganisms which cause infestation, disease, and spoilage.

Section 409 of FDA Enabling Act is further amended to make conforming changes. These changes would generally insert "or food irradiation process" every time "food additive" is used. Thus, the regulatory provisions of section 409 would apply to "food additive or food irradiation process". However, there are a few exceptions so that requirements of the petition approval process of section 409 which are clearly intended to apply only to additives are specifically exempted from being considered for food irradiation process.

SECTION 4.—NATIONAL UNIFORMITY

The section declares that it is the intent of Congress to require national uniformity in the regulation of food irradiation process. Under the section, no state or political subdivision could establish any food irradiation requirement which is "in addition to or different from" the FDA requirements. This section essentially restates the acknowledged common law that federal law usually preempts conflicting and duplicative state law.

SECTION 5.—LEASING OF BYPRODUCTS MATERIAL FOR FOOD IRRADIATION

Section 81 of the Atomic Energy Act is amended to clarify the Department of Energy's existing authority to lease defense nuclear byproducts material to the private sector. The amendments would clarify current leasing guidelines so that byproducts are leased at fair market value (with profits going to the Treasury) and should be leased to encourage food irradiation process.

SECTION 6.—ESTABLISHMENT OF JOINT OPERATING COMMISSION

This section of the bill establishes within the Department of Agriculture a Joint Operating Commission for Food Irradiation (JOCFI). JOCFI shall be under the supervision of the Secretary of Agriculture and the Secretary shall provide necessary staff and office facilities. There is also a general authorization to carry out the activities of the Commission.

JOCFI shall consist of eight members including one individual, appointed by the President, who will represent the interests of the general public. The other seven members will be one representative each from the Departments of Agriculture, Health and Human Services, Energy, Commerce, and the Environmental Protection Agency, the Nuclear Regulatory Commission, and the Agency for International Development. The appointments of the initial eight members shall be made within 90 days following the enactment of the Act and all vacancies shall be filled within 60 days. The seven members of JOCFI who are already employees of the Federal Governments shall receive no additional pay and the one representative of the public shall receive a salary equivalent to grade GS-15 for each day service.

The functions of the JOCFI Commission include: (1) to coordinate and review all federal on-going and future food irradiation research and development activities. Additional research shall be conducted at Agricultural Research Service stations, at land-grant colleges, or at federal multi-program laboratories; (2) to collect and consolidate all research data already gathered by various federal agencies; (3) to coordinate information exchange activities on food irradiation process with various federal agencies, interested private organizations, and the general public; (4) to encourage investment by private sources in food irradiation process; (5) to consider and make recommendations to decision-making bodies on labelling of products processed with irradiation; (6) to encourage better understanding by the general public of food irradiation process; and (7) to petition FDA, if deemed appropriate, under section 409 of the FDA enabling Act to expand the scope of regulations allowing for commercial food irradiation.●

By Mr. RIEGLE:

S. 286. A bill to amend the Securities and Exchange Act of 1934; to the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs.

TO AMEND THE SECURITIES AND EXCHANGE ACT WITH RESPECT TO GREENMAIL

● Mr. RIEGLE. Mr. President, last year I introduced legislation to restrict the practice in corporate takeover schemes known as "greenmail." I am introducing an identical bill today.

"Greenmail," as every Senator by now knows, is a play on the word blackmail and refers to the premium price management is willing to pay a corporate raider to foil a possible takeover, but which the corporation is unwilling to pay to the everyday shareholders of its corporation.

I was successful in attaching my greenmail bill last year to the Financial Services Competitive Equity Act which we passed in the Senate Banking Committee on June 27, 1984. My greenmail provision was agreed to unanimously, by voice vote, and later when the banking bill passed the full Senate by vote of 89 to 5 on September 13, 1984, the greenmail provision was again passed without a single word of opposition.

Mr. President, the greenmail legislation I am introducing today would prohibit the purchase by a company of its own shares at a price above the existing market price from any person who holds more than 3 percent of the shares and has held them for less than two years, unless the shareholders of the company approve.

Greenmail has been criticized harshly by both bidders for companies and attorneys for targets, as well as by the press and public at large.

For example, T. Boone Pickens, the president of Mesa Petroleum, wrote me September 12, 1984, that he finds "greenmail abhorrent and inconsistent with the concept of a free and open market . . . Greenmail is the antithesis of fairness. A target company should not be able to repurchase its stock at a premium from a dissident shareholder without offering the same price to all shareholders."

I agree.

Likewise, Martin Lipton, who is a well-known corporate attorney in the takeover field, has been quoted as saying, "Greenmail is a disgrace and should be eliminated."

Finally, the Securities and Exchange Commission and the SEC Advisory Panel on Tender Offers support curbing the practice of greenmail and the language I am about to reintroduce.

As a headline in the Wall Street Journal pointed out just a short time ago, "Greenmail, Far From Disappearing, Is Doing Quite Well in Disguised Forms."

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the article that appeared in the January 23 issue of the Wall Street Journal and the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

BUSINESSMEN TO SEEK END TO "GREENMAIL," "GOLDEN PARACHUTES"

(By John D. Williams)

NEW YORK.—A group representing leading corporations plans to press Congress for laws to end two elements of some hostile-takeover battles: "greenmail" and "golden parachutes."

Under greenmail, a company buys back stock from an unwanted suitor at a higher-than-market price. Golden parachutes give lavish settlements to top managers of target companies when the managers are forced out by a takeover. The controversy over both practices sharply escalated last year.

Andrew Sigler, who heads a special industry task force reviewing hostile-take-over problems for the Business Roundtable, indicated in a talk to financial journalists that the Roundtable has adopted a firmer policy toward what he called the "takeover craze." The Roundtable is a public-policy group of chief executive officers from 200 major U.S. companies.

Mr. Sigler is chairman and chief executive of Champion International Corp., a Stamford, CT-based forest-products concern.

Last October, in a Securities and Exchange Commission hearing, Mr. Sigler had urged the federal agency to study only the underlying causes of the takeover trend. But yesterday he said the Roundtable will seek two congressional remedies:

A requirement that when a suitor has about 5 percent to 10 percent of a target's stock, an offer for all of the company's stock should be submitted to its board. If the board accepted, the acquisition would be carried out. If the board rejected the offer, the suitor could seek the target via a proxy contest, within a quick 30-to-90 day period, with both sides providing full disclosure of their motives. Such a requirement would stop greenmail, the Roundtable group believes.

Golden parachutes could also be stopped by legislation, Mr. Sigler said, but the Roundtable hasn't agreed on a specific plan, because business leaders are opposed to any plan that would have government officials setting executive remuneration standards.

But Mr. Sigler said he favored a measure that would restrict special payments to executives removed by a takeover. He said executives should have to follow their usual employment contracts.

There aren't any official figures on how many times greenmail or golden parachutes were used in 1984—a record year for takeovers. Some of the smaller greenmail cases never have been announced.

The largest case considered to be greenmail involved Texaco Inc.'s buy-back of a 9.9 percent stake of its stock from the Bass Brothers of Fort Worth, TX, for $1.28 billion, although the brothers hadn't made any publicly known threat that they were seeking Texaco.

Charles L. Marinaccio, an SEC member, recently told a business group in Chicago that Congress should "conduct a fundamental review" of takeovers. Among other things, he would ban greenmail.

"Greenmail—a polite term for extortion—should be banned by prohibiting the purchasers of blocks of shares from selling those shares to the corporation for a period of years," he said.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That section 14 of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 (15 U.S.C. 78n) is amended by inserting after subsection (e) the following new subsection:

"(f) It shall be unlawful for an issuer to purchase, directly or indirectly, any of its securities at a price above the market from any person who holds more than 3 per centum of the class of the securities to be purchased and has held such securities for less than two years, unless such purchase has been approved by the affirmative vote of a majority of the aggregate voting securities of the issuer, or the issuer makes an offer to acquire, of at least equal value, to all holders of securities of such class and to all holders of any class into which such securities may be converted."●

By Mr. GORE:

S. 289. A bill to amend the Inspector General Act of 1978 to establish an Office of Inspector General in the Federal Emergency Management Agency; to the Committee on Governmental Affairs.

ESTABLISH AN OFFICE OF INSPECTOR GENERAL

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I am today introducing the FEMA Inspector General Act of 1985.

During my tenure in the House of Representatives, as chairman of the Investigations and Oversight Subcommittee of the Committee on Science and Technology, I conducted a series of hearings into misconduct at the Federal Emergency Management Agency which uncovered a litany of outrageous abuses and instances of gross mismanagement involving thousands of taxpayers' dollars and numerous Federal employees.

Many of my colleagues may be aware of the incredible revelations that came out of those hearings.

The subcommittee discovered that the third-ranking official at FEMA, Fred J. Villella, had misused Government funds to construct a private residence and directed Government personnel to perform personal errands. Mr. Villella resigned as a result of these discoveries. Additionally, documents obtained by the subcommittee revealed that on two separate occasions, Louis O. Giuffrida, the Director of the Agency, attended expensive black tie political receptions and his attendance was paid for by an Agency contractor. The contractor then billed the expense to the taxpayers. The same contractor was, moreover, also hiring friends and associates of both Mr. Giuffrida and Mr. Villella, and there is evidence that it and other contractors were engaged in a host of other potentially illegal activities, including overbilling, fraud, and forgery. These and other revelations are now the focus of a grand jury probe by the Department of Justice.

While these events in themselves are incredible, what is doubly disturbing is that FEMA has no independent institutional mechanism for ferreting out waste, fraud, and abuse. The Agency currently has an inspector general's office, but it does not have any institutional or statutory independence from the Agency. In almost every other Federal body, the inspector general has institutional independence from the Agency which it has responsibility to investigate. In contrast, the inspector general at FEMA reports only to the Director and cannot circulate his findings outside of the Agency without the approval of the Director. Purely and simply, the present inspector general works for the Director, with disastrous results.

The events that I have described fully illustrate the problem created by the current situation at FEMA. The existing inspector general's office did begin an inquiry into these matters, but only after interest in investigating them was shown by the Investigations and Oversight Subcommittee. Moreover, the results of the FEMA inspector general's investigation were made available to no one but Louis Giuffrida, who had definite involvement and associations with the parties being investigated. Needless to say, the findings from the inquiry were not distributed widely to the public or even distributed within the Agency itself. Moreover, there is every indication that the inspector general's office was really being utilized for political "damage control" and as an organ to assist Director Giuffrida in avoiding embarrassment, rather than as a legitimate investigative body to keep the Government and the taxpayers from being cheated.

Mr. President, this legislation offers a quick, precise, and much-needed solution to the recurring and unacceptable problems at this Agency. While congressional oversight has fufilled its function of rooting out and exposing these abuses, congressional oversight alone is not enough. FEMA should have its own independent, statutorily established mechanism. Almost every agency of the Government has some statutorily independent office to keep its own house in order, and given the recent history of this Agency, the need for FEMA to have such an office is undeniable. I believe that this legislation represents an idea that my colleagues can readily embrace, and I urge them to join me in sponsoring it and ensuring its speedy passage.

By Mrs. HAWKINS:

S. 292. A bill to provide for the Mary McLeod Bethune Memorial Fine Arts Center to be established by the Bethune-Cookman College in Volusia County, FL; to the Committee on Labor and Human Resources.

MARY MC LEOD BETHUNE MEMORIAL FINE ARTS CENTER

● Mrs. HAWKINS. Mr. President, today I am reintroducing a bill to provide for the construction of a living memorial to one of the Nation's most revered citizens. This measure directs the Secretary of Education to make the necessary funds available to build a memorial fine arts center on the campus of Bethune-Cookman College in Volusia County, FL. This fine arts center will serve as the Nation's tribute to Dr. Mary McLeod Bethune. I first introduced this legislation late in the 98th Congress and am pleased to do so again. I look forward to early action on this measure.

Dr. Mary McLeod Bethune deserves to be memorialized for her skillful leadership and advocacy of equality for all Americans. On the long road toward this goal, Dr. Bethune made an important difference in opening the door to a better way of life for black women. Her efforts spanned all walks of life: religion, business, government, and academia.

Among her many accomplishments, Dr. Bethune served as a member of President Franklin Delano Roosevelt's informal "Black Cabinet" during her term as Director of the Division of Negro Affairs within the National Youth Administration. The black cabinet was the unofficial watchdog to insure that black Americans received a fair deal from the New Deal. As a leader of this group, Mary McLeod Bethune, with the help of her friend, Eleanor Roosevelt, reached behind the scenes of F.D.R.'s White House and into the Oval Office. From this vantage point, she affected national policy from the top down. Another of Dr. Bethune's outstanding achievements was the founding of the National Council of Negro Women.

The National Council was the black woman's first political voice. It is still a voice that calls for equal opportunity for black women.

Mr. President, this memorial fine arts building will be located on the campus of Bethune-Cookman College. This institution stands as Dr. Bethune's finest work. Founded by Dr. Bethune in 1904, Bethune-Cookman College is one of the Nation's leading historically black colleges. The institution was originally chartered as the Daytona Normal and Industrial School for Negro Girls. The school's existence provided southern black women and girls one of their first opportunities to climb up and out of servitude and toward a life of promise. The school held its first classes, with Dr. Bethune serving as instructor, with five young girls as students. Within 3 years, Dr. Bethune raised enough funds from private sources to erect the school's first building, Faith Hall. This was quite an achievement considering that on the first day of class, the school had $9 in its treasury and fruit crates served as seats for the students.

Today, Bethune-Cookman College has a 60-acre campus and an enrollment of 1,200 male and female students. It is an appropriate reminder of how much the hard work and dedication of one individual can mean to so many others.

Mr. President, the construction of this fine arts center will be a fitting memorial to a woman whom we should all strive to emulate. I urge my colleagues to support this measure.●

By Mr. KENNEDY:

S. 293. A bill to provide for the admission of the State of New Columbia into the Union; to the Committee on Governmental Affairs.

NEW COLUMBIA ADMISSION ACT

● Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I am pleased today to introduce legislation admitting the District of Columbia into the Union as the State of New Columbia.

In the last Congress, Delegate WALTER FAUNTROY introduced similar legislation in the House of Representatives, and I introduced companion legislation in the Senate. This month we celebrate a decade of home rule in the District of Columbia and today, January 24, is Statehood Day. As we commemorate the movement for self-determination in the District, I am proud to introduce statehood legislation in the Senate for consideration by the new Congress.

It is easy to forget that 10 years ago, the members of the school board were the District of Columbia's only local elected officials. Before the passage of the Home Rule Act, congressional committees scrutinized even the smallest details of the affairs of the District.

The Home Rule Act was an important landmark on the road to full representation for the people of the District. But it is not enough.

The issue before us is of simple justice for the 623,000 citizens of the Nation's Capital. Nowhere in America should the principles of democracy be more firmly established than in the District of Columbia. Yet, the second-class citizenship of District residents makes a mockery of the principles of representative government on which our Nation was founded. The time has come at long last to end the unacceptable status of the District of Columbia as America's "Last Colony."

In the past two decades, Congress has approved several measures to increase self-determination for the District. The 23d amendment, the Home Rule Act and the D.C. voting rights amendment were each designed to enfranchise District residents. These measures were important steps in the right direction, but they have failed to achieve the fundamental goal of full citizenship for residents of the District of Columbia. Only statehood can make the citizens of the District of Columbia full partners in the American Union.

The Home Rule Act has been undermined by the courts and Congress, and the voting rights amendment is languishing far short of ratification in the State legislatures.

Part way measures and halfhearted initiatives in Congress are no longer enough; the time has come for full rights for the District of Columbia—and that means statehood and nothing less. The residents of the District deserve to be full-fledged Americans, with the same rights and responsibilities as the citizens of every other State.

I believe that the District of Columbia clearly meets the long accepted historical standards for the admission of new States to the Union. The three preeminent conditions are: Commitment to the principles of democracy, resources and population sufficient to support statehood, and the will of the people for statehood.

The active local government and the active participation of residents in local elections are ample proof of the District's strong commitment to the democratic process.

The District has a thriving private sector and a sound and diverse economic base. It is time to put to rest, once and for all, the shameful myth that the District of Columbia is nothing more than a collection of Federal monuments, Federal employees, and foreign embassies. Contrary to popular belief, 70 percent of District residents are employed outside the Federal Government.

In addition, the population of the District today is greater than that of four existing States. The District supplies more revenues to the U.S. Treasury than 12 States. By virtually every measure of comparison, the District deserves to become a State.

The necessary preliminary steps toward statehood have already been completed. In 1982, in support of statehood, the residents of the District convened a constitutional convention and drafted and ratified a State constitution. Although this proposed constitution has generated controversy on some issues, I am confident that, in the process of reconciliation already under way, these issues can be resolved fairly by the representatives of the people of the District.

I reject the view that the language of the D.C. clause in the Constitution (article I, section 8, clause 17) somehow prohibits statehood as an option for the District of Columbia. The proposed constitution for the State of New Columbia carves out the Capitol, the White House, and other essential parts of the seat of the Federal Government as a completely separate and independent area, over which the Congress will continue to exercise exclusive jurisdiction.

In addition, article IV, section 3 of the Constitution clearly specifies, in language plainly applicable to the District, the authority of Congress to admit new States to the Union.

For generations, the residents of the District of Columbia have borne the burdens and responsibilities of American citizenship without its rights and privileges. The time has come to remove this unfair cloud of second-class status from the District of Columbia.

The people of the District have voted twice for statehood. They have vigorously pursued the statehood process. The District amply meets the criteria for statehood, and it is time for New Columbia to take its rightful place as the 51st State of the United States.

I ask unanimous consent that the entire text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 293

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SHORT TITLE

SECTION 1. This Act may be cited as the "New Columbia Admission Act".

ADMISSION INTO THE UNION

SEC. 2. Subject to the provisions of this Act, and upon issuance of the proclamation required by section 7(d)(1) of this Act, the State of New Columbia (hereinafter referred to as "the State") is declared to be a State of the United States of America, is declared admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the other States in all respects whatever, and the constitution formed pursuant to the provisions of the initiative measure numbered 3 for District of Columbia Statehood Constitutional Convention, approved May 29, 1982, by duly elected delegates from the District of Columbia, and adopted by a vote of the people of the District of Columbia in the election held on November 2, 1982, is found to be republican in form and in conformity with the Constitution of the United States and the principles of the Declaration of Independence, and is accepted, ratified, and confirmed.

CONSTITUTION

SEC. 3. The constitution of the State of New Columbia shall always be republican in form and shall not be repugnant to the Constitution of the United States and the principles of the Declaration of Independence.

TERRITORY AND BOUNDARIES

SEC. 4. (a) Subject to the provisions of this section, the State of New Columbia shall consist of all of the territory, together with the territorial waters, of the District of Columbia. The State of New Columbia shall not include the National Capital Service Area of the District of Columbia, which is described in subsection (b). As of the date of admission of New Columbia into the Union, the District of Columbia shall consist of the National Capital Service Area.

(b) The National Capital Service Area, subject to the provisions of section 16, is comprised of the principal Federal monuments, the White House, the Capitol Building, the United States Supreme Court Building, and the Federal executive, legislative, and judicial office buildings located adjacent to the Mall and the Capitol Building.

(c) Notwithstanding any other provision of this section or of section 16, the boundaries of the State of New Columbia shall include the District Building.

COMPACT WITH UNITED STATES; CLAIMS TO FEDERAL LANDS AND PROPERTY

SEC. 5. (a) As a compact with the United States, the State and its people disclaim all right and title to any lands or other property not granted or confirmed to the State or its political subdivisions by or under the authority of this Act, the right or title to which is held by the United States or subject to disposition by the United States.

(b)(1) Nothing contained in this Act shall recognize, deny, enlarge, impair, or otherwise affect any claim against the United States, and any such claim shall be governed by applicable laws of the United States.

(2) Nothing in this Act is intended or shall be construed as a finding, interpretation, or construction by the Congress that any applicable law authorizes, establishes, recognizes, or confirms the validity or invalidity of any such claim, and the determination of the applicability or effect of any law to any such claim shall be unaffected by anything in this Act.

(c) No taxes shall be imposed by the State upon any lands or other property now owned or hereafter acquired by the United States.

(d) Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act or any other provision of law, the annual federal payment authorized to be appropriated to the District of Columbia pursuant to section 502 of the District of Columbia Self-Government and Governmental Reorganization Act (D.C. Code, sec. 47-3406) shall be authorized to be appropriated to the State of New Columbia.

STATE TITLE TO LANDS AND PROPERTY

SEC. 6. (a) The State of New Columbia and its political subdivisions shall have and retain title to all property, real and personal, title to which is held by the territory of the District of Columbia.

(b)(1) Subject to paragraph (2), the State of New Columbia is granted, effective upon its admission into the Union, title to all public lands and other public property within the boundaries of the State of New Columbia, title to which is held by the United States immediately prior to admission of the State into the Union.

(2) Any lands and other properties that, as of the date of admission of New Columbia into the Union, are set aside pursuant to law for the use of the United States under any (A) Act of Congress, (B) Executive order, (C) proclamation of the President, or (D) proclamation of the Mayor of the District of Columbia, shall remain the property of the United States.

(c) Not later than five years after the date of admission of New Columbia into the Union, each Federal agency having control over any land or property that is retained by the United States pursuant to subsection (b) of this section shall submit a report to the President and the Congress concerning the need for such land or property. If the President determines that any such land or property is no longer needed by the Federal Government, it shall be conveyed to the State of New Columbia.

(d) All laws of the United States reserving to the United States the free use or enjoyment of property which vests in or is conveyed to the State of New Columbia or its political subdivisions pursuant to this section or reserving the right to alter, amend, or repeal laws relating thereto shall cease to be effective upon the admission of the State of New Columbia into the Union.

ELECTIONS

SEC. 7. (a)(1) Not more than sixty days after the date of enactment of this Act, the President of the United States shall certify such enactment to the Mayor of the District of Columbia. Not more than thirty days after such certification the Mayor of the District of Columbia shall issue a proclamation for the elections, subject to the provisions of this Act, for officers of all State elective offices provided for by the constitution of the proposed State of New Columbia and for two Senators and one Representative in Congress.

(2) In the first election of Senators from the State (pursuant to paragraph (1)) the two senatorial offices shall be separately identified and designated, and no person may be a candidate for both offices. No such identification or designation of either of the two senatorial offices shall refer to or be taken to refer to the terms of such offices, or in any way impair the privilege of the Senate to determine the class to which each of the Senators elected shall be assigned.

(b) The proclamation of the Mayor of the District of Columbia required by subsection (a) shall provide for the holding of a primary election and a general election and at such elections the officers required to be elected as provided in subsection (a) shall be chosen by the people. Such elections shall be held, and the qualifications of voters shall be, as prescribed by the constitution of the proposed State of New Columbia for the election of members of the proposed State legislature. Election returns shall be made and certified in such manner as the constitution of the proposed State of New Columbia may prescribe. The Mayor of the District of Columbia shall certify the results of such elections to the President of the United States.

(c)(1) At an election designated by proclamation of the Mayor of the District of Columbia, which may be the primary or the general election held pursuant to subsection (b), a territorial general election, or a special election, there shall be submitted to the electors qualified to vote in such election, for adoption or rejection, the following propositions:

(A) New Columbia shall immediately be admitted into the Union as a State.

(B) The boundaries of the State of New Columbia shall be as prescribed in the New Columbia Admission Act and all claims of the State to any areas of land or sea outside the boundaries so prescribed are hereby irrevocably relinquished to the United States.

(C) All provisions of the New Columbia Admission Act reserving rights or powers to the United States, including those prescribing the terms or conditions of the grants of lands or other property made to the State of New Columbia, are consented to fully by the State and its people.

(2) In the event the propositions under paragraph (1) are adopted in such election by a majority of the legal votes cast on such submission, the proposed constitution of the proposed State of New Columbia, ratified by the people at the election held on November 2, 1982, shall be deemed amended accordingly.

(3) In the event any one of the propositions under paragraph (1) is not adopted at such election by a majority of the legal votes cast on such submission, the provisions of this Act shall cease to be effective.

(4) The Mayor of the District of Columbia is authorized and directed to take such action as may be necessary or appropriate to ensure the submission of such propositions to the people. The return of the votes cast on such propositions shall be made by the election officers directly to the Board of Elections of the District of Columbia, which shall certify the results of the submission to the Mayor. The Mayor shall certify the results of such submission to the President of the United States.

(d)(1) If the President finds that the propositions set forth in subsection (c)(1) have been duly adopted by the people of New Columbia, the President, upon certification of the returns of the election of the officers required to be elected as provided in subsection (a), shall issue a proclamation announcing the results of such election as so ascertained. Upon the issuance of such proclamation by the President, the State of New Columbia shall be deemed admitted into the Union as provided in section 2 of this Act.

(2) Until the State of New Columbia is admitted into the Union, individuals holding legislative, executive, and judicial offices of the District of Columbia, including the Delegate in Congress from the District of Columbia, shall continue to discharge the duties of their respective offices. Upon the issuance of such proclamation by the President of the United States and the admission of the State of New Columbia into the Union, the officers elected at such election, and qualified under the provisions of the constitution and laws of such State, shall proceed to exercise all the functions pertaining to their offices in, under, or by authority of the government of such State, and offices not required to be elected at such initial election shall be selected or continued in office as provided by the constitution and laws of such State. The Governor of such State shall certify the election of the Senators and Representative in the manner required by law, and the Senators and Representative shall be entitled to be admitted to seats in Congress and to all the rights and privileges of Senators and Representatives of other States in the Congress of the United States.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES MEMBERSHIP

SEC. 8. The State of New Columbia upon its admission into the Union shall be entitled to one Representative until the taking effect of the next reapportionment, and such Representative shall be in addition to the membership of the House of Representatives as now prescribed by law, except that such temporary increase in the membership shall not operate to either increase or decrease the permanent membership of the House of Representatives or affect the basis of apportionment for the Congress.

LAWS IN EFFECT

SEC. 9. Upon admission of the State of New Columbia into the Union, all of the territorial laws then in force in the Territory of the District of Columbia shall be and continue in force and effect throughout the State, except as modified or changed by this Act, or by the Constitution of the State, or as thereafter modified or changed by the legislature of the State. All of the laws of the United States shall have the same force and effect within the State as elsewhere in the United States.

CONTINUATION OF SUITS

SEC. 10. (a) No writ, action, indictment, cause, or proceeding pending in any court of the District of Columbia or in the United States District Court for the District of Columbia shall abate by reason of the admission of the State of New Columbia into the Union, but shall be transferred and shall proceed within such appropriate State courts as shall be established under the constitution of the State, or shall continue in the United States District Court for the District of Columbia, as the nature of the case may require. And no writ, action, indictment, cause, or proceeding shall abate by reason of any change in the courts, but shall proceed within the State or United States courts according to the laws thereof, respectively. The appropriate State courts shall be the successors of the courts of the District of Columbia as to all cases arising within the limits embraced within the jurisdiction of such courts, respectively, with full power to proceed with such cases, and award mesne or final process therein, and all files, records, indictments, and proceedings relating to any such writ, action, indictment, cause, or proceeding shall be transferred to such appropriate State courts and shall be proceeded with therein in due course of law.

(b) All civil causes of action and all criminal offenses which shall have arisen or been committed prior to the admission of the State, but as to which no writ, action, indictment, or proceeding shall be pending at the date of such admission, shall be subject to prosecution in the appropriate State courts or in the United States District Court for the District of Columbia in like manner, to the same extent, and with like right of appellate review, as if such State had been created and such State courts had been established prior to the accrual of such causes of action or the commission of such offenses. The admission of the State shall effect no change in the substantive or criminal law governing causes of action and criminal offenses which shall have arisen or been committed, and any such criminal offenses as shall have been committed against the laws of the District of Columbia shall be tried and punished by the appropriate courts of the State, and any such criminal offenses as shall have been committed against the laws of the United States shall be tried and punished in the United States District Court for the District of Columbia.

APPEALS

SEC. 11. Parties shall have the same rights of appeal from and appellate review of final decisions of the United States District Court for the District of Columbia or the District of Columbia Court of Appeals in any case finally decided prior to the admission of the State of New Columbia into the Union, whether or not an appeal therefrom shall have been perfected prior to such admission. The United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit and the Supreme Court of the United States shall have the same jurisdiction in such cases as by law provided prior to the admission of the State into the Union. Any mandate issued subsequent to the admission of the State shall be to the United States District Court for the District of Columbia or a court of the State, as appropriate. Parties shall have the same rights of appeal from and appellate review of all orders, judgments, and decrees of the United States District Court for the District of Columbia and of the Supreme Court of the State of New Columbia, as successor to the District of Columbia Court of Appeals, in any case pending at the time of admission of the State into the Union, and the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit and the Supreme Court of the United States shall have the same jurisdiction therein, as by law provided in any case arising subsequent to the admission of the State into the Union.

JUDICIAL AND CRIMINAL PROVISIONS

SEC. 12. Effective upon the admission of New Columbia into the Union—

(1) Section 41 of title 28, United States Code is amended in the second column by inserting ", New Columbia" after "District of Columbia".

(2) The first paragraph of section 88 of title 28, United States Code, is amended to read as follows:

"The District of Columbia and the State of New Columbia comprise one judicial district.".

MILITARY LANDS

SEC. 13. (a) Subject to subsection (b) and notwithstanding the admission of the State of New Columbia into the Union, authority is reserved in the United States for the exercise by the Congress of the United States of the power of exclusive legislation, as provided by article I, section 8, clause 17, of the Constitution of the United States, in all cases whatsoever over such tracts or parcels of land as, immediately prior to the admission of the State, are controlled or owned by the United States and held for defense or Coast Guard purposes.

(b)(1) The State of New Columbia shall always have the right to serve civil or criminal process within such tracts or parcels of land in suits or prosecutions for or on account of rights acquired, obligations incurred, or crimes committed within the State but outside of such tracts or parcels of land.

(2) The reservation of authority in the United States for the exercise by the Congress of the United States of the power of exclusive legislation over such lands shall not operate to prevent such lands from being a part of the State of New Columbia, or to prevent the State from exercising over or upon such lands, concurrently with the States, any jurisdiction which it would have in the absence of such reservation of authority and which is consistent with the laws hereafter enacted by the Congress pursuant to such reservation of authority.

(3) The power of exclusive legislation shall vest and remain in the United States only so long as the particular tract or parcel of land involved is controlled or owned by the United States and used for defense or Coast Guard purposes, except that the United States shall continue to have sole and exclusive jurisdiction over such military installations as have been or may be determined to be critical areas as delineated by the President of the United States or the Secretary of Defense.

UNITED STATES NATIONALITY

SEC. 14. No provision of this Act shall operate to confer United States nationality, to terminate nationality lawfully acquired, or to restore nationality terminated or lost under any law of the United States or under any treaty to which the United States is or was a party.

REPEAL OF INCONSISTENT LAWS

SEC. 15. All Acts or parts of Acts in conflict with the provisions of this Act, whether passed by the legislature of the District of Columbia or by Congress, are hereby repealed.

NATIONAL CAPITAL SERVICE AREA

SEC. 16. (a) The National Capital Service Area referred to in section 4 is more particularly described as follows:

Beginning at the point on the present Virginia-District of Columbia boundary due west of the northernmost point of Theodore Roosevelt Island and running due east of the eastern shore of the Potomac River; thence generally south along the shore at the mean high water mark to the northwest corner of the Kennedy Center; thence east along the north side of the Kennedy Center to a point where it reaches the E Street Expressway; thence east on the expressway to E Street Northwest and thence east on E Street Northwest to Eighteenth Street Northwest; thence south on Eighteenth Street Northwest to Constitution Avenue Northwest; thence east on Constitution Avenue to Seventeenth Street Northwest; thence north on Seventeenth Street Northwest to Pennsylvania Avenue Northwest; thence east on Pennsylvania Avenue to Jackson Place Northwest; thence north on Jackson Place to H Street Northwest; thence east on H Street Northwest to Madison Place Northwest; thence south on Madison Place Northwest to Pennsylvania Avenue Northwest; thence east on Pennsylvania Avenue Northwest to Fifteenth Street Northwest; thence south on Fifteenth Street Northwest to Pennsylvania Avenue Northwest; thence southeast on Pennsylvania Avenue Northwest to John Marshall Place Northwest; thence north on John Marshall Place Northwest to C Street Northwest; thence east on C Street Northwest to Third Street Northwest; thence north on Third Street Northwest to D Street Northwest; thence east on D Street Northwest to Second Street Northwest; thence south on Second Street Northwest to the intersection of Constitution Avenue Northwest and Louisiana Avenue Northwest; thence northeast on Louisiana Avenue Northwest to North Capitol Street; thence north on North Capitol Street to Massachusetts Avenue Northwest; thence southeast on Massachusetts Avenue Northwest so as to encompass Union Square; thence following Union Square to F Street Northeast; thence east on F Street Northeast to Second Street Northeast; thence south on Second Street Northeast to D Street Northeast; thence west on D Street Northeast to First Street Northeast; thence south on First Street Northeast to Maryland Avenue Northeast; thence generally north and east on Maryland Avenue to Second Street Northeast; thence south on Second Street Northeast to C Street Southeast; thence west on C Street Southeast to New Jersey Avenue Southeast; thence south on New Jersey Avenue Southeast to D Street Southeast; thence west on D Street Southeast to Canal Street Parkway; thence southeast on Canal Street Parkway to E Street Southeast; thence west on E Street Southeast to the intersection of Canal Street Southwest and South Capital Street; thence northwest on Canal Street Southwest to Second Street Southwest; thence north on Sixth Street Southwest to Independence Avenue; thence west on Independence Avenue to Twelfth Street Southwest; thence south on Twelfth Street Southwest to D Street Southwest; thence west on D Street Southwest to Fourteenth Street Southwest; thence south on Fourteenth Street Southwest to the middle of the Washington Channel; thence generally south and east along the midchannel of the Washington Channel to a point due west of the northern boundary line of Fort Lesley McNair; thence due east to the side of the Washington Channel; thence following generally south and east along the side of the Washington Channel at the mean high water mark, to the point of confluence with the Anacostia River, and along the northern shore at the mean high water mark to the northernmost point of the Eleventh Street Bridge; thence generally south and west along such shore at the mean high water mark to the point of confluence of the Anacostia and Potomac Rivers; thence generally south and east along the northern side of the Eleventh Street Bridge to the eastern shore of the Anacostia River; thence generally south along the eastern shore at the mean high water mark of the Potomac River to the point where it meets the present southeastern boundary line of the District of Columbia; thence south and west along such southeastern boundary line to the point where it meets the present Virginia-District of Columbia boundary; thence generally north and west up the Potomac River along the Virginia-District of Columbia boundary to the point of beginning.

(b) Where the area in subsection (a) is bounded by any street, such street, and any sidewalk thereof, shall be included within such area.

(c)(1) Any Federal real property affronting or abutting, as of the date of the enactment of this Act, the area described in subsection (a) shall be deemed to be within such area.

(2) For the purposes of paragraph (1) Federal real property affronting or abutting such area described in subsection (a) shall—

(A) be deemed to include, but not limited to, Fort Lesley McNair, the Washington Navy Yard, the Anacostia Naval Annex, the United States Naval Station, Bolling Air Force Base, and the Naval Research Laboratory; and

(B) not be construed to include any area situated outside of the District of Columbia boundary as it existed immediately prior to the date of the enactment of this Act, nor be construed to include any portion of the Anacostia Park situated east of the northern side of the Eleventh Street Bridge, or any portion of the Rock Creek Park.●

S. 294. A bill for the relief of Spalding & Sons, Inc.; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

RELIEF OF SPALDING & SONS, INC.

● Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, today I am reintroducing legislation designed to begin the process of rectifying a dispute between a private timber company in my State and the Bureau of Land Management.

In 1977, a family-owned timber company located in Grants Pass, OR, Spalding & Sons, Inc., purchased the Jamison-Harris timber sale from the Bureau of Land Management. Subsequently, a significant portion of the sale was damaged by fire in 1978. Due to an apparent mistaken belief between the BLM and Spalding & Sons regarding legal rights involved, the parties agreed to execute a modification of the sale, which resulted in the BLM repurchasing the damaged portion of the timber sale at the original bid price—a price far below fair market value. This difference in price, a total of $250,000, is what the company wishes to recover from the BLM.

For many reasons, the claim has been denied by the BLM, and the best method to settle this dispute is introducing this legislation, which will be referred to the Claims Court by the Senate Judiciary Committee. There is no question in my mind that this matter deserves a full hearing, and it is my hope that both the court and the Judiciary Committee will move quickly to render a decision.●

By Mr. BOREN:

S. 295. A bill to amend title 38, United States Code, to authorize a service pension of $150 per month for veterans of World War I and for certain surviving spouses of such veterans; to the Committee on Veterans' Affairs.

WORLD WAR I VETERANS' SERVICE PENSION ACT

● Mr. BOREN. Mr. President, I am introducing legislation today which will authorize a service pension of $150 per month for veterans of World War I and for certain surviving spouses of such veterans. A similar bill is being introduced by Representative GLENN ANDERSON of California.

Those who valiantly served our country during World War I in order to preserve the principles of freedom should not be forgotten. Veterans of World War I are few in number and deserving of this small monthly pension. It is appropriate to demonstrate our concern and compassion for these veterans while we still have the time to do so.

Under this legislation, title 38 of the United States Code would be amended to extend benefits of $150 per month to veterans of World War I and certain surviving spouses. The measure will clearly take into consideration the availability of appropriations in paying these benefits.

The VA Administrator will make these payments to any World War I veteran who served in the active military, naval, or air service for 90 days or more during World War I, was discharged or released for such service for a service-connected disability, or served for a period of 90 consecutive days or more which began or ended during World War I.

Those who served during World War I, did so under very adverse and unfavorable circumstances and deserve every benefit possible. In this respect, our praise should go beyond the mere recognition of their deeds but should also extend to include this proposed benefit. We should not only extend our appreciation and compassion in words, but also in deeds.

Mr. President, I am introducing this legislation as a firm believer in those individuals who courageously gave of themselves in World War I. There are only 297,000 World War I veterans and 210,000 spouses still surviving. I am convinced this cause is worthwhile to honor those who fought for our freedoms during World War I.

I urge my colleagues to join me in supporting the passage of this bill. I ask unanimous consent that a copy of the bill be included in the RECORD.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "World War I Veterans' Service Pension Act".

SEC. 2. (a) Subchapter II of chapter 15 of title 38, United States Code, is amended by inserting after section 512 the following new section:

"§ 513. Veterans of World War I

"(a) Notwithstanding section 101(7) of this title, for the purposes of this section, the term 'World War I' means the period beginning on April 5, 1917, and ending on July 2, 1921.

"(b) Subject to the availability of appropriations, the Administrator shall pay to any veteran of World War I who meets the service requirements of this section a pension at a monthly rate of $150.

"(c) A veteran meets the service requirements of this section if the veteran served in the active military, naval, or air service—

"(1) for ninety days or more during World War I;

"(2) during World War I and was discharged or released from such service for a service-connected disability; or

"(3) for a period of ninety consecutive days or more which began or ended during World War I.

"(d) Any payment to a veteran under this section is in addition to any payment to which the veteran is entitled under section 521 of this title or section 306 of the Veterans' and Survivors' Pension Improvement Act of 1978.".

(b) The table of sections at the beginning of such chapter is amended by inserting after the item relating to section 512 the following new item:

"513. Veterans of World War I.".

SEC. 3. (a) Subchapter III of chapter 15 of title 38, United States Code, is amended by inserting after section 541 the following new section:

"§ 541a. Certain surviving spouses of World War I veterans

"(a) Subject to the availability of appropriations, the Administrator shall pay to the surviving spouse of any deceased World War I veteran who met the service requirements of section 513(c) of this title a pension at a monthly rate of $150.

"(b) No pension shall be paid to the surviving spouse of a veteran under this section unless such surviving spouse was married to the veteran—

"(1) before December 14, 1944;

"(2) for one year or more; or

"(3) for any period of time, if a child was born of the marriage or was born to them before the marriage.

"(c) Any payment to a surviving spouse under this section is in addition to any payment to which the surviving spouse is entitled under section 541 of this title or under section 306 of the Veterans' and Survivors' Pension Improvement Act of 1978.".

(b) The table of sections at the beginning of such chapter is amended by inserting after the item relating to section 541 the following new item:

"541a. Certain surviving spouses of World War I veterans.".

SEC. 4. The amendments made by this Act shall apply to payments under chapter 15 of title 38, United States Code, for months after September 1985.●

By Mr. BOREN (for himself, Mr. COCHRAN, Mr. ZORINSKY, and Mr. ANDREWS):

S. 296. A bill to authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to establish a special cropland conservation program for erosion-prone cropland whereby the Secretary of Agriculture will assist the owners and operators of such land to make an orderly change in their cropping and land-use systems and to implement the conservation treatment needed to conserve the soil and water resources of the cropland; to the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry.

SPECIAL CROPLAND CONSERVATION ACT

● Mr. BOREN. Mr. President, on behalf of Senator COCHRAN, Senator ZORINSKY, Senator ANDREWS and myself, I am introducing legislation today which will authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to implement a special soil and water conservation program for erosion-prone cropland. This bill is identical to a bill I introduced in the 98th Congress, S. 998 and virtually identical to a provision the House added to S. 663, the so-called "Sodbuster" bill.

An integral part of our food and agricultural policies must be the conservation and wise use of our land and water resources. By far, the most serious threat to soil productivity is erosion. The 1980 RCA appraisal indicated that our agricultural productive capacity is threatened by conservation problems. A decline in productive capacity will translate into an increase in production costs. The most critical resource problem identified in the RCA appraisal was soil erosion occurring at rates that could reduce the sustained productive capacity of agricultural lands.

According to the National Agricultural Lands Study [NALS], we are losing the equivalent of 1.01 million acres of cropland annually to erosion. In the 10 Great Plains States, wind erosion results in the loss of an additional 240,000 acre-equivalents.

Soil erosion by water and wind is reducing the productivity on 141 million acres, that is, one out of every four acres. Nearly 3 billion tons of soil erode from the Nation's cropland each year. Over the next 50 years, productivity losses could equal the output of 25 to 62 million acres of cropland, or production of 50 to 75 million metric tons of grain annually.

USDA estimates that more than a third of the Nation's cropland is eroding at an unacceptable rate, at a rate that reduces the long-term productivity of the land. An acceptable rate is one that can be tolerated indefinitely without reducing the soil's productive capacity. For most cropland soils, this annual rate ranges from 3 to 5 tons per acre. At this rate, 1 inch of topsoil is lost every 30 to 50 years.

Combined water and wind erosion exceeds tolerable levels for maintaining soil resources on almost 300 million acres of non-Federal cropland, pastureland, forest land, and rangeland. For cropland, the combined wind and water erosion totals 2.8 billion tons each year for a per acre average of 6.8 tons annually.

Each year, water, alone, causes 1.9 billion tons of soil to erode from our cropland. Sheet and rill erosion exceeds the average tolerance rate of 5 tons annually on 94 million acres of cropland. Fifty-four percent of all sheet and rill erosion and 89 percent of the excessive sheet and rill erosion occurs on 10 percent of the Nation's cropland—41 million acres. On this land, erosion annually exceeds 10 tons per acre.

Even if the lands eroding annually at over 10 tons per acre were adequately protected, erosion at 5 to 10 tons per acre would continue to threaten our long-term agricultural productivity on another 53 million acres—13 percent of all cropland.

In my home State of Oklahoma, sheet, rill, and wind erosion is more than 5 tons per acre per year on 43 percent of the cultivated cropland. On an average, all Oklahoma cropland annually loses more than 7 tons per acre—an average of 4 tons erode due to water and an average of 3.43 tons erode due to wind erosion. Wind, alone, causes over 35 million tons per year to erode from Oklahoma cropland. Wind erosion in the western half of the State is a major problem, especially during drought conditions. In November and December of 1984, wind erosion reports showed that almost 114,000 acres were damaged by wind erosion. Over 53,000 acres of crops were destroyed during this period and there are presently 835,000 acres in condition to blow at the present time.

Mr. President, the conservation programs that we have in place today have helped to reduce erosion over the past years. Yet, it is obvious there is a need for more to be done. Over 35 percent of Oklahoma's cropland is eroding at rates greater than the allowable soil loss. It is estimated that 40 percent of the conservation job remains to be done in Oklahoma in all aspects, including watershed protection and land treatment. Approximately 5.9 million acres of Oklahoma cropland needs conservation treatment. I would imagine that similar situations are true for many other States.

The current programs simply have not been able to meet the need for conservation treatments. The Great Plains program provided $1,240,192 in fiscal year 1984 for new contracts in Oklahoma. Yet, 228 applications were not approved because of an insufficient amount of funds. Right now, we have a 2-year backlog for this one program. For each year the land is not brought into approved conservation uses or under approved conservation treatment, we continue to lose valuable soil at an alarming rate. Resources that go unprotected today will be unavailable to produce commodities tomorrow. Uncontrolled, erosion continues to degrade natural soil productivity.

Mr. President, we continue to experience a depressed farm economy and it is unlikely that the situation will improve in the very near future. In today's economic climate, many farmers simply lack the resources necessary to implement needed conservation treatments. On some highly erodible land, the only way to correct the problem is to remove the land from cultivation. Yet, converting the land to a less intensive use can reduce the owner's income. Given the cash-flow problems our farmers are facing, they simply cannot afford to lose any income. The costs incurred, or income foregone, in soil and water conservation investments are rarely recovered in the short-term cash-flow of farm businesses.

The conservation of our soil is in the public interest. In a poll conducted by Louis Harris and Associates, conservation was viewed as a joint public and private responsibility in which the burden should be shared. It is important to remember that many of the benefits of soil and water conservation go to society at large, yet, it is usually the landowner or operator, alone, who must apply the practices and bear the costs, unless he is lucky enough to have his application for cost-sharing with the Government approved.

The legislation I am introducing today will give the Secretary of Agriculture another tool to share the cost of the implementation of conservation treatment. This legislation gives the Secretary the authority to implement a special conservation program for erosion-prone cropland. Under the program, the Secretary would provide technical and financial assistance to the owners and operators of erosion-prone cropland. Essentially, the program is patterned after the Great Plains Conservation Program which has been so successful in the Great Plains area.

The Special Cropland Conservation Program is targeted to erosion-prone cropland and eligibility for the program is not dependent upon participation in an acreage reduction program. Additionally, this program is designed to allow for conversion of erosion-prone cropland to permanent cover and other treatments which require a number of years.

Lands eligible for the Special Cropland Conservation Program are those croplands in classes IIIe, IVe, VI, VII, and VIII under the land capability classification system used by the Soil Conservation Service. The Secretary does have the authority to include land that is not in these classes upon a demonstration by the owner or operator that a serious soil erosion problem exists on the land or that the land is an integral part of the erosion-prone cropland. Primarily, the program is directed at land which in most cases require a number of years of treatment.

The Special Cropland Conservation Program is designed to give the Secretary of Agriculture some flexibility in the financing of the program as the Secretary could make the payments in cash or in-kind commodities. At times when Government surpluses of commodities are high, this will allow the Secretary to use the commodities for payments under this program.

In the past, some farmers have participated in conservation programs only to find that they lost their acreage base as a result of their participation. Under this legislation, the acreage that is diverted for conservation treatment under the program would be considered as active cropping acres for the purposes of any Federal commodity program. Further, the diverted acreage would be considered as part of the base history for as long as the permanent cover is maintained.

Mr. President, we must protect and maintain the productivity of agricultural lands through actions that prevent gradual degradation caused by excessive soil erosion. If we are to continue to produce an adequate supply of food for home and exports, we simply must maintain high-quality soil resources. Now is the time to increase the effectiveness of our conservation efforts, while the damage can be controlled.

Mr. President, this is not a costly program. In fact, this program will reduce Government costs of commodity programs by taking out of production cropland now producing crops eligible for commodity programs. For example, Representative DASCHLE's staff estimated last year that in the one wheat-producing county for which data was available, total conservation agreement payments over 10 years would be less than 1 year's Federal crop support payments. Further, if we were to take 5 million wheat acres out of production as part of a conservation program costing $150 million, we would save approximately $500 million in crop support payments.

I urge my colleagues to join me in support of this legislation and ask unanimous consent that the bill and a staff summary of the bill be included in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the materials were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 296

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "Special Cropland Conservation Act".

DEFINITIONS

SEC. 2. As used in this Act—

(1) the term "erosion-prone cropland" means land classified as Class IIIe, IVe, VI, VII, or VIII under the Land Capability Classification System used by the Soil Conservation Service and on which cultivated or rotation crops have been grown in three out of the past five years;

(2) the term "Secretary" means the Secretary of Agriculture;

(3) the phrase "owner or operator" means the owner or operator of erosion-prone lands; and

(4) the phrase "in-kind commodities" means commodities that normally are produced on land that is the subject of agreements under this Act.

SPECIAL CROPLAND CONSERVATION PROGRAM

SEC. 3. (a) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Secretary may formulate and carry out a conservation program, in cooperation with owners and operators of erosion-prone cropland, to assist such owners and operators in an orderly change in their cropping or land-use systems and to implement the conservation treatment needed to conserve the soil and water resources of cropland managed under such changed systems. The Secretary may approve inclusion of other than erosion-prone cropland in the program on a demonstration by the owner or operator involved that a serious soil erosion problem exists on such land or that such land is an integral part of the field and the conservation system needed for the erosion-prone cropland. The Secretary shall provide technical and financial assistance to participating owners and operators to accomplish the objective of this Act.

(b) The Secretary may enter into agreements of not more than ten years with owners or operators to carry out the changes in cropping or land use and conservation treatment described under subsection (a) of this section. By entering into the agreement with the Secretary, the owner or operator shall agree (1) to effectuate a plan, approved by the appropriate soil conservation district, for the cropland substantially in accordance with the schedule outlined therein unless any requirement thereof is waived or modified by the Secretary; (2) to forfeit all rights to further payments under the agreement or refund to the Secretary all payments, with interest, received thereunder on violation of the agreement at any stage during the time the owner or operator has control of the land if the Secretary, after considering the recommendations of the soil conservation district and the Chief of the Soil Conservation Service, determines that the violation warrants refund or termination of the agreement; (3) upon transfer of the owner or operator's rights and interest in the cropland during the agreement period, to forfeit all rights to further payments under the agreement and to refund to the Secretary all payments received thereunder, unless the transferee of any such land agrees with the Secretary to assume all obligations under the agreement; (4) not to adopt any practice that would tend to defeat the purposes of the agreement; and (5) to such additional provisions as the Secretary determines are desirable and are included in the agreement to effectuate the purposes of the program under this Act or to facilitate the practical administration thereof.

(c) In return for such agreement by an owner or operator, the Secretary shall agree to provide technical assistance and to share the cost of carrying out the changes in cropping or land-use conversions and conservations treatments set forth in the agreement for which the Secretary determines that cost sharing is appropriate and in the public interest. The portion of such cost (including labor and maintenance costs) to be shared shall be that part the Secretary determines is necessary and appropriate to effectuate the changes in cropping or land-use conversions and the installation and maintenance of the conversation treatment for a normally expected life of such treatment.

(d) Payments made under this section shall be made in accordance with a formula developed by the Secretary. In developing such formula, the Secretary shall take into consideration (1) the costs of establishing and maintaining the agreed-upon conservation treatments for the normally expected life of such treatment; (2) the severity of the erosion hazard involved; and (3) other factors the Secretary determines necessary to encourage participation in the program under this Act.

(e) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, payments under this section shall be made in cash or in in-kind commodities in such amounts as agreed upon and specified in the agreement. However, the use of Commodity Credit Corporation commodity in making payment under this section shall be subject to a finding by the Secretary that payments in kind of such commodity will not displace to any significant degree the usual marketings of such commodity. If the payment is made with in-kind commodities, the payments shall be made by delivery by the Commodity Credit Corporation of the commodity involved to the owner or operator at a warehouse or other similar facility located in the county in which the cropland is located or such other location as agreed to by the Secretary and the owner or operator, by the transfer of negotiable warehouse receipts, or by such other methods, including sale of the commodity in commercial markets, determined by the Secretary to be appropriate to enable the owner or operator to receive efficiently and expeditiously possession of the commodity. If Commodity Credit Corporation stocks of the commodity are not readily available to effect full payment in kind to the owner or operator, the Secretary may substitute fully or partially payment in cash for payment in kind.

(f) The Secretary shall provide the owner or operator the option of receiving payments as the agreement items are completed or, where appropriate, the Secretary may provide for payment in advance of the performance of the planned conservation treatment.

(g) The Secretary shall provide adequate safeguards to protect the interests of tenants and sharecroppers, including provision for sharing, on a fair and equitable basis, in payments under the program.

(h) The Secretary shall take steps to ensure that acreage diverted from the production of crops to permanent conservation cover under an agreement are considered as active cropping acres (also known by such titles as cropland acreage base or normal crop acreage) for any Federal commodity program, including, but not limited to, production control and adjustment programs, that uses cropping history in the operation of the program. The diverted acreage shall be considered as part of the base history for as long as the permanent cover established under the agreement is maintained.

(i) The Secretary shall, within sixty days after the enactment of this Act, publish in the Federal Register regulations implementing this Act, including those describing erosion-prone land.

(j) In carrying out the program authorized by this Act, the Secretary may use the funds, facilities, and authorities of the Commodity Credit Corporation.

ADDITIONAL AUTHORITY

SEC. 4. The authority provided by this Act shall be in addition to and not in place of other authorities available to the Secretary and Commodity Credit Corporation for carrying out soil and water conservation programs.

SPECIAL CROPLAND CONSERVATION PROGRAM

STAFF SUMMARY OF THE MAJOR PROVISIONS

1. The land eligible for the program would be restricted to Class IIIe, IVe, VI, VII, or VIII cropland, unless the Secretary determines, upon a demonstration by the owner or operator of other land, that a serious soil erosion problem exists on the land or that the land is an integral part of the erosion-prone cropland.

2. The Secretary would enter into agreements lasting no more than 10 years with the participants of the program. The participant would agree (1) to effectuate a plan for the cropland; (2) to forfeit all rights to further payments or refund to the Secretary all payments if the participant violates the agreement while he has control of the land if the Secretary determines that the violation warrants a refund or termination of the agreement; (3) to forfeit all rights to further payments and to refund all the payments received if the particpant transfers his rights and interest in the cropland, unless the transferee agrees to assume all obligations under the agreement; (4) not to adopt practices that would tend to defeat the purposes of the agreement; and (5) to such other provisions as the Secretary determines necessary.

3. The Secretary would agree to provide technical assistance and to share the cost of carrying out the necessary conservation treatments. The portion of the cost to be shared will be that part the Secretary determines to be necessary to effectuate the conservation treatment.

4. Payments would be made according to a formula, developed by the Secretary. The Secretary, in developing the formula, shall take into consideration the costs of establishing and maintaining the conservation treatment and the severity of the erosion hazard involved.

5. Payments would be in cash or in-kind commodities. Before making payment by in-kind commodities, the Secretary would have to determine that making the in-kind payment would not displace to any significant degree the usual marketings of the commodity.

6. The Secretary would be required to make payments as the agreement items are completed, or where appropriate, in advance of the performance of the treatment.

7. The Secretary will be required to safeguard the interests of tenants and sharecroppers.

8. The acreage diverted from production of crops under this program would be considered as active cropping acres for the purposes of any Federal commodity program. The diverted aceage will be considered as part of the base history for as long as the permanent cover is maintained.●

By Mr. BOREN:

S. 297. A bill to amend the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 to change certain contribution limits for congressional elections; to the Committee on Rules and Administration.

TO CHANGE CERTAIN CONTRIBUTION LIMITS FOR CONGRESSIONAL ELECTIONS

● Mr. BOREN. Mr. President, the experiences of this past campaign cycle dictate that I once again introduce this bill limiting the contributions individual candidates for the U.S. Senate and House of Representatives can receive from political action committees [PAC's]. I noted when I introduced this bill last session that it dealt with "an area whose rapid growth is truly alarming and represents a serious danger to the political process." There are some who, for philosophical or personal reasons, fail to acknowledge this imminent danger and argue that we need not be so concerned with PAC's. They feel assured that PAC's will soon reach their saturation point both in terms of growth and their desire to contribute to congressional campaigns. I stand before you today to assert that neither the history nor the revealed inclination of PAC's indicates any such tendency for either curtailed growth or limited campaign expenditures. In fact, history teaches us just the opposite lesson.

PAC's have been around since the beginning of this century. By 1974 their number totaled just over 600. Early in the 1970's there were a number of legislative enactments and administrative and judicial rulings which spawned a growth in the number and activity of PAC's unprecedented in our political system. It took PAC's three quarters of a century to reach a total number of 608. In just the next decade their number increased by 580 percent to 3,525. The spending trend of PAC's illustrates the real crux of this problem even more vividly. During the 1972 election cycle, PAC's gave approximately $8,500,000 to candidates campaigning for Congress. By the 1984 election cycle, this figure had multiplied by more than 1,200 percent to $104,400,000. Astounding as this amount is, it is certain to increase even more for this period because these figures only go up to election time and characteristically one of the heaviest contribution periods for PAC's is after the election when they help pay off campaign debts.

The inherent danger PAC's present to our democratic political process lies not in their fundamental right to this type of self-expression. Rather it lies in their very imminent and immediate ability to subvert the political process by becoming the overwhelmingly predominant force in the congressional campaign process. When I introduced this bill last session I reported that PAC contributions were doubling every 4 years and at this rate PAC's would be contributing over one quarter of a billion dollars to candidates running for the U.S. Senate or House of Representatives by the year 1992. Updating these figures in light of the experiences of this past election, we may well see the quarter billion dollar PAC contribution mark reached as early as 1988. In terms of our democratic system and congressional campaign process, this is absolutely devastating. In the election cycle ending in 1982, there were 97 Senate and House candidates who received 50 percent or more of their campaign funds from PAC's. As of October 18, 1984 this figure had increased to 150 candidates with the close of the reporting period still 3 months off. This represents a 50 percent increase from just one election cycle to the next. Given the nature of PAC's left unrestrained, this figure can only increase.

Mr. President, it is not my intent, nor the purpose of this bill, to remove PAC's from the elective arena. I believe that PAC's enjoy a rightful and necessary place in a democratic political system. As James Madison argued so eloquently over 200 years ago in Federalist 10, there is inherent in a democratic system such as ours the idea that no group or small collection of groups should be permitted to become so powerful or influential that it constitutes a prevailing or decisive force in the electorate. PAC's, if left to their own unbridled ambition, will become that force. Madison told us there were two ways in which to deal with factions. One was to suppress them; the other was to control them. Again, as Madison pointed out, suppression is not consistent with our idea of democratic theory. Consequently, we are left with the only viable option of controlling them.

This bill takes a modest step in the direction of bringing PAC's into proper balance among themselves and with the rest of society. For the benefit of those who may be fearful that we are chipping away at the bedrock of our democratic system, let me stress that in no way does this bill outlaw all PAC contributions. It merely places what we feel are reasonable limits on total PAC contributions. Rather than undermining our democratic process, it will provide just the opposite effect of broadening our democratic base by not permitting our elective process to fall prey to well-financed special interest. The limits proposed here will help bring under control the runaway campaign expenditures we have witnessed due to the extraordinary amounts of money pumped into the congressional campaign process by PAC's.

A candidates' campaign funds, like a candidates' votes, should derive from his or her prospective constituents, not from some small but wealthy source whose headquarters and even membership may not be located in the candidates' State. This bill will help insure that while PAC's play their proper role in our elective process, their support and influence will not dominate to the point of excluding from our political process that collective body of individuals upon which our political system is based. When we, as the elected Representatives of the people in the various States, reflect upon whom we are indebted to for the esteemed position we hold, we should conjure up in our mind an image of our collective constituency, not a handful of wealthy and influential PAC's.

This bill does the following:

First. Limits to $75,000 the amount a House candidate can accept from all political action committees [PAC's] in each election cycle.

Second. Limits Senate candidates to an amount varying with the population of their State—with a low of $75,000 and a high of $500,000.

Third. Raises the PAC limit to $100,000 if two or more candidates qualify for the ballot in the primary and the general election.

Fourth. Allows for an additional $25,000 in PAC money in the event of a Senate or House runoff election.

Fifth. Increases from the current $1,000 to $2,500 the amount an individual can contribute to a congressional candidate in each election.●

By Mr. DECONCINI:

S. 298. A bill to clarify the application of the antitrust laws to professional team sports leagues, to protect the public interest in maintaining the stability of professional team sports leagues, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

SPORTS COMMUNITY PROTECTION AND STABILITY ACT

● Mr. DECONCINI. Mr. President, I am introducting today legislation to bring some order to the chaotic situation surrounding professional sports in this country. My approach to this problem is different from some of my colleagues in this body. Instead of insinuating Government into the affairs of these private business enterprises, I propose that we take Government out. Instead of trying to formulate a Government solution to sports problems, we should step back and let the businessmen involved solve them. Instead of Government regulating sports, we should create a legal climate in which sports can regulate itself.

The purpose of this legislation is to clearify congressional intent regarding the application of antitrust laws to certain types of major sports leagues practices and decisions. Those of us who have been involved in this legislation from the outset are primarily concerned about the impact of court decisions on communities that have or expect to have major sports league franchises. I have for the last two Congresses introduced legislation that would protect communities and fans from arbitrary and unilateral decisions by owners while simultaneously not affecting other sports antitrust issues such as labor-management relations and interleague competition.

The Sports Community Protection and Stability Act of 1985 will reform the application of our antitrust laws to professional sports in two very basic, limited, and specific ways. First, the right of sports leagues to maintain a team in its current home territory is recognized. It is important to note that this provision is a one-way street. It does not immunize from antitrust laws league decisions to relocate franchises. The bill only permits leagues to act to protect the interests of fans and their home-area communities.

Second, this legislation would confirm the right of sports leagues to provide for the division of league or club revenues in a manner that tends to reduce financial disparities among clubs. This provision would sanction practices that have made it feasible to establish and preserve professional football in small and midsize communities across the country.

I want to particularly point out that this legislation explicitly states that it does not apply to any labor-management or collective bargaining matter, to any pay television, or other broadcasting issue, or to any conduct with respect to a competing sports league. Additionally, the antitrust immunity currently applicable to professional baseball is not affected.

I am pleased to say that in past hearings on these issues, my legislation has enjoyed widespread support from this Nation's mayors. Among others, the mayors of San Francisco, Pittsburgh, Baltimore, Green Bay, and Phoenix have testified in support of my legislative approach.

It is understandable why these community leaders would favor bringing stability to the movement of sports franchises. Professional sports stadiums and arenas built or subsidized with public funds have become the norm for most teams. Communities throughout the Nation have reason to be concerned about their relationship with professional sports teams—and are anxious to insure that community interests are adequatley protected.

At the present time we have allowed a situation to evolve in which Federal district court judges are making decisions which should be reserved for the collective judgment of sports franchise owners. A judge has decided whether the National Football League should play its games in Oakland or Los Angeles. Another judge is deciding whether the National Basketball Association should have two teams in Los Angeles, or one in Los Angeles and one in San Diego. Still another judge is faced with the question whether the National Hockey League belongs in St. Louis, MO, or Saskatoon, SK. The leagues involved should be making these decisions. They have the expertise and experience, and they must live with the consequences of their decisions.

I am not a newcomer to this issue. I am not involved because of the most recent spate of franchise shifts or rumors of franchise shifts. I believe that bringing order to the jumbled mess that presently exists benefits everyone. Cities that have sports teams, and Phoenix is one of them, will benefit because decisions on franchise locations would be based on sound long-term business criteria. Cities that want teams, and Phoenix is one of those too, would benefit because a legal climate would be created wherein sports leagues would follow their best business judgments and expand to those deserving cities that could support teams. I have absolutely no doubt that if and when the National Football League believes it can expand and looks around for the city that would make the best addition to its league, Phoenix would be at the top of the list.

I want to make sure that when Phoenix gets a football team it will be able to keep it. I want to make sure that the Phoenix Suns NBA team stays in Phoenix. I believe that the best way to protect the interests of fans and communities is to let the collective business judgments of professional sports franchise owners determine the location of franchises and the distribution of league income.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Sports Community Protection and Stability Act of 1985 be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 298

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "Sports Community Protection and Stability Act of 1985".

FINDINGS AND DECLARATIONS

SEC. 2. The Congress finds and declares that the public has an interest in preserving stability in the relationship between professional sports teams and the communities in which they operate and in encouraging professional team sports leagues to promote the economic and geographic stability of their member clubs: Therefore, be it enacted, that—

(1) it shall not be unlawful by reason of any provision of the antitrust laws for a professional team sports league and its member clubs—

(a) to enforce rules or agreements authorizing the membership of the league to decide that a member club of such league shall not be relocated from its league-franchised home area provided that nothing in this subsection shall otherwise affect the applicability or nonapplicability of the antitrust laws to any action instituted by a municipality or other public authority challenging the relocation of a club from its league-franchised home area; or

(b) to enforce rules or agreements for the division of league or member club revenues that tend to promote comparable economic opportunities for the member clubs of such a league;

(2) subject to the terms of subsection 1(a) of this section, any civil action under the antitrust laws to challenge a league decision granting permission to a member club to relocate must be commenced in a United States district court having jurisdiction under title 28, United States Code, section 1331, except that no such action may be brought in any district wheren such member club is located or to which such member club proposes to relocate.

INAPPLICABILITY TO CERTAIN MATTERS

SEC. 3. Nothing contained in this Act shall—

(a) be deemed to change, determine, or otherwise affect the applicability or nonapplicability of the labor laws, the antitrust laws, or any other provision of law to the wages, hours, or other terms and conditions of player employment within any sports league, to any player employment matter within any sports league, or to any collective-bargaining rights and privileges of any player union within any sports league;

(b) exempt from the antitrust laws any agreement to fix the prices of admission to sports contests;

(c) exempt from the antitrust laws any predatory practice or other conduct with respect to competing sports leagues which would otherwise be unlawful under the antitrust laws; or

(d) modify any existing Federal statutes relating to the television practices of sports leagues, or change, determine, or otherwise affect the applicability or nonapplicability of the antitrust laws or communications laws to any form of joint dealing practices by sports leagues with respect to the sale of any form of television.

FEDERAL PREEMPTION

SEC. 4. Notwithstanding any other provision of law, no State or political subdivision thereof shall establish, maintain, or enforce any regulation of commerce that imposes any limitation on the collective conduct of professional team sports leagues or their member clubs authorized by this Act.

DEFINITIONS

SEC. 6. For purposes of this Act, the term "professional team sports league" means the organized professional team sports of basketball, football, hockey, or soccer.●

S.J. Res. 25. Joint resolution to designate March 16, 1985, as "Freedom of Information Day"; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

FREEDOM OF INFORMATION DAY

● Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, I am pleased to join my colleague Senator PROXMIRE in introducing a joint resolution designating March 16, 1985, as "Freedom of Information Day." March 16 is the anniversary of James Madison's birthday, and few Americans are more worthy of this recognition.

James Madison, our fourth President, was one of the framers of our Constitution. He is considered the architect of our Bill of Rights, yet his contribution to our democratic society are all too often overlooked. We frequently take for granted the free access to information Madison's efforts helped guarantee.

The first amendment reads:

Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech, or of the press; or the right of the people peaceably to assemble, and the petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

Our ancestors fought and died for those protections. They guarantee, among other things, that we have access to the information we need to effectively govern ourselves. By proclaiming Madison's birthday as "Freedom of Information Day," we will reaffirm the significance we attach to our most precious liberties. I urge all of my colleagues to join me in honoring Madison and the principles for which he stood.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of this joint resolution be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S.J. RES. 25

Whereas a fundamental principle of our Government is that a well-informed citizenry can reach the important decisions that determine the present and future of the Nation;

Whereas the freedoms we cherish as Americans are fostered by free access to information;

Whereas many Americans, because they have never known any other way of life, take for granted the guarantee of free access to information that derives from the first amendment to the Constitution of the United States;

Whereas the guarantee of free access to information should be emphasized and celebrated annually; and

Whereas March 16 is the anniversary of the birth of James Madison, one of the Founding Fathers, who recognized and supported the need to guarantee individual rights through the Bill of Rights: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That March 16, 1985, is designated as "Freedom of Information Day", and the President is authorized and requested to issue a proclamation calling upon Federal, State, and local government agencies and the people of the United States to observe such day with appropriate programs, ceremonies, and activities.●

By Mr. PRESSLER (for himself, Mr. HARKIN, Mr. DOMENICI, and Mr. ABDNOR):

S.J. Res. 26. Joint resolution to designate "National Farm Crisis Week"; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

NATIONAL FARM CRISIS WEEK

Mr. PRESSLER. Mr. President, today I am introducing a joint resolution designating the week of February 25, 1985, as "National Farm Crisis Week." Congressman VIN WEBER of Minnesota will be introducing a companion resolution in the House of Representatives today.

The intent of the resolution is to emphasize the plight of the American family farmer and draw attention to the need for action to assist family farmers. In recent years, farm income has declined, while high interest rates and declining farmland values have placed many farmers in severe financial difficulty. The problem has been highlighted by several recent farm meetings. For example, nearly 5,000 farmers gathered in Sioux City, IA, and another 12,000 assembled in St. Paul, MN.

However, the problems of the farm economy go well beyond the farm gate. Agriculture is our Nation's largest industry. Approximately one out of every five jobs in the private sector is related to agriculture. Thousands of small businesses are dependent on farmers and ranchers for their livelihood. With farm debt at over $200 billion, the financial institutions of our Nation have a great deal of interest in the farm economy. In fact, many agricultural lenders are also experiencing serious financial problems. It is clear that if farmers continue to go under, many others will not be far behind. Action is needed to assist these family farmers and help them get back on their feet.

This resolution is intended to draw attention to these problems and, hopefully, the agricultural community and Congress will also use this time in an effort to meet and try to create a unified plan for dealing with the farm crisis. In past years, the various farm organizations and commodity groups have had wide-ranging views on agricultural policy. Now, with less than 3 million Americans farming and that number continuing to decline, the agricultural community must speak with a united voice. All farmers and all Members of Congress must recognize the problems in the farm economy and work to find effective solutions that will preserve the family farm.

Mr. President, I urge my colleagues to join me in cosponsoring this resolution and also to work to formulate an effective farm policy that will bring the benefits of the recovery to rural America.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of this joint resolution be printed in full at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S.J. RES. 26

Whereas farm prices are at the lowest parity levels since the 1930s;

Whereas agriculture is America's largest industry, providing employment to approximately one out of every five Americans in private enterprise;

Whereas farm debt exceeds $200 billion and the number of farmers facing foreclosure or forced sales continues to increase;

Whereas the high interest rates have been devastating to farmers and ranchers because of their dependence on credit;

Whereas a failure of a large number of farmers and ranchers will have a great impact on rural communities and agricultural lenders; and

Whereas designation of a "National Farm Crisis Week" would emphasize the importance of American agriculture and the financial plight that American family farmers are facing: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the President is authorized and requested to designate the week of February 25, 1985, as "National Farm Crisis Week".

By Mr. HATCH:

S.J. Res. 27. Joint resolution to designate the week containing March 8, 1985, as "Women's History Week"; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

WOMEN'S HISTORY WEEK

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I would like to take this opportunity to introduce a resolution designating the week containing March 8, 1985, as "National Women's History Week." As I have for the last 3 years, I am proud to sponsor this legislation setting aside a time to reflect on the many contributions women have made throughout our history. We are all aware of and grateful for the wives and mothers in our lives, for the irreplaceable, priceless gifts of time and love and nurturing they have provided. We are all incalculably richer for the children they have borne, the homes they have created, the families they maintain. The homemaking profession is a labor of love requiring great, though often unrecognized sacrifice.

It is unfortunate, however, that many historical accounts tend to overlook other vital roles women have played. We do ourselves and out national community a disservice if we fail to recognize that, in addition to their traditional concerns as wives and mothers, women are leaders in medicine, law, arts, sciences, religion, business, academics, and social work. My children and grandchildren can look to their own great-grandmothers' lives for example and inspiration, just as they can reflect on the good works of their great-grandfathers; to overlook either would be to deny half of their heritage.

In taming the West, especially in my home State of Utah, women and men literally worked side-by-side to transform a desert into a civilization. In time of war, when we are called to defend our country, women take the lead in keeping struggling communities alive and prosperous. This leadership was not confined to home and hearth alone, and we must never fail to recognize and remember their countless contributions in the history of our Nation.

Again, I am proud to introduce this resolution. I encourage my colleagues to join me in cosponsoring this piece of legislation setting aside a time to reflect upon and commemorate the vital contributions women have made and are making to our Nation's History.

By Mr. BOSCHWITZ (for himself, Mr. HOLLINGS, Mr. THURMOND, Mr. DURENBERGER, Mr. NUNN, Mr. HELMS, Mr. SARBANES, Mr. TRIBLE, Mr. CHILES, Mr. SYMMS, Mr. SIMON, Mr. GORE, Mr. BOREN, Mr. COCHRAN, Mr. JOHNSTON, Mr. BAUCUS, Mr. HUMPHREY, Mr. DOMENICI, Mr. LUGAR, and Mr. KASTEN):

S.J. Res. 28. Joint resolution to designate the week of September 8 through 14, 1985, as "National Independent Retail Grocer Week"; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

NATIONAL INDEPENDENT RETAIL GROCER WEEK

● Mr. BOSCHWITZ. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce a joint resolution to pay tribute to the American independent retail grocer. All across the country, in the largest cities and the smallest towns independent retail grocers ensure the steady and uninterrupted flow of grocery products to the American consumer. These small business people raise the American free enterprise system to its highest levels, providing needed services to the communities in which they live and work.

Independent retail grocers account for 64 percent of all grocery stores in the United States and are responsible for nearly one-half of all grocery products distributed. They provide employment for over 1 million people. Independent retail grocery stores know no geographical or socioeconomic boundaries and are located throughout the United States.

The Independent retail grocer exemplifies the small business entrepreneur, the backbone of the American free enterprise system. Usually operating one store, independent grocers tailor their business to serve the community where they are located. Independent retail grocers deliver the highest quality product at the least expense—unsurpassed by any other food distribution network in the world.

Mr. President, I would like to express my appreciation to my distinguished cosponsors, Senators HOLLINGS, THURMOND, DURENBERGER, NUNN, HELMS, SARBANES, TRIBLE, CHILES, SYMMS, SIMON, GORE, BOREN, COCHRAN, JOHNSTON, BAUCUS, HUMPHREY, DOMENICI, LUGAR, and KASTEN for their support and I ask the rest of my colleagues to join us in honoring the American independent retail grocer by cosponsoring legislation I introduced today proclaiming September 8-14, as National Independent Retail Grocers Week.●

By Mr. GLENN (for himself, Mr. KENNEDY, Mr. MELCHER, Mr. METZENBAUM, Mr. ABDNOR, Mr. HEINZ, Mr. SARBANES, Mr. BRADLEY, Mr. THURMOND, Mr. BUMPERS, Mr. ROTH, Mr. NUNN, Mr. MOYNIHAN, Mr. HELMS, Mr. ANDREWS, Mr. HOLLINGS, Mr. JOHNSTON, Mrs. HAWKINS, Mr. INOUYE, Mr. CHILES, Mr. RIEGLE, Mr. MATSUNAGA, Mr. LUGAR, and Mr. DURENBERGER):

S.J. Res. 29. Joint resolution to designate the week of November 11, 1985, through November 17, 1985, as "National Reye's Syndrome Week"; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

NATIONAL REYE'S SYNDROME WEEK

● Mr. GLENN. Mr. President, today I am introducing a joint resolution calling for the declaration of November 11 through November 17, 1985, as National Reye's Syndrome Week. I am pleased to be joined by Senators KENNEDY, MELCHER, METZENBAUM, ABDNOR, HEINZ, SARBANES, BRADLEY, THURMOND, BUMPERS, ROTH, NUNN, MOYNIHAN, HELMS, ANDREWS, HOLLINGS, JOHNSTON, HAWKINS, INOUYE, CHILES, RIEGLE, MATSUNAGA, and DURENBERGER.

Reye's syndrome is a life-threatening disease which affects primarily healthy children under the age of 20, usually as they are recovering from a viral illness such as the flu or chicken pox. Approximately 25 percent of its victims do not survive. In fact, Reye's syndrome is now classified as one of the 10 major causes of death in children aged 1 to 10 in the United States. Those children who do survive are too often left with varying degrees of motor or learning disabilities due to brain damage.

While the cause of Reye's syndrome remains a mystery, promising research is underway at medical facilities throughout the country. We do know that early diagnosis and treatment of Reye's syndrome are critical for survival. Therefore, increased awareness to this disease has the very real potential to save lives.

Thanks in large part to the efforts of the National Reye's Syndrome Foundation, public and professional awareness of Reye's syndrome is expanding. Mr. and Mrs. John Freudenberger of Bryan, OH, founded this national foundation to promote research into the cause, treatment, cure, and prevention of Reye's syndrome; and to promote awareness among the public and the medical community of this tragic disease. The work of John and Terri Freudenberger and other concerned citizens is paying dividends as more cases are being detected and treated earlier, and the death rate is declining.

Currently, much media attention is being focused upon the preliminary findings of a recently released study by the centers for disease control. This study provides strong evidence that giving aspirin to a child with the flu or chicken pox could increase the probability, by 12 to 25 times, that the child could develop Reye's syndrome. The establishment of this link is important and, in light of these findings, the Federal Government has requested aspirin manufacturers to develop warning labels. However, it should be stressed that these findings are preliminary and although aspirin may very well contribute to the development of Reye's syndrome, it is not necessarily the cause of the disease. We still do not know how or why Reye's syndrome occurs, nor do we have a cure for it.

At this time, the most valuable tool we have in the fight against Reye's syndrome is shared knowledge. It is my hope that the activities of National Reye's Syndrome Week will generate greater awareness, and I urge prompt approval of this resolution.●

● Mr. ABDNOR. Mr. President, I am pleased to join the distinguished Senator from Ohio, Mr. GLENN, in sponsoring this joint resolution to designate the week of November 11-17, 1985, as "National Reye's Syndrome Week."

Reye's syndrome is a devastating disease. It strikes children of all ages, 30 percent of whom do not survive. Many other children stricken with this disease develop motor or learning disabilities.

Mr. President, early detection and treatment of Reye's syndrome is vital. Thus, by promoting greater public awareness and understanding of this serious disease, we may save more young lives.

As a member of the Senate Children's Caucus, I am particularly pleased to lend my support to this important initiative. I strongly urge my colleagues to help combat this life-threatening disease by joining Senator GLENN and me in calling for the designation of the week of November 11-17, 1985, as "National Reye's Syndrome Week."●

By Mr. BOREN (for himself and Mr. BURDICK):

S.J. Res. 30. Joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States to establish a 10-year term of office for Federal judges; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT PROPOSING A TEN-YEAR TERM OF OFFICE FOR FEDERAL JUDGES

● Mr. BOREN. Mr. President, I am again introducing a Senate joint resolution that would eliminate life tenure for Federal judges and limit their terms of office. The constitutional amendment proposed by the resolution would apply to judges of both the Supreme Court and inferior courts.

There is no clearer illustration of the adage that absolute power corrupts absolutely than the use of excessive power by some Federal judges. It is too much to expect a human being to restrain his own power when he has that power for life and is accountable to no one. We must strike a balance between the necessary independence of the judiciary from political pressures and the need to hold judges accountable for the proper performance of their duties. This legislation will strike the proper balance.

Under this resolution, the Constitution would be amended to limit the tenure of Federal judges, who are appointed by the President, subject to reconfirmation by the Senate.

Currently, the only method for removal established by the Constitution is impeachment. Unless a Federal judge has committed a crime or some clearly impeachable offense, he cannot be removed. No Federal judge has been removed by impeachment for nearly 45 years.

A term of 10 years is long enough to protect the judge against daily political pressure so that justice will be impartial and fair. A good judge could be reappointed. However, this legislation would mean that the people would not be saddled with a bad judge for life. Even persons who are very good judges when appointed may suffer physical or emotional changes over the years which would make them unfit for reappointment. While the majority of Federal judges serve with distinction and a proper respect for the law, there must be a practical check on those who do not. Even while the Constitution was being drafted, leading scholars of the day objected to its life tenure provisions, and revisions of this section of the Constitution have been considered on several occasions since that time.

Some Federal judges today tend to feel that they constitute a super legislature. They tend to act as if they were annointed instead of appointed. They freely legislate social issues and clearly preempt the Congress and the executive branch. The Federal courts have the legitimate right and the duty to protect the individual citizen against the unconstitutional acts by the other branches of Government. However, the Federal judiciary has become the branch of Government which has assumed authority to revise the Constitution without admitting that it is doing so.

Clearly, the Constitution leaves legislating to the Congress and State legislatures, and establishes definite provisions for amending the Constitution which give the people a say in the amendment process. While the courts should legitimately interpret the Constitution, too often the process turns into a practical amendment of the Constitution by the arbitrary whim of some Federal judge who serves for life.

Mr. President, my bill calls for an amendment to the U.S. Constitution, which would require ratification by the legislatures of three-fourths of the States within 7 years after the amendment is approved by Congress. It amends article III of the Constitution to state that the term of office of each Federal judge shall be 10 years and will begin at noon on the day after the President has commissioned the judge. The amendment would take effect immediately upon ratification, but would not be retroactive and would not apply to Federal judges serving prior to its ratification. It would apply only to persons appointed to a Federal judgeship after ratification of the amendment.

Mr. President, I have introduced similar legislation in the past. I know that the fight to change the tenure system may be a long one. This issue has been debated since Thomas Jefferson argued against lifetime appointments for Federal judges. I am firmly convinced that this cause is well worth the effort and commitment which may be necessary to see it through to a satisfactory conclusion.

I urge my colleagues to join me in supporting passage of this joint resolution. I ask unanimous consent that a copy of the bill be included in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S.J. RES. 30

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the following article is proposed as an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which shall be valid to all intents and purposes as part of the Constitution when ratified by the legislatures of three-fourths of the several States within seven years after the date of its submission by the Congress:

ARTICLE —

"SECTION 1. Notwithstanding the provisions of the second sentence of section 1 of Article III of the Constitution of the United States, the judges, both of the Supreme Court and inferior courts, shall be appointed to their offices for a term of ten years and shall hold their offices for such term during good behavior. The term of office of each judge shall begin at noon on the day after the day on which the President commissions such judge. During the tenth year of each term of office of any such judge, his nomination for an additional term of office for that judgeship shall be placed before the Senate for its advice and consent to such additional term, unless that judge requests that his nomination not be so placed. Any judge whose nomination for an additional term of office is so placed may remain in office until the Senate gives its advice and consent to, or rejects, such nomination. If the Senate gives its advice and consent to an additional term of office, that term shall commence from the date of such advice and consent, or the day immediately following the last day of his previous term of office, whichever is later.

"SECTION 2. Section 1 of this article shall take effect on the date of ratification of this article, but shall apply only with respect to any person appointed as a judge of the Supreme Court or as a judge of an inferior court after such date of ratification.".●

SENATE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION 7—SEEKING A 6-MONTH BAN ON THE TESTING OF NUCLEAR WARHEADS

Mr. PROXMIRE submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

S. CON. RES. 7

Whereas the nuclear arms race between the United States and the Soviet Union is getting dangerously out of control;

Whereas a comprehensive ban on the testing of nuclear warheads would be an important first step in achieving a verifiable United States-Soviet freeze on the nuclear arms race;

Whereas every American President from Dwight Eisenhower on has supported negotiations toward a comprehensive test ban;

Whereas the United States and the Soviet Union pledged in the Limited Nuclear Test Ban Treaty of 1963 "to achieve the discontinuance of all test explosions of nuclear weapons for all time";

Whereas the United States and the Soviet Union pledged in the Threshold Test Ban Treaty of 1974 to "continue their negotiations with a view toward achieving a solution to the problem of the cessation of all underground nuclear weapon tests";

Whereas the United States and the Soviet Union pledged in the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons of 1968 to "pursue negotiations in good faith on effective measures relating to cessation of the nuclear arms race at an early date" and a comprehensive nuclear test ban would aid efforts to halt the spread of nuclear weapons;

Whereas the United States signed the Threshold Test Ban Treaty in 1974 and the Peaceful Nuclear Explosions Treaty in 1976, but has yet to ratify these important treaties;

Whereas ratification of the Threshold Test Ban Treaty and the Peaceful Nuclear Explosions Treaty would greatly aid in the negotiation, verification, and implementation of a comprehensive nuclear test ban;

Whereas President Kennedy on June 10, 1963 challenged the Soviet Union to a test ban and announced a United States moratorium on nuclear tests, and on August 5, 1963 the United States and the Soviet Union signed the Limited Nuclear Test Ban Treaty;

Whereas substantial progress has already been made in previous negotiations toward a comprehensive nuclear test ban so that the conclusion of such a treaty could be quickly achieved;

Whereas a bold initiative is now needed by the United States to achieve a mutual and verifiable halt to the testing of nuclear warheads; and

Whereas a six-month United States-Soviet moratorium on the testing of nuclear warheads would provide the United States and the Soviet Union an opportunity to negotiate a comprehensive nuclear test ban and would aid those negotiations: Now, therefore, be it,

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That it is the sense of the Congress that the President should—

(1) immediately seek a six-month verifiable moratorium with the Government of the Soviet Union on the testing of nuclear explosive devices;

(2) utilize the six-month moratorium period to negotiate a verifiable comprehensive nuclear test ban with the Government of the Soviet Union; and

(3) request the advice and consent of the Senate to the ratification of the Threshold Test Ban Treaty of 1974 and the Peaceful Nuclear Explosions Treaty of 1976 in order to aid in the negotiation, verification, and implementation of a comprehensive nuclear test ban treaty.

SEC. 2. The Secretary of the Senate shall transmit a copy of this concurrent resolution to the President.

SENATE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION 8—REVISING THE CONGRESSIONAL BUDGET FOR THE FISCAL YEARS 1985, 1986, AND 1987

Mr. GRASSLEY (for himself, Mrs. KASSEBAUM, Mr. BIDEN, Mr. BAUCUS, Mr. MELCHER, and Mr. MATTINGLY) submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was referred to the Committee on the Budget:

S. CON. RES. 8

RECONCILIATION

SEC. 6. Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Congress hereby determines and declares pursuant to sections 304, and 301(b)(2) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974, that: It is necessary to make changes in enacted laws in order to reduce outlays by $1 billion in fiscal year 1985, and budget authority in fiscal year 1985 by an amount sufficient to achieve such outlay reduction; and to reduce outlays by $35 billion in fiscal year 1986, and budget authority by an amount sufficient to achieve such outlay reduction in fiscal year 1986.

● Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, the purpose of this resolution is to serve as the basis for Senate action to reduce the fiscal year 1986 budget deficit by freezing the Federal budget across-the-board. For the last several years the national debt has been growing faster than the gross national product. This growth, which is the direct consequence of the unprecedented magnitude of recent budget deficits, places an increasingly unfair burden on future generations.

Moreover, since the deficits divert scarce resources from productive employment in the private sector, since it hurts our international competitiveness, and since it makes our government more dependent on foreign funds for public finance, the deficits threaten to constrain long-term growth.

It has become clear that Congress will not achieve dramatic deficit reduction, to the extent necessary, unless special interest pressures have been disarmed. Disarming these pressures will occur if and only if an environment of shared sacrifice is established. This means all programs must be dealt with in the same evenhanded way. Without this approach, substantial deficit reduction is unlikely to occur. This is the lesson history has taught us—a lesson hopefully we will not learn too late.●

SENATE RESOLUTION 48—REFERRING S. 273 TO THE CHIEF JUDGE OF THE U.S. COURT OF CLAIMS FOR A REPORT

Mrs. KASSEBAUM submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

S. RES. 48

That S. 273 entitled "A bill for the relief of Mildred C. Eide of Leavenworth, Kansas" now pending in the Senate, together with all accompanying papers, is referred to the chief judge of the United States Claims Court. The chief judge shall proceed according to the provisions of sections 1492 and 2509 of title 28, United States Code, and report back to the Senate, at the earliest practicable date, giving such findings of fact and conclusions that are sufficient to inform the Congress of the nature and character of the demand as a legal or equitable claim against the United States or a gratuity, and the amount, if any, legally or equitably due from the United States to the claimant.

SENATE RESOLUTION 49—DIRECTING REPRESENTATION BY THE SENATE LEGAL COUNSEL

Mr. DOLE (for himself and Mr. BYRD) submitted the following resolution; which was considered and agreed to:

SENATE RESOLUTION 49

Whereas, the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs wishes to file an application in the United States District Court for the District of Columbian for a writ of habeas corpus ad testificandum to federal authorities to bring Luis Hector Neira, a witness who is in the custody of federal correctional authorities in Florida, to New York, New York, for questioning by the Committee at hearings to be held there;

Whereas, pursuant to section 708(c) of the Ethics in Government Act of 1978, 2 U.S.C. 288g(c) (1982), the Senate may direct the Senate Legal Counsel to perform such duties consistent with the purposes and limitations of title VII of the Ethics in Government Act of 1978 as the Senate may direct: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Senate Legal Counsel is directed to represent the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs in its application for a writ of habeas corpus ad testificandum to obtain the presence of Luis Hector Neira at a hearing of the Committee.

SENATE RESOLUTION 50—RELATING TO THE JOB CORPS PROGRAM

Mr. CRANSTON submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Labor and Human Resources;

S. RES. 50

Whereas the problems of youth unemployment, particularly for young men and women who are economically disadvantaged, continue to be significant as demonstrated by the 18.4-percent rate of unemployment in the fourth quarter of 1984 for individuals ages 16 through 19; and

Whereas the Job Corps is entering its third decade of operation of providing job-training opportunities and support services to assist disadvantaged youths in becoming more responsible, employable, and productive citizens; and

Whereas more than 1.2 million economically-disadvantaged youths have participated in the program since its inception and have benefited from the services and opportunities provided by the program; and

Whereas a 1982 independent evaluation of the post-program experience of enrollees demonstrates that the program is effective and that its benefits exceed its costs; and

Whereas, in program year 1983-84, the Job Corps experienced a positive termination rate of nearly 80 percent and placed 68 percent of its graduates in unsubsidized jobs; and

Whereas a significant reduction in the opportunities provided through this program would deny to thousands of disadvantaged youths access to a proven successful means of pursuing a productive life and increase the already intolerably high rate of youth unemployment: Now, therefore be it

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate that the Job Corps program has been a cost-effective and successful effort to assist disadvantaged young men and women in obtaining and holding employment, that the Senate's commitment to the program is reaffirmed, and that no significant reduction in the level of the program should be made.

JOB CORPS FUNDING

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, I am submitting today Senate Resolution 50, a resolution expressing the sense of the Senate that the Job Corps Program has been a cost-effective and successful effort to assist disadvantaged young men and women in obtaining and holding employment, that the Senate's commitment to the program is reaffirmed, and that no significant reduction in the level of the program should be made.

The problems of unemployment among young Americans are not recent. They are deeply entrenched in our labor force and have proved to be largely resistant to most attempts to resolve them. Despite all of the efforts of Federal, State, and local government to alleviate the problems, the high rates of unemployment for young men and women, ages 16 through 19, continue. In the fourth quarter of 1984, despite the substantial improvements in the national unemployment rate from a year ago, the rate for young Americans stood at 18.4 percent. Among those who are member of a minority group, the rate was a disastrous 41.1 percent. Nearly 1.5 million young people who were actively seeking work during the fourth quarter were unable to obtain jobs.

And the consequences of being unable to find productive employment—even at this stage in life—can be just as devastating as they are for other Americans. Many young people may need to find a job in order to supplement the family income or, indeed, to support their own families. The financial benefits of a job may be needed to help stay in school. The psychological aspects of not being able to find work, of having been defeated at the very outset of labor-force experience, the frustration of not being able to get a job without experience and not being able to get that experience, can have life-long implications.

Since 1964, Mr. President, one program has been in existence specifically designed to address the needs of some of the more difficult-to-resolve problems among disadvantaged youth. That program, first established by the Economic Opportunity Act of 1964, still exists today: it is the Job Corps.

Now entering its third decade of operation, the Job Corps has served more than 1.2 million economically disadvantaged young men and women, ages 16 through 21, and has helped them become more responsible, employable, and productive citizens. The Job Corps Program consists of two principal components—basic education and vocational skills training. To be eligible to participate, a youth must be out of work and out of school and in need of additional education, vocational training, counseling, and other services to help him or her obtain employment, return to school, qualify for other training programs, or enlist in the Armed Forces. A unique aspect of Job Corps training is the residential living component, although nonresidential programs are also offered in some areas.

The success of the Job Corps program is demonstrated by the high positive termination rate enjoyed by the program. The term "positive termination rate" is a measure of individuals who have terminated their participation in the program in a positive manner—that is, for example, they have returned to school, found employment, or entered the military. For the most recent program year, 1983-84, the Job Corps Program experienced a positive termination rate of nearly 80 percent. Importantly, in that year more than 68 percent of Job Corps graduates were placed in unsubsidized jobs upon the completion of their training.

Furthermore, a September 1982 report, entitled "Evaluation of the Economic Impact of the Job Corps Program," prepared for the Department of Labor by Mathematica Policy Research, Inc., found that the program is not only effective at what it is trying to do, but that the benefits of the program exceed its costs. The report and its findings are based on the post-program behavior of Job Corps graduates and what their behavior would have been had they not participated in the Job Corps.

Mr. President, I intend to ask unanimous consent that a summary of the report's findings be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks. However, at this time, I wanted in particular to call to my colleagues' attention the finding that the Job Corps Program is "a worthwhile public investment" and that the "Job Corps is an economically efficient use of public resources in the sense that the program provides greater value to society than the value of the resources it uses up."

In this connection and against the successful track record of the program, I have read with great concern reports of the Reagan administration's plan for a 20-percent reduction in fiscal year 1986 and then total elimination of this valuable program. According to press reports, the program would be reduced by $120 million in fiscal year 1986 from its current, fiscal year 1985 level of $617 million which is expected to support 40,544 slots.

This, Mr. President, would deny what I believe to be a valuable and proven successful means of pursuing a productive life to hundreds of thousands of young men and women. Since the average length of enrollment in the program is 6 months, more than 16,200 disadvantaged youths would be deprived of this opportunity in fiscal year 1986 and at least 81,000 every year thereafter, and the major consequence would be increases in youth unemployment and the abandoning of those young lives at a most critical point.

Against the background of unacceptably high unemployment among youths, especially minority youths, it is nonsensical to eliminate the one program proven effective in dealing with hard-core youth unemployment. Yet that is what this administration apparently intends to propose.

Mr. President, my familiarity with and support for the Job Corps is not new. Indeed, when I first came to the Senate in 1969, my "maiden" speech and first floor fight were in connection with President Nixon's attempt to dismantle the Job Corps and the resolution I introduced—Senate Resolution 194 in the 91st Congress—to express the sense of the Senate that President Nixon's proposal to reduce the Job Corps Program significantly should not be implemented without congressional approval.

Although the battle on the resolution itself was lost by a vote of 40 to 52 on May 13, 1969, and certain reductions did occur, the ultimate goal of the Nixon administration—to incorporate the Job Corps into a decentralized comprehensive manpower system—was not achieved. Despite the fact that the Comprehensive Employment and Training Act of 1973 consolidated and absorbed many previously categorical employment and training programs authorized by the Economic Opportunity Act and the Manpower Development and Training Act, the Job Corps has remained a separate and distinct nationally administered program—first under the CETA authority and today under the authority of the Job Training Partnership Act.

Thus, Mr. President, the resolution I am submitting today expresses the sense of the Senate that the program has been a cost-effective and successful effort and that it is an effort that should be continued. It would reaffirm the Senate's commitment to the program and express our view that no significant reduction in the level of the program should be made. I urge my colleagues to join with me in this initiative and help protect this proven, effective, and cost-effective means of assisting our Nation's greatest resource—our youth.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the summary of findings to which I earlier referred be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the report was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

PROJECT REPORT: EVALUATION OF THE ECONOMIC IMPACT OF THE JOB CORPS PROGRAM

(Third follow-up report, September 1982)

(Prepared for: Office of Policy Evaluation and Research, Employment and Training Administration, U.S. Department of Labor, Washington, D.C. 20213)

(Prepared by: Mathematica Policy Research, Inc., P.O. Box 2393, Princeton, New Jersey 08540)

SUMMARY OF FINDINGS

1. The estimated effects of Job Corps on former participants' postprogram behavior are generally consistent with hypothesized economic impacts and the important program goal of improving Corpsmembers' economic prospects. During the first four postprogram years, we find that Job Corps is at least moderately successful overall in achieving its desired effects: (1) increasing employment and earnings, (2) improving future labor-market opportunities through work experience, military service, higher education and training, better health, and geographic mobility, (3) reducing dependence on welfare assistance and other public transfers, and (4) reducing criminality.

2. In terms of size and statistical significance, some of the most noteworthy effects of Job Corps on the behavior of former participants are (on a per-Corpsmember basis, including military jobs, and averaged over the four-year observation period, see further in Table 1):

An increase in employment of over three weeks per year;

An increase in earnings of approximately $665 per year and over a 15 percent increase (controlling for nonlinear time trends)

A very substantial increase in the probability of having a high school diploma or equivalent degree (a fivefold increase)

Higher college attendance

A decrease in high school attendance associated with the effects of high school degrees obtained in Job Corps

Better health, with a reduction in serious health problems of an average of over one week per year

A reduction in the receipt of financial welfare assistance, amounting to an average of over two weeks per year, and

A reduction in the receipt of Unemployment Insurance of nearly one week per year.

The crime effects (not shown in Table 1) are erratic over the postprogram period and, in aggregate over the entire period, show no effect on arrests; however, there is a significant shift from more to less serious crimes.

3. The positive, overall impacts generally persist throughout the four years of postprogram observation. The trend over the four-year postprogram observation period (see Figures 1 and 2, and Table 1) appears to be an increase in program benefits during the first few months (especially for employment and earnings during the transition from center life to re-entering the regular labor market), and then relatively stable effects throughout the rest of the four-year period.

4. We believe that the most prudent conclusion about the longevity of the Jobs Corps effects is that the effects persist at a relatively stable rate from approximately three months after termination until the end of the four-year observation period; beyond that point, our ability to extrapolate is very limited. The evidence is mixed as to whether the program effects were growing or shrinking toward the end of the observation period. When only civilian jobs are considered and a simple linear time trend is assumed for the economy, the empirical estimates show a substantial shrinkage of the employment and earnings effects for the fourth postprogram year. However, when military jobs are included (as we believe they should be) and better account is taken of the time trends in the economy, the employment effects are relatively constant for the fourth postprogram year (see row 4 in Table 1, and Figure 2), and the earnings effects show a sizable (21 percent) growth (see row 8 in Table 1). Furthermore, for males—the largest group of Corpsmembers (70 percent of all Corpsmembers)—we have adequate observations to extend our analysis further, from 48 to 51 postprogram months (as in Figures 1 and 2); we find a significant upturn in the estimated effects for males for both employment and earnings during that time period. (Through month 48, the estimated effects for females without children are similar on average to males, but are more erratic; the estimated effects for females with children, the smallest group, are much lower and more erratic than for males.)

5. Differential impacts among Corpsmembers are found to be associated with sex and child responsibility. We find relatively larger impacts on males for the probability of being in military service (more than doubled by the end of the observation period) and the receipt of Unemployment Insurance, while relatively larger impacts on females who have no children present are found for education, health, and the receipt of welfare. The estimated Job Corps impacts on females who have children living with them are generally much less positive than for either males or females without children. This latter finding can possibly be attributed to delays in childbirth among Corpswomen, such that those who have children living with them some time during the observation period are more likely to have been temporarily faced with labor-market constraints from pregnancy (which also increases their reporting of health problems) and from having very young children during the period of postprogram observation.

6. We also find differential program impacts among categories of program completion. A substantial, positive correlation exists between the estimated Job Corps impacts and the proportion of the Job Corps program completed. Program completers consistently benefit the most, particularly in terms of employment, earnings, and welfare dependence. The impact estimates for youths who complete the program are generally more than twice the overall program average. In contrast, early program dropouts appear to benefit little or not at all. Furthermore, these differential impacts by completion category seem to be at least partially attributable to the effect of staying in the program longer and completing the program, which indicates the potential for additional benefits to the program from increased lengths of stay and greater numbers of completions.

7. In examining the sensitivity of our findings to alternative econometric specifications, we find that (1) adding controls for differences in marital status (even preenrollment values) makes the estimates consistently more favorable for Job Corps among all three major sex and family-responsibility groups (males, females without children, and females with children), (2) adding controls for differences in the age composition of children makes the findings much more positive for females with children, (3) accounting for Job Corps effects on fertility and childbearing increases the estimated benefits to females, and (4) not controlling for any differences between the Job Corps and comparison groups makes the findings much less favorable for males and much more favorable for females with children, and changes the findings only slightly for females without children.

8. The findings summarized in Table 2 from a comprehensive evaluation of the social benefits and costs of the Job Corps program suggest that the program is a worthwhile public investment. Our benchmark estimate is that in 1977 social benefits exceed costs by over $2,300 per Corpsmember (nearly $3,500 in 1982 dollars), or, equivalently, by approximately 45 percent of costs. Thus, Job Corps is an economically efficient use of public resources in the sense that the program provides greater value to society than the value of the resources it uses up. Because over 40,000 youths enrolled in Job Corps during fiscal 1977, our benchmark estimate of the net social benefit for the entire program exceeds $90-million for that year.

9. The information obtained from organizing all of the estimated program effects into a systematic comparison of the benefits and costs is much more powerful than can be summarized by a few aggregate numbers on the economic efficiency to society. Therefore, we have been careful to provide adequate detail in the report to ensure that informed policymakers can form their own judgments and value the estimated effects in alternative ways. However, under a wide range of alternative assumptions, estimated effects, and values, we find that the program is economically efficient without including the unmeasured benefits shown in Table 1.

10. Over 50 percent of the estimated social benefits are derived from increases in the value of output produced by Corpsmembers. Another 40 percent of the social benefits are attributable to reductions in criminal activities among Corpsmembers, particularly murder, robbery, and larceny (including very large reductions during the program).

11. In assessing the distribution of benefits and costs, we find a net transfer from non-Corpsmembers as a group (everyone in society other than Corpsmembers) to Corpsmembers. The primary economic benefits to Corpsmembers are derived from increased earnings (approximately 70 percent of the benefits) and transfers they receive while in Job Corps. The primary economic benefits to non-Corpsmembers are derived from reductions in Corpsmembers' criminal activities, Corpsmembers' reduced use of transfer programs, and increased tax payments.

12. The estimated timing of benefits suggests that the average social investment per Corpsmember is paid back in approximately three years. Counting only the estimated benefits for the observation period (the first four postprogram years), Job Corps has an internal rate of return of approximately 18 percent (i.e., under the assumption that no further benefits occur after that point).

13. Alternative benefit-cost estimates are made for a wide range of assumptions. A sensitivity analysis based on this range of alternatives generally conforms that Job Corps is an economically efficient program. As long as displacement in the labor markets that Corpsmembers enter is not severe and the observed crime reductions are minimally valued, Job Corps is estimated to be an economically efficient investment.

14. The benefit-cost findings based on the additional data from the third follow-up survey are very close to those estimated in the Second Follow-Up Report: the social net present value estimates are now higher but by less than 3 percent. However, because benefits are now estimated to exceed costs without extrapolating benefits into the future, we feel that more confidence can now be placed in the overall finding that Job Corps is an economically efficient investment.

AMENDMENTS SUBMITTED

GROVE CITY LEGISLATION

HATCH AMENDMENTS NOS. 8 AND 9

(Ordered referred to the Committee on Labor and Human Resources.)

Mr. HATCH submitted two amendments intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 272) to clarify the meaning of the phrase "program or activity" as applied to educational institutions that are extended Federal financial assistance, and for other purposes; as follows:

AMENDMENT No. 8

At the appropriate place, add the following new provision:

"Provided, however, That no institution of higher education shall be deemed a 'recipient' where the only Federal financial assistance extended consists of grants received directly by students in attendance at such institutions under 20 U.S.C. 1070a (Basic Educational Opportunity Grant Program, ADS); or 38 U.S.C. 1681 (Veteran's Educational Assistance Program). This exclusion shall not apply to proprietary institutions of higher education; vocational schools; any school not entitled to tax exempt status under 26 U.S.C. 501(c)(3); or to any school which, during the five years preceding has been finally adjudged by any court of the United States to have discriminated in violation of any provision of the Constitution or law of the United States relating to civil rights.".

AMENDMENT No. 9

At the appropriate place, add the following new provision:

Subsection 901(a)(3) is amended by striking everything following "educational institution which is" and inserting in lieu thereof the following: ", in whole or substantial part, owned, supported, controlled, or managed by a particular religion or by a particular religious corporation, or society, or in which the curriculum is directed toward the propagation of a particular religion if the application of this subsection would not be consistent with the tenets of such".

AUTHORITY FOR COMMITTEES TO MEET

COMMITTEE ON ARMED SERVICES

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Armed Services be authorized to meet during the session of the Senate on Thursday, January 24, to meet in executive session to hold a hearing on NATO cooperative efforts, with members of the North Atlantic Assembly.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

NOTICES OF HEARINGS

COMMITTEE ON ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

Mr. McCLURE. Mr. President, I would like to announce for the information of the Senate and the public the scheduling of public hearings before the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

On Thursday, January 31, beginning at 9:30 a.m., in room SD-366 of the Dirksen Senate Office Building, the committee will consider the nominations of John S. Herrington, of California, to be Secretary of Energy.

On Friday, February 1, beginning at 9 a.m., in room SD-366 of the Dirksen Senate Office Building, the committee will consider the nomination of Donald P. Hodel, of Virginia, to be Secretary of the Interior.

Those wishing to testify or to submit written statements for the hearing record should write to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC 20510.

For further information regarding these hearings, you may wish to contact David Doane or Nora Melnick at 224-5305, regarding the nomination of Mr. Herrington; Jim Beirne or Becky Barbour at 224-2564, regarding the nomination of Mr. Hodel.

ADDITIONAL STATEMENTS

NATIONAL CONSENSUS ON AMERICAN FOREIGN POLICY

● Mr. BOSCHWITZ. Mr. President, I am convinced there now exists a rare opportunity, and a rapidly increasing need, to seek a national consensus on American foreign policy. The President's sweeping election victory provides an excellent opportunity in the second term for us to formulate a bipartisan approach on a wide range of foreign policy and defense issues, perhaps the most important being the arms control process.

I recommend to my colleagues two recent articles by Dr. Henry A. Kissinger. His thoroughly insightful analyses concerning the significance of a national consensus for U.S. foreign policy, and the dynamics of the arms control talks, are very timely, especially for those of us on the Foreign Relations Committee, who begin this month to conduct a full review of U.S. foreign policy and start the search for this consensus. Accordingly, I ask that the two articles which appeared in the Washington Post be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

The articles follow.

RONALD REAGAN'S GREAT OPPORTUNITY

President Reagan's landslide victory coincides with a period of extraordinary opportunity in American foreign policy. Difficulties, even crises, continue, of course: East-West relations, the Latin American debt problem, the Middle East all demand our attention. But a farsighted American foreign policy is in a position to improve each trouble spot substantially.

The president's greatest opportunity goes far beyond the solution of any particular issue. Destiny and his own achievements have placed him in a position to restore for the first time in a decade and a half a national consensus on the nature and aims of our foreign policy. For too long, presidential elections have led to "reassessments" of American foreign policy; reversals of our positions have made America a factor of uncertainty in international affairs. The almost universal preference abroad for President Reagan's reelection reflected in large part the desire to avoid the nightmare of yet another new administration's pulling up all the trees to see whether the roots were still there.

The disintegration of the national consensus on foreign policy is often ascribed to the Vietnam war and Watergate. These events were surely traumatic. But I doubt that they were seminal. The key event was the collapse in the late '60s of the premises in which our postwar foreign policy had been based. That process may have been speeded and exacerbated by Vietnam, but it would surely have happened without it.

When America ended its isolation after World War II, an atomic monopoly gave America a margin of security unprecedented in history. As late as 1950 the United States produced 52 percent of all the world's goods and services. America by itself represented the global balance of power. American alliances were in effect unilateral guarantees; recognized problems could be overwhelmed with resources.

By the late '60s these conditions were disappearing. Nuclear parity was upon us. As Europe and Japan recovered and other nations industrialized, America's percentage of the world's total gross national product was declining. By 1970 we produced about 30 percent of the world's goods and services; today the figure is around 22 percent.

Henceforth we would have to live in a world of relative security, capable of reducing dangers but unable to banish them. We continue to possess resources larger than any other nation. But America is no longer able to handle all possible challenges simultaneously or alone. Foreign policy for us has become what it has always been for less favored nations—a balancing of risks.

The America of the '60s and '70s was not emotionally prepared for the fundamental transformation from absolute dominance to relative strength. The deepest significance of Reagan's second term is that it has liberated us to undertake, in a climate of conciliation, a long-overdue reassessment of the basic assumptions of our foreign policy.

For example, in the recent campaign both parties seemed to agree on a definition of peace as a kind of terminal state in which nations live with a consciousness of harmony and the need for further effort disappears. The difference was that the Democratic Party often talked as if that blissful state were attainable through strenuous negotiating unrelated to power, while Republicans tended to imply that power would supply an automatic route to the millennium.

Unfortunately, neither conception corresponds to the reality that in our time peace is a process, not a condition. There are no final "happy endings." Whatever they may agree on, the United States and the Soviet Union will remain superpowers impinging on each other globally. Ideological hostility will continue. Specific, precise arrangements can, indeed must, be made. But they are more likely to ameliorate tensions than to end them. An apocalyptic notion of peace risks turning diplomacy into a form of psychiatry and the American domestic discourse into competitive masochism that seeks all fault on our side.

When in the recent debate both candidates were asked to describe the regions they considered vital to American security, they wallowed in superficialities. And this was no accident. Historically the notion of vital interest has implied that a nation resists an infringement of such an interest no matter how it happens. Britain for three centuries left no doubt that it would fight to prevent the port of Antwerp from falling into the hands of a major power because command of the seas depended on it.

Does the United States have such vital interests? Further, does our domestic consensus permit such a concept? With respect to the first question, certainly so. With regard to the second question, much less clearly so. We tend as a people to edge up to but never fully to decide that the concept has applicability to us. In the Cuban missile crisis, for example, we ended up by transforming a specific issue into a legal formula that in the end facilitated the Soviet military buildup of Cuba. Nuclear weapons and delivery vehicles were proscribed; in the end everything not specifically prohibited was tolerated. Thus, Cuba turned into the second-largest military power in the Western hemisphere; Cuban expeditionary forces appeared in distant continents without serious challenge from the United States. The same process seems to be repeating itself in Nicaragua with respect to MiG21s. It is of course possible to argue that no possible change in Central America can affect an American vital interest. But if not in Central America, then where? And if so, at what point do we resist and by what means?

Only a nation convinced of its invulnerability could afford the philanthropic view that no such answers are needed. Recent elections show that most Americans prefer a more assertive approach. But they have not faced its implication, which is a clear articulation of what we shall defend or what we shall seek to achieve and with what means.

This is because America has traditionally been much more comfortable defining its security interests in legal rather than in geopolitical or strategic terms. We never quite seem to make up our minds whether we resist the fact of change or the way it comes about. Much of our domestic debate implies that in case of aggression the first person a president should call is his lawyer.

The fact is that obligations reflect interest; they do not create them. Nor is it always possible to embody all our national interests in legally binding form. For example, in case of all-out Soviet attack on China, the United States would have to consider the impact on the global balance of the military defeat of the world's most populous nation and not simply or even primarily the diplomatic record.

No charge recurs more frequently in our political debate than the cliché that a problem should be resolved by diplomacy rather than by power. But the idea that power and diplomacy are separable and discrete falsifies the essence of each. Power without purpose leads to posturing; diplomacy without power exhausts itself in rhetoric.

When Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei A. Gromyko visited President Reagan, there was much speculation about the personal interaction of the two leaders and the chances of a breakthrough. Since these are the wrong questions, we clearly lack a framework for meaningful answers. Soviet leaders believe that personal convictions of leaders reflect "objective reality" such as the structure of society and the global balance of forces. In other words, while America feels its way toward the notion of vital interests, Soviet leaders have no other category for judging diplomatic encounters.

The significance of the Gromyko visit was therefore that Moscow had made a prior decision to explore negotiation. This was not because it liked President Reagan more but because of a need for a period of calm to sort out succession problems and to invigorate a moribund economy. Thus, East-West negotiations at this moment require not a gimmick to get the Soviets to return to the conference table, but careful thought regarding a precise and imaginative program to put forward once they get there. This is all the more important because the very sclerosis of leadership that tempts the Kremlin to explore negotiations may also prevent the flexibility to sustain a fast-moving negotiation.

Thus President Reagan has a dual task. He must overcome the divisions regarding our national purpose and at the same time extend the base of our national consensus. And contrary to the predilection of his traditional constituency, he has every incentive to seize the middle ground. Experience has shown that our diplomacy cannot be sustained when the policy pendulum swings too far to either extreme. A policy that seeks agreement for its own sake will run up against the national mood of self-assertion. A confrontational course evokes elementary fears of nuclear war and forfeits domestic and allied support.

The ultimate challenge to the Great Communicator is to add the laurel of the Great Educator. He must take bipartisanship beyond the least common denominator. The country needs an unambiguous vision of the world for which to strive and of the dangers to be overcome. The bureaucracy, if left to its own devices, will segment what should be a national strategy into a series of ad-hoc decisions that place a premium on the satisfaction of departmental self-will. And the task will be complicated as well by the way the American political process has developed. In each party, the stalwarts, often fanatics, who are motivated to work in primary campaigns, have acquired a disproportionate influence. They are experts at refining distinctions, not transcending them. The quest for the middle ground is almost certain to be resisted by the extremists of each party. The fault line runs within each party as well as between them.

Yet as the victor in a landslide, the president can afford, indeed, he has the obligation, to be generous. No president in a generation has had a better opportunity to involve the broadest spectrum of serious opinion, especially if the Democratic Party learns the lesson from its debacle and returns to the responsible international role it pioneered in the postwar period.

America's prospects are bright. The Soviets need a respite. Our allies look to us for leadership, and developing nations have learned that their hopes for progress depend on our economy. Not since the immediate postwar period has a president had such an opportunity to shape a more benign international order. And few presidents have been better placed to act on the understanding that societies thrive not on the victories of factions over each other but on their reconciliations.

How Will We Measure Progress?

The eagerness with which the Soviets have resumed arms control talks marks a complete reversal of a position they have held adamantly for the better part of two years. They have abandoned what they had presented as the immutable precondition: that American missiles first be withdrawn from Europe.

Whether this represents a change of tactics or of strategy, or whether the present Politburo is capable of a fluid diplomacy, is a matter that lies outside of Western control. What is in the West's power to control is whether we avoid raising excessive expectations about negotiations that have not even started. Western overeagerness could tempt the Soviets to stall to elicit unilateral concessions. Or else it could produce an agreement that, because it avoids all fundamental issues, will be only an interlude in the East-West conflict.

A great deal depends therefore on America's ability to define criteria by which to measure progress. This will be far from simple. For more than a decade the phrase détente polarized the American domestic debate. The Reagan administration has so far muted this controversy by a skillful balancing act, which combined the rhetoric of the opponents of détente with many of the policies of its advocates. But now that negotiations are starting in earnest it will no longer be able to avoid the issues by deft verbal formulations.

The beginning of wisdom is to admit—however painful this may be in the light of previous pronouncements—that the administration is now involved in an essentially irrevocable process indistinguishable in substance from what used to be called détente. As its fourth year in office began, the administration obviously concluded that the United States and its allies would not support confrontation except as a last resort. Given this eloquent commitment, the adminstration's credibility and allied support depend on making clear that any failure of negotiations is not its fault.

American relations with the Soviet Union have been characterized by oscillations between extremes of intransigence and extremes of conciliation—an oscillation to which the present administration is far from immune. Histrically, Americans have either sought to solve tensions in one conclusive negotiation or to defeat a recalcitrant opponent in battle. In either case there was a clear-cut terminal point. Americans have had little experience in working out a modus vivendi—especially on arms—with a nation that continues to proclaim its ideological hostility and to challenge American interests globally.

Unfortunately, the paradox that the apocalyptic nature of nuclear war imposes precisely this necessity became apparent during the traumatic period when Vietnam and Watergate converged to divide America. Attacking détente proved a convenient—and relatively safe—way to avoid facing the central tragedy that it was America's divisions much more than its adversary's cunning that sapped its credibility and weakened its international position. Between 1969 and 1972 Congress cut $40 billion from administration requests for defense (in 1970 dollars)—before any arms control agreement was ever concluded.

No policy—least of all détente—can substitute for a strong and purposeful United States. Still, granting that the conflict with the Soviets has no clear-cut terminal point, is it nevertheless possible to make agreements that reduce the danger of nuclear war and the risk of political crisis?

Now that the Reagan administration has ended America's self-flagellation, the question no longer brooks evasion. Regrettably American governmental procedures in any administration are not well-suited for the task of defining long-range national objectives. The adversary process from which American foreign policy emerges leads each department to put forward its own, often parochial, set of proposals. What passes for national strategy is usually a compromise negotiated in the White House and as a last resort imposed by the President. But in foreign policy success almost invariably depends less on the merit of individual measures than on their relationship to each other and to clearly understood long-range goals. Unfortunately, nuance and continuity have no bureaucratic constituencies.

Over the past four years the historic rivalry between the State and Defense departments has more than once degenerated into personal animus. Such disputes are especially difficult for a president to referee. He can never be as "expert" as the experts who disagree before him so eloquently in their recommendations. So in the end, the procedure drives him toward a compromise that may combine the disadvantages of every proposed course of action. It also tends to transmute factual issues into theological ones.

A good example is the question over who is ahead in the arms race. To be sure, the issue involves weapons of unprecedented complexity and for which there is no operational experience. But it cannot be beyond the wit of the American government to devise a comparison of the probable growth of nuclear arms with, and without, arms control agreements.

Even greater precision should be attainable with respect to the issue of verifiability. There is no doubt that the Soviets have often barely observed the letter of agreements; in some cases they clearly seem to have violated them. Critics have seized on even the most technical discrepancy to assault a process they oppose for quite different reasons.

Successive administrations have been reluctant to make a formal charge of violation lest they undermine the domestic support for negotiation and because they did not know what to do about it. The factual content of verification has, as a result, received insufficient study—especially the tolerances that must be part of any agreement. Some questions such as these require resolution:

What is the U.S. capacity to verify the numbers of each Soviet strategic weapon?

What is the margin of uncertainty?

Is that margin strategically significant either by itself or in combination with other weapons?

What countermeasures are available to Soviet violations and how rapidly can they be implemented?

If the United States cannot resolve these technical questions, it will surely be stymied by the more fundamental issue that each day bears down on it more heavily: contemporary weapons technology has made traditional arms control theory obsolescent. Developed in the late 1950s and early 1960s, this theory assumed stationary missiles and relatively inaccurate single warheads. Since it would take more than one attacking missile to destroy an offensive one, it was plausible to believe that if one could negotiate essential equality of strategic forces the incentive for surprise attack would have been removed.

Modern technology has overtaken this simple equation. Today launchers can carry 10 or more highly accurate warheads; some missiles are becoming mobile. Equality in numbers of launchers has become less and less relevant to strategic stability. Even reductions can prove meaningless or dangerous if they do not ameliorate the disproportion between warheads and launchers.

The appointment of the experienced and sophisticated Paul H. Nitze as special adviser to the secretary of state is an important step—especially in the negotiating field. But nobody can solve the conceptual issues, act as chief negotiator and achieve a bipartisan consensus at the same time. I cannot think of a more suitable occasion for a bipartisan commission to define the basic options for the president and his senior advisers, thereby making it unnecessary for the president to referee abstruse technical decisions.

Whatever the organizational device, the internal debate in the administration must be shifted from controversy about the importance of arms control to an analysis of which specific limitations would in fact reduce the danger of nuclear war. Otherwise, the United States will be driven by negotiating tactics or impose on itself the absurdity of accepting reductions in strategic forces that it refuses to put forward as bargaining chips in negotiation—in the name of reducing the budget deficit.

There has been even less of a systematic effort to come to grips with the complicated relationship of offensive and defensive forces. The so-called Star Wars issue threatens to turn into one of those symbolic tests of will by which America drains its national purpose. Critics have jumped gleefully on extravagant presidential claims implying the possibility of a perfect civilian defense. In fact, the possibility of protecting retaliatory forces and lessening the danger of attack from third world nuclear countries cannot simply be shrugged off with emotional proclamations. To base deterrence irrevocably on the mutual threat to exterminate civilians would be a fateful decision. When mass slaughter becomes a mathematical equation, the siren songs of the advocates of pacifism and unilateral disarmament will sound increasingly attractive in the democracies.

The administration can approach the problem of defense in three alternative ways:

1. Impose a moratorium on testing of all defensive weapons at the beginning of the negotiations.

2. Use defensive weapons as leverage to obtain a massive cut in offensive forces that reduces the danger of nuclear war.

3. Explore an agreement containing a balance between offensive and defensive forces that would substantially reduce the threat of nuclear war.

It is not necessary to decide between the last two options at this stage. Indeed, it cannot be done in the absence of systematic, careful, unemotional studies. But a moratorium at the beginning of the negotiating process—or a slowdown imposed by Congress—would be bitterly wrong.

The Soviets have left little doubt that their principal objective in resuming the dialogue is to stop the American efforts to develop a ballistic missile defense. According to the media, important elements of the American government favor a moratorium with the argument that testing can always be resumed if negotiations fail. But previous negotiating experience should remind us of the vacuity of such arguments. No moratorium in the arms field has ever been ended by the United States, because negotiations never fail unambiguously, and because no president is eager to tempt the political storm such a step would cause.

A moratorium would complicate the ability to obtain congressional appropriations. It would foreclose the option of using defensive weapons either for leverage or as part of an agreement. It would almost surely slow the pace of negotiations because the United States would have handed the Soviets their ultimate goal as a unilateral gesture.

Before the United States goes very far in negotiations, a close process of consultation with its allies must begin. But past experience suggests that they will be nearly as uneasy about a separate bilateral U.S.-Soviet deal as they were previously about being drawn by us into an unwanted confrontation.

Perhaps Soviet rigidity will defeat the best efforts of America and its allies. But it is not often that an opportunity occurs to change East-West relations fundamentally. In the past the West has too often settled for the essentially psychological relief inherent in an easing of tensions. Our challenge now is to translate the yearning for peace into concrete terms that improve not only the tone but also the substance of international relations.●

KIM DAE JUNG RETURNS TO KOREA

● Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, in a few days, South Korean democratic leader Kim Dae Jung will leave Washington for his homeland, after having spent 2 years in exile in this country. I am deeply concerned that the South Korean Government may immediately arrest and imprison him out of a misplaced fear that democratic reform will weaken that nation's security, or that his freedom would endanger the state in some way.

That concern is heightened by the report in today's Washington Post that quotes President Chun's political secretary, former General Chow Change Yoon, as saying that "we cannot treat (Kim) as a politician—he is a revolutionary." The Korean Government has publicly stated that Kim will be reimprisoned when he returns.

Kim Dae Jung is known throughout the world for his lifetime commitment to the values of democracy. If he is a "revolutionary," it is in the same meaning of that word as used by President Reagan earlier this week in his Inaugural Address, when he exhorted the American people to return to our revolutionary tradition. Should the Korean Government mistakenly believe itself to be endangered by such a revolutionary, perhaps we should reexamine the close ties in defense and trade benefits which have supported that Government and its predecessors since the Republic of Korea was founded in 1948.

In 1973, when the Korean CIA, under President Park Chung Hee, kidnaped Kim Dae Jung from a Tokyo hotel and threatened to kill him, the State Department was prompt to respond. "We are gravely concerned about Mr. Kim's safety and welfare," the statement said. "Mr. Kim is a respected Korean political leader and a friend of the United States." In 1980, when a military court, under President-to-be Chun Doo Hwan, sentenced Kim Dae Jung to death on sedition charges, the Department of State called those charges farfetched.

I urge the administration to make it clear to the Korean Government that we continue to consider Kim Dae Jung a respected Korean political leader and a friend of the United States, and that an attempt to reimprison him on grounds we have already termed farfetched would be viewed with considerable disfavor and might jeopardize the present economic and military relationship between our two countries.

When Kim Dae Jung returns to Korea on February 8, he will have the support and the admiration of many of us in this country. Many of us recently expressed our hopes for a safe return and for freedom for Mr. Kim, in a letter sent to President Chun Doo Hwan. I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD the text of this letter and the list of the 136 signators. I strongly endorse their appeal and call on the Government of the Republic of Korea to reconsder its position.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CAMPAIGN TO ASSURE A SAFE RETURN FOR KIM DAE JUNG,
Washington, DC, January 10, 1985.

HIS EXCELLENCY, PRESIDENT CHUN DOO HWAN,
The Blue House, 1, Sejong-ro, Jangno-ku Seoul, Republic of Korea.

DEAR PRESIDENT CHUN: We write to encourage you in your government's efforts to build what you have termed an "advanced homeland" through diplomatic, economic and political means. Integral to this process will be the granting of safety and freedom to Mr. Kim Dae Jung, who is respected throughout the world for his devotion to democracy and human rights, when he returns home. We also urge that you restore his civil and political rights.

Efforts to reduce tension and build confidence domestically are of great importance in all countries. They are, we believe, a critical element in assuring the social harmony needed as Korea prepares for National Assembly elections in 1985, the Asian Games in 1986, and both the Olympic Games and presidential elections in 1988. We share your desire that these events be characterized by social stability and political progress that enhance Korea's international stature.

By allowing Kim Dae Jung full participation in public life, you will, we believe, cogently communicate to the world your government's growing confidence in itself and in the people of Korea.

All of the persons listed on the pages following our signatures have agreed to join in sending this appeal. Please be assured of our continued commitment to the people of Korea and to efforts to strengthen our countries' mutual devotion to genuine freedom and democracy.

Sincerely,

PEGGY BILLINGS,
Deputy General Secretary, General Board of Global Ministries, United Methodist Church.

BURY ME WITH SOLDIERS

● Mr. DENTON. Mr. President, during recent travels I was approached by a Vietnam veteran who was ordained as a Catholic priest after his combat in Vietnam. The veteran, Rev. Charles R. Fink, gave me a copy of a poem that he had written entitled "Bury Me With Soldiers."

Perhaps the poem is not one of the greatest poems of all time, but it does seem to express better than anything else that I have seen, the appreciation that we should all have for our military personnel who fought in Vietnam as well as in other wars.

We have been too prone to make our service men and women the scapegoats for an outcome in Vietnam that was painful for us and disastrous for the people of Vietnam and Indochina, culminating as it did in the tragic fall of Saigon nearly 10 years ago and the even more tragic series of subsequent events in South Vietnam, Laos, and Cambodia, now expanding to include armed conflict on the border with Thailand.

Although our Vietnam experience may have been mishandled by several branches of our Government, on the whole our military personnel served faithfully, loyally, and effectively. Many of them paid the supreme price for their efforts. They deserve full credit for their service to our country and for their personal sacrifices. The poem recognizes that, and states it with a touching eloquence.

Mr. President, I ask that the poem "Bury Me With Soldiers," by Rev. Charles R. Fink, be printed in the RECORD. I commend it to my colleagues and to all Americans as a statement of recognition and tribute for our Vietnam veterans and, indeed, for all America's veterans.

The poem follows.

BURY ME WITH SOLDIERS [1]

I've played a lot of roles in life;
I've met a lot of men.
I've done some things I'd like to think
I wouldn't do again.
And though I'm young, I'm old enough
To know someday I'll die,
And think about what lies beyond,
Beside whom I would lie.

Perhaps it doesn't matter much;
Still, if I had my choice,
I'd want a grave 'mongst soldiers when
At last death quells my voice.
I'm sick of the hypocrisy
Of lectures by the wise.
I'll take the man, with all his flaws,
Who goes, though scared, and dies.

The troops I know were commonplace:
They didn't want the war;
They fought because their fathers and
Their fathers had before.
They cursed and killed and wept—God knows
They's easy to deride—
But bury me with men like these;
They faced the guns and died.

It's funny, when you think of it,
The way we got along.
We'd come from different worlds
To live in one where none belongs.
I didn't even like them all;
I'm sure they'd all agree.
Yet I would give my life for them,
I hope; some did for me.

So bury me with soldiers, please,
Though much maligned they be.
Yes, bury me with soldiers, for
I miss their company.
We'll not soon see their like again;
We've had our fill of war.
But bury me with men like them
Till someone else does more.

THE 67TH ANNIVERSARY OF THE PROCLAMATION OF INDEPENDENCE IN UKRAINE

● Mr. DURENBERGER. Mr. President, January 23 was the 67th anniversary of the proclamation of Ukraine's independence from Russian rule. This declaration, which was made in Kiev in January 1918, represented the culmination of over 200 years of struggle by Ukrainians who sought freedom from Russian domination.

Sadly, Ukrainian independence was to be short-lived. The Ukrainian Republican struggled valiantly to preserve its independence against the attacks of Red and White Russian forces as well as Polish armies. In 1920, the Soviets defeated the Ukrainian Army and began an occupation of Ukraine which has lasted approximately 65 years.

This long occupation has not crushed Ukraine's spirit nor its will to resist Russian imperialism. This anniversary seems an appropriate occasion to honor the courage of several Ukrainian democrats, who have suffered grievously for their beliefs. We should recognize their sacrifice and not forget that brave men still die in pursuit of freedom in Ukraine.

In the last year, various members of the human rights movement in Ukraine died in suspicious circumstances or were driven to suicide in Soviet prisons, labor camps, and psychiatric hospitals. Yuriy Lytvyn was a member of the Ukrainian Helsinki Group as well as a writer. He served terms as a political prisoner from 1951-53, 1955-65, and 1974-77. In 1979, Lytvyn was sentenced again to 10 years' imprisonment and 5 years' of exile. On September 5, he was driven to suicide at Labor Camp No. 36-1 near Perm, R.S.F.S.R. He was 50 years old and had spent nearly half of his life as a political prisoner.

Valeriy Marchenko was a writer, translator, and journalist. He served an earlier term as a political prisoner from 1973 to 1981. In March 1984, Marchenko was sentenced again to 10 years' imprisonment and 5 years' exile. He was seriously ill for much of both terms of imprisonment. On October 7, he died of complications resulting from an untreated kidney ailment and hypertension in a prison hospital in Leningrad. Marchenko was 37 years old.

Oleksiy Tykhy was a founding member of the Ukrainian Helsinki Group and a teacher. He served an earlier term as a political prisoner from 1957 to 1964. In 1977, Tykhy was sentenced again to 10 years' imprisonment and 5 years' exile. In May, he died in the hospital at Labor Camp No. 36-1. Tykhy was 57 years old.

Oleksiy Nikityn was a leader in Ukraine's independent labor union movement and an engineer. He served a previous term as a political prisoner from 1972 to 1976. In 1977, Nikityn was transferred to a special psychiatric hospital. Last spring, he died a few weeks after having been released by prison officials. He was 47 at the time of his death.

There is little that we can do for these courageous men, but to remember their sacrifices. And to offer our support to other brave Ukrainians who are struggling for their freedom. We can, however, take positive action to see that other Ukrainian activists for human and national rights do not suffer the same fate. We in the West should demand that the Governments of the U.S.S.R. and the Ukrainian S.S.R. permit the U.N. Commission on Human Rights to undertake a full investigation into the deaths of these human rights activists. Also, the International Red Cross Committee should be allowed to visit all prisoners of conscience held by the Soviet Union, especially in order to determine safety conditions and the level of medical care that these prisoners receive.

In recognizing this anniversary of Ukrainian independence, we in the Western democracies honor those 50 million people of Ukraine and over 3 million Americans of Ukrainian descent. We in the Congress should let the Soviet Union know of our concern about the many Ukrainian prisoners of conscience. For example, Mykola Rudenko, the head of the Ukrainian Helsinki Group, is currently serving a term in exile for demanding Soviet compliance with the Helsinki accord. Yosyf Zisels was arrested on December 8, 1978 and charged with "slandering the Soviet state" for disseminating Ukrainian and Russian "samizdat" writings. Zisels was accused of having contacts with the Moscow and Ukrainian Helsinki Monitoring Groups. He joined the Ukraine Helsinki Monitoring Group in 1979 while serving his sentence in a labor camp in the Chernivtsi region of Ukraine. Yuriy Shukhevych is another member of the Ukrainian Helsinki Group who has spent a significant portion of his life in Soviet political prisons. As the son of the commander-in-chief of the Ukrainian Insurgent Army, Shukhevych was imprisoned from 1947-68 and from 1972-82 for his continued refusal to renounce his father. As a result of mistreatment and deprivation of medical care during his imprisonment, Shukhevych went totally blind. He is presently serving a term of exile.●

IN PRAISE OF MAHONING VALLEY STEELWORKERS

● Mr. GLENN. Mr. President, no one better understands the rigors of international competition than the steelworkers of the Mahoning Valley in Ohio. I am proud to say that no one has done more to meet the challenges of that competition. They have shown that a well-trained and motivated work force, in cooperation with forward-looking management, can increase productivity and improve the quality of output. In doing so, they have demonstrated that in our Nation's quest for excellence our greatest resource is our people.

Mr. President, I ask that a recent article describing the accomplishments of labor-management cooperation at LTV's steelmills in the Mahoning Valley be printed in the RECORD.

The article follows:

[From the Cleveland Plain Dealer, Jan. 17, 1985]

MAHONING STEELWORKERS PRAISED

(By Richard Ellers)

YOUNGSTOWN.—Once known for their hard-nosed unionism. Mahoning Valley steelworkers were praised here last night for accepting lower pay and increasing output to help their companies meet the steel industry's harsh global competition.

The praise came from the top, from David H. Hoag, new chairman and chief executive officer of Cleveland-based LTV Steel Co.

At the annual meeting of the Industrial Information Institute in Boardman, Hoag said LTV mills in Campbell, Youngstown and Warren demonstrate new labor-management cooperation, which provides the profitability needed for survival.

LTV has 7,000 workers in the Mahoning Valley, many of them still laid off, at its pipe mills in Youngstown and Campbell and basic steel and semifinished plants in nearby Warren.

Hoag said that in return for union acceptance of two-tiered wages scales and simplified job classifications, the company has financed modernizations of the mills to improve product quality and profitability.

He said the company will soon invest $1 million to keep the Mahoning bar mill open after negotiating a recent agreement providing for wage limits for present workers and for hiring new workers at lower rates.

Hoag said similar worker concessions and improved productivity and quality at the welded steel mill here meant that plant would remain open while a similar LTV plant in Aliquippa, Pa., is closed.

He also credited workers at LTV's Campbell pipe mill with improving the quality of its oil and gas drilling pipe to 50 times better than the standards set by the American Petroleum Institute.

With worker cooperation and a $65 million modernization completed in 1983, the Campbell mill cut its man-hours-per-ton by 30% in the past year and in three years, has doubled the tons-per-hour production.

"There are only four job classifications compared with 42 previously," he said. "The new approach created a well-trained and motivated work force freed from the monotony and boredom inherent in rigid job classifications.

"The Campbell mill now produces oil country products (pipe) that are as good or better than any in the world," he said, but warned that "the Youngstown mills have won a round in the battle, but the war is not over."●

STATEMENT OF SPONSORSHIP OF THE EQUAL RIGHTS AMENDMENT, S.J. RES. 10

● Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, on January 11, 1985, we celebrated the centennial birthday of one of this century's foremost fighters for women's equality: Alice Paul. Sixty-two years have passed since Ms. Paul first authored the equal rights amendment in 1923. Ms. Paul saw the ERA introduced in every session of Congress since then until it passed both Houses in 1972. Her own words best describe why Congress should approve the ERA:

A national amendment is the most effective way to establish equality of rights for men and women throughout the country. The amendment would, at one stroke, compel both Federal and State governments to observe the principle of Equal Rights since the Federal Constitution is the supreme law of the land.

Alice Paul spent her entire life fighting to win passage of the ERA. I am proud to carry on that struggle for equality by adding my name as a cosponsor to the very same ERA. There is no doubt in my mind that someday Ms. Paul's dream will be realized. It is a matter of time, not lack of dedication of principle, before the ERA becomes an integral part of the law of our land.

The equal rights amendment is a fundamental statement of our democratic ideals. But, unfortunately, history demonstrates that fundamental rights have often been achieved only by virtue of long-term concerted efforts. The Magna Carta and our Bill of Rights are themselves the result of persistent struggles to guarantee basic rights and freedom from abuse by the Government. The more recent civil rights movement and the struggle for women's suffrage are poignant reminders that equal rights have not been readily granted to blacks or women. Though a difficult course, some goals have been achieved: 60 years of tenacity and courage by women and men led to the adoption in 1920 of the 19th amendment granting women the right to vote.

The 62 years of struggle to pass the ERA has been just as long but like the struggle to pass the 19th amendment, it has endured and it will be successful. And it will continue with courage, diligence, and persistence until ERA is a reality. Women and men committed to equal justice will not rest until the equal rights amendment is adopted as part of the U.S. Constitution.

Women's roles in our society have changed. The clock will not turn back. The women of this country, and the men who care, will not tolerate a return to the time when women were relegated to the sidelines of our society—when blatant discrimination and barriers to equal opportunities deprived women of the chance to reach their full potential—whether in the home or in a career.

Much progress has been made in recent years toward ending discrimination against women: The Equal Pay and Equal Credit Acts, ensuring parity and pay and credit; the Civil Rights Act, forbidding discrimination in employment; and, title IX, ensuring equality in education. These are great achievements. But they are a piecemeal approach to an enormous problem. As laws directed to specified subjects, they cannot address comprehensively the many kinds of discrimination women face everyday. A constitutional amendment is the simple statement of equality for all.

The American Bar Association explained the need for ERA this way:

No ordinary statute can provide the bedrock protection assured by a constitutional amendment. No court decision can provide that protection, for the courts can interpret, but they may not amend the Constitution.

ERA is a self-evident principle of simple justice. It would not prevent anyone, man or woman, from living the kind of life they want. It would not force anyone, man or woman, to live according to rules dictated by others. ERA is the only permanent insurance that all of us can have an equal chance.

No time limit can be placed on the pursuit of equality and justice for all Americans. Opponents of ERA must realize that those of us who seek true equality for all people will never allow the equal rights amendment to die. We will not give up the struggle. We will not give in. We will continue until all Americans, and especially the 51.4 percent who are female, are truly "We are the People."

Mr. President, I submit for the RECORD, remarks made by Elizabeth Chittick of the National Women's Party on the occasion of Alice Paul's 100th birthday.

The remarks follow:

ELIZABETH CHITTICK—WELCOME

(Alice Paul Centennial Birthday Celebration Jan. 10, 1985)

Good Evening—Welcome to the Sewall-Belmont House, headquarters of the National Women's Party since 1929.

This is a very special night for us as we celebrate the 100th birthday of a very, very special woman—the kind of woman we do not know today. A woman who truly gave her whole life to the cause of eliminating discrimination against women. A woman who could not be swerved from this goal—a woman who had the ability to inspire others to support and work for this cause—her cause—the Equal Rights Amendment.

Alice Paul was born in a Quaker family in Moorestown, New Jersey, on January 11, 1885, and she died a Quaker on July 9, 1977. Her peaceful background, no doubt, influenced her leadership activities during the suffrage years in America. As a young social worker in England, under the leadership of Emmeline Pankhurst, she took part in the English demonstrations for suffrage, which were violent and destructive—bricks were thrown through windows—and she was jailed in England and Scotland.

When she returned to America, her leadership tactics were peaceful and demonstrations were quiet with only one objective—to obtain attention for the suffrage cause.

But she was an activist with a flair for the dramatic. In 1913 she organized over 5,000 women to parade the evening before President Woodrow Wilson's inauguration. In 1917 she and some of her followers were jailed for refusing to leave their positions at the White House. They went on a hunger strike and she was force-fed to sustain her life. Many demonstrations followed until, finally, the 19th Amendment was passed in 1920 and women had the legal right to vote.

In 1923, after the passage of suffrage, Alice Paul held a commemorative convention at Seneca Falls, New York, where the first Equal Rights convention was held in 1848 by Lucretia Mott, Elizabeth Cady Stanton and friends. At this convention Alice Paul was asked to obtain legislation that would give women the balance of rights Elizabeth Cady Stanton had demanded. She returned to Washington, wrote the Equal Rights Amendment and saw to it that it was introduced in every session of Congress from 1923 until it was passed in 1972.

It is interesting to note that during the period of 1922-1927, she added three law degrees to her Ph.D. in social work.

She worked for suffrage from 1913 to 1920 but her total life's work, from 1912 until she died on July 9, 1977, was for passage of the Equal Rights Amendment.

In addition to her lifetime dedication to the cause of the Equal Rights Amendment, her commitment to equality for women extended beyond America.

In 1928, she was author of the resolution that founded the Inter-American Commission of Women, an important arm of the Organization of American States.

In 1938, with the help of prominent women from all over the world, she founded the World Woman's Party, and worked with women throughout the world—women in Japan, Europe, South America, China and India.

In 1943, under the leadership, the World Woman's Party was successful in persuading the World Court to include a statement supporting the principle of human rights for all.

In 1945, when the United Nations was founded in San Francisco, under her leadership, the National Woman's Party and World Woman's Party were instrumental in having included in the U.N. charter, a statement declaring recognition of equality for men and women.

In 1964, it was the pressure and lobbying of National Woman's Party lawyers that were mainly responsible for the word "sex" being inserted in title VII—the Civil Rights Act. Alice Paul and her lobbying techniques were without parallel.

This remarkable, petite woman used all of her God-given talents and zeal to make this a better place for men and women.

She was, without knowing it, a great pioneer, fighting for equality for women not only in the United States, but throughout the world.

During a period of time when women were not accepted as equals, her accomplishments were awesome.

She showed the way for women who would be pioneers in their fields of endeavor. She opened doors for women who strive for that special gold ring—equality.

Today, we rejoice and celebrate the 100th birthday of this great pioneer, whom I was privileged to know and who inspired me to work for her cause.

Alice Paul is the unsung, unknown heroine of the 20th century. A pioneer achiever—she has left us a heritage to fulfill—passage of the Equal Rights Amendment. Her spirit remains as our inspiration.●

TRADE EXPANSION ACT OF 1985

● Mr. ROTH. I ask that S. 234, a bill to amend the Tariff Act of 1930 to make the trade laws more equitable and to expand trade, which was introduced on Tuesday, January 22, be printed in the RECORD in its entirety.

The text follows:

S. 234

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Trade Expansion Act of 1985".

TITLE I—TRADE NEGOTIATIONS

SEC. 101. FINDINGS.

The Congress finds that—

(1) open and fair trading among all countries is a fundamental element of world economic growth;

(2) unfair trade practices of increasing subtlety and variety are undermining America's ability to compete fairly abroad;

(3) the Tokyo Round agreements governing the trading system are frequently imprecise, ambiguous, and unresponsive to emerging economic sectors;

(4) strengthening the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (hereinafter in this Act referred to as "GATT"), including the Tokyo Round agreements, will provide the necessary leadership for an open and fair world trading system;

(5) creating a more effective trading system involves not only the delineation of new trade rules, but also consideration of basic institutional reform of GATT procedures and authority;

(6) millions of Americans now depend on exports for their jobs and exports will be a key source of future job creation in the United States; and

(7) providing American exports with a fair and reasonable access to world markets is an important concern.

SEC. 102. SENSE OF CONGRESS REGARDING TRADE NEGOTIATIONS.

(a) It is the sense of the Congress that the President should initiate trade negotiations with the trading partners of the United States at the earliest possible time.

(b) The following should be the principal objectives of the trade negotiations referred to in subsection (a):

(1) Establishment of more effective rules governing trade in agriculture for the purpose of providing greater market access for all countries and the curbing of excessive use of export subsidies that have hindered American agricultural exports abroad.

(2) The strengthening and clarification of the safeguards provision of the GATT with particular emphasis on establishing transparency of safeguard actions through improved notification procedures as well as better surveillance of safeguard actions, their duration, and their specific application to all countries.

(3) Improvement of the dispute settlement procedures of the GATT so that—

(A) industries suffering from unfair trade practices will receive more expeditious relief, and

(B) affected contracting parties will abide by decisions reached.

(4) The strengthening of existing GATT codes to make them more responsive to growing economic change, in particular—

(A) delineation of those domestic subsidies that distort trade, with special emphasis on government assistance of a long-term nature that aids specific economic sectors in capturing foreign markets;

(B) extension of coverage of the GATT codes to investment practices that distort trade;

(C) discouragement of discriminatory regional standards;

(D) establishment of rules that provide for mutual acceptance of test data and greater transparency;

(E) extension of coverage of the GATT codes to additional government entities, as well as economic sectors, particularly the services sectors; and

(F) strengthening the rules that affect trade in high technology.

(5) Extension of GATT rules, and the rules of any other appropriate forum, to services sectors for the purpose of providing a more open environment for these sectors in world markets.

(6) Establishment of multilaterial rules affecting trade in counterfeit goods.

(7) Clarification of the rights and obligations of trading countries in actions related to intellectual property that affect international trade.

(8) Creation of stronger institutional links between the GATT and international financial institutions such as the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund.

(9) Establishment of a new standing committee within the GATT that would indentify emerging trade problems and explore solutions to such problems.

(10) Implementation of any institutional changes to the GATT that would increase the effectiveness of the GATT in promoting open and fair trade.

(11) Improvement in the application of GATT rules to trade by all countries.

TITLE II—TRADE ADJUSTMENT ASSISTANCE

SEC. 201. CASH ASSISTANCE.

(a) Section 231 of the Trade Act of 1974 (19 U.S.C. 2291) is amended—

(1) by striking out "(a)" before "Payment";

(2) by striking out subsection (b); and

(3) by adding after paragraph (4) the following new paragraph:

"(5) Such worker is enrolled in or has completed a training program approved under section 236.".

(b) Section 232 of such Act (19 U.S.C. 2292) is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 232. WEEKLY AMOUNT OF READJUSTMENT ALLOWANCE.

"The trade readjustment allowance payable to an adversely affected worker for a week of unemployment shall be an amount equal to the most recent weekly benefit amount of the unemployment insurance payable to the worker for a week of total unemployment preceding the worker's first exhaustion of unemployment insurance (as determined for purposes of section 231(a)(3)(B)), reduced (but not below zero) by income that is deductible from unemployment insurance under the disqualifying income provisions of the applicable State or Federal unemployment insurance law.".

(c) Section 233 of such Act (19 U.S.C. 2293) is amended—

(1) by striking out paragraph (3) of subsection (a); and

(2) by striking out subsections (b) and (c) and redesignating subsection (d) as subsection (b).

SEC. 202. TRAINING AND JOB VOUCHERS.

(a) Section 236 of the Trade Act of 1974 (19 U.S.C. 2296) is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 236. TRAINING AND JOB VOUCHERS.

"(a) Each adversely affected worker covered by a certification under this chapter shall be eligible for a job training voucher issued by the Secretary of Labor, subject to amounts appropriated for purposes of providing such vouchers. The voucher shall be in the amount of $4,000, and may be used only in accordance with the provisions of this section to defray (in whole or in part) the cost of any of the following training programs provided to such worker:

"(1) A training program provided by the State pursuant to section 303 of the Job Training Partnership Act.

"(2) A training program provided by a private entity if such program has been approved for purposes of this section by a private industry council established under section 102 of the Job Training Partnership Act. A private industry council shall approve a training program for purposes of this section only if the council determines that the program provides training in occupations for which a need exists in the private sector of the economy.

"(3) Training provided by an employer who agrees to employ the worker upon completion of the training, for a period (including the training period) of not less than 26 weeks.

"(b)(1) The State (in the case of a voucher used pursuant to subsection (a)(1)) or the private training program (in the case of a voucher used pursuant to subsection (a)(2)) may redeem such voucher from the Secretary of Labor upon completion of the training program.

"(2) An employer (in the case of a voucher used pursuant to subsection (a)(3)) may redeem such voucher only as a credit against the tax imposed under the Federal Unemployment Tax Act (chapter 23 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954), or, if the total amount of such vouchers exceeds the tax liability under such Act, as a credit against such employer's tax liability under chapter 1 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954. Such credit shall become effective at the end of 26 weeks of training and employment of such worker.

"(c)(1) No employer may redeem a voucher used by a worker pursuant to subsection (a)(3) if such employer is engaged in the same occupation from which the worker was separated and with respect to which such worker's group was certified pursuant to section 222.

"(2) No employer may redeem a voucher used by a worker pursuant to subsection (a)(3) unless such employer has provided such worker with training and employment for a combined period of not less than 26 weeks.

"(3) No employer may redeem a voucher used by a worker pursuant to subsection (a)(3) if such employer terminated the employment of an employee for the purpose of hiring and training such worker under the provisions of this section. Any employer found by the Secretary of Labor to have violated the provisions of this paragraph shall also be subject to a civil penalty not to exceed $12,000 for each such violation.

"(d) Any entity which redeems a voucher used by a worker pursuant to subsection (a)(2) shall repay to the United States the amount of such voucher plus interest at a rate of 10 percent if the Secretary of Labor subsequently determines that the entity's training program was not approved by a private industry council for purposes of this section.".

(b)(1) Section 237 of the Trade Act of 1974 (19 U.S.C. 2297) is amended—

(A) by striking out "section 236(b)(1) and (2)" in subsection (a)(2) and inserting in lieu thereof "subsection (c)", and

(B) by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(c) LIMITATIONS.—

"(1) SUBSISTENCE.—The amount of allowable subsistence expenses shall not exceed the lesser of—

"(A) the actual per diem expenses for subsistence, or

"(B) the amount determined by using 50 percent of the prevailing per diem allowance rate authorized under Federal travel regulations.

"(2) TRAVEL.—The amount of allowable travel expenses shall not exceed the prevailing mileage rate authorized under Federal travel regulations.".

(2) Paragraph (1) of section 238(d) of the Trade Act of 1974 (19 U.S.C. 2298(d)) is amended by striking out "section 236(b) (1) and (2)" and inserting in lieu thereof "section 237(c)".

SEC. 203. REPEAL OF ADJUSTMENT ASSISTANCE FOR FIRMS AND COMMUNITIES.

Chapters 3 and 4 of title II of the Trade Act of 1974 (19 U.S.C. 2341 through 2374) are hereby repealed.

SEC. 204. TRUST FUND.

Section 245 of the Trade Act of 1974 (19 U.S.C. 2317) is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 245. TRADE ADJUSTMENT ASSISTANCE TRUST FUND.

"(a) There is established within the Treasury of the United States a trust fund to be known as the Trade Adjustment Assistance Trust Fund (hereinafter in this section referred to as the "Trust Fund"), consisting of such amounts as may be transferred or credited to the Trust Fund as provided in this section or otherwise appropriated to the Trust Fund.

"(b)(1) The Secretary of the Treasury shall transfer to the Trust Fund out of the general fund of the Treasury of the United States amounts determined by the Secretary of the Treasury to be equivalent to the amounts received into such general fund which are attributable to the duty imposed by section 206(b) of the Trade Expansion Act of 1985.

"(2) The amounts which are required to be transferred under paragraph (1) shall be transferred at least quarterly from the general fund of the Treasury of the United States to the Trust Fund on the basis of estimates made by the Secretary of the Treasury of the amounts referred to in paragraph (1) that are received into the Treasury. Proper adjustments shall be made in the amounts subsequently transferred to the extent prior estimates were in excess of, or less than, the amounts required to be transferred.

"(c)(1) It shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to hold the Trust Fund, and to report annually to the Congress on the financial condition and the results of the operations of the Trust Fund during the preceding fiscal year and on its expected condition and operations during the current fiscal year and the next 5 fiscal years after the current fiscal year. Such report shall be printed as a House document of the session of the Congress to which the report is made.

"(2)(A) It shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to invest such portion of the Trust Fund as is not, in his judgment, required to meet current withdrawals. Such investments may be made only in interest-bearing obligations of the United States. For such purpose, such obligations may be acquired—

"(i) on original issue at the issue price, or

"(ii) by purchase of outstanding obligations at the market price.

"(B) Any obligation acquired by the Trust Fund may be sold by the Secretary of the Treasury at the market price.

"(C) The interest on, and the proceeds from the sale or redemption of, any obligations held in the Trust Fund shall be credited to and form a part of the Trust Fund.

"(d) Amounts in the Trust Fund shall only be available for making expenditures, as provided by appropriations Acts, to carry out the provisions of this chapter.

"(e) There are authorized to be appropriated out of the Trust Fund such sums as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this chapter.".

SEC. 205. SUNSET OF TRADE ADJUSTMENT ASSISTANCE.

(a) Subchapter B of chapter 2 of title II of the Trade Act of 1974 (19 U.S.C. 2291 through 2298) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"SEC. 2299. TERMINATION.

"No assistance, vouchers, allowances, or other payments may be provided under this subchapter after the date that is 4 years after the date described in section 208(a) of the Trade Expansion Act of 1985.".

(b) Section 285 of the Trade Act of 1974 is hereby repealed.

SEC. 206. IMPOSITION OF SMALL UNIFORM DUTY ON ALL IMPORTS.

(a) The President shall undertake negotiations necessary to achieve changes in the GATT that would allow any country to impose a small uniform duty on all imports to such country for the purpose of using the revenue from such duty to fund any program which assists the workers of such country in adjusting to import competition.

(b)(1) There is hereby imposed a duty on the entry, or withdrawal from warehouse, for consumption in the customs territory of the United States of any article.

(2) The rate of the duty imposed by paragraph (1) shall be a uniform rate determined by the President—

(A) to be in accordance with the GATT, and

(B) to be sufficient to provide the funding necessary to carry out the provisions of chapter 2 of title II of the Trade Act of 1974.

SEC. 207. TAXATION OF TRADE READJUSTMENT ASSISTANCE.

Section 85(c) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 is amended by inserting before the period at the end thereof the following: ", including any trade readjustment allowance paid under section 231 of the Trade Act of 1974, but not including a voucher issued under section 236 of such Act".

SEC. 208. EFFECTIVE DATES.

(a) The amendments and repeals made by sections 201, 202, 203, 204, and 205 of this Act shall take effect on the first day after the date of enactment of this Act on which the GATT permits any country to impose a uniform duty on all imports to such country for the purpose of using the revenue from such duty to fund any program which assists the workers of such country in adjusting to import competition.

(b) The provisions of section 206(a) shall take effect on the date of enactment of this Act.

(c) The provisions of section 206(b) shall apply to any article entered, or withdrawn from warehouse, for consumption on the date that is 15 days after the day described in subsection (a).

(d) The amendment made by section 207 shall apply to taxable years ending on or after the day described in subsection (a).

TITLE III—IMPORT RELIEF AMENDMENTS TO TITLE II OF THE TRADE ACT OF 1974

SEC. 301. ESTIMATION OF THE EFFECT OF IMPORT RELIEF ON CONSUMERS.

(a) Subparagraph (A) of section 201(d)(1) of the Trade Act of 1974 (19 U.S.C. 2251(d)(1)(A)), is amended by inserting the following after "injury": "and estimate the short-term and long-term effects of such increase or imposition on private and industrial consumers (including the effect on the price and availability of the imported article and the like or directly competitive article produced in the United States)".

(b) Paragraph (4) of section 202(c) of the Trade Act of 1974 (19 U.S.C. 2252(c)(4)) is amended to read as follows:

"(4) the effect of import relief on consumers (as estimated by the Commission under section 201(d)(1)(A)) and on competition in the domestic markets for such articles;".

(c) The amendments made by this section shall apply to investigations that begin after the date of enactment of this Act.

SEC. 302. FACTORS OTHER THAN IMPORTS; EVALUATION OF EFFECTIVENESS OF RELIEF.

(a) Subsection (b) of section 201 of the Trade Act of 1974 (19 U.S.C. 2251(b)) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(7) In the course of any proceeding under this subsection, the Commission shall examine factors other than imports which are a cause of injury, or threat of injury, to the domestic industry concerned. The findings of such examination shall be included in the report submitted by the Commission to the President under subsection (d)(1).".

(b) Paragraph (1) of section 203(b) of the Trade Act of 1974 (19 U.S.C. 2253(b)(1)) is amended—

(1) by striking out "On the day" and inserting in lieu thereof "(A) On the day", and

(2) by adding at the end thereof the following new subparagraph:

"(B) Each report submitted by the President under subparagraph (A) shall include a description of all actions which the firms and workers in the domestic industry concerned and the Federal, State, and local governments are taking, or have agreed to take during the period for which import relief is provided under this section—

"(i) to combat any factors other than imports which have been identified by the Commission under section 201(b)(7), and

"(ii) to enable the domestic industry concerned to compete more effectively with imports.".

(c) Section 203 of the Trade Act of 1974 (19 U.S.C. 2253) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(l)(1) After import relief provided under this section has terminated, the Commission shall evaluate the effectiveness of the relief.

"(2) During the course of the evaluation conducted under paragraph (1), the Commission shall, after reasonable public notice, hold a hearing on the effectiveness of the import relief. All interested persons shall have the opportunity to attend such hearing and to present evidence or testimony at such hearing.

"(3) A report on the evaluation made under paragraph (1) and the hearings held under paragraph (2) shall be submitted by the Commission to the President and to the Congress by no later than the date which is 6 months after the date on which the import relief terminated.".

(d)(1) The amendments made by subsections (a) and (b) shall apply to investigations that begin after the date of enactment of this Act.

(2) The amendment made by subsection (c) shall apply with respect to import relief that terminates after the date of enactment of this Act.

TITLE IV—COUNTERVAILING AND ANTIDUMPING DUTIES

SEC. 401. REFERENCES.

Except as otherwise expressly provided, whenever in this title an amendment or repeal is expressed in terms of an amendment to, or repeal of, a title, subtitle, part, section, or other provision, the reference shall be considered to be made to a title, subtitle, part, section, or other provision of the Tariff Act of 1930 (19 U.S.C. 1202 et seq.).

(3) Section 1295(a) of title 28, United States Code, is amended by—

(A) striking out "and" at the end of paragraph (9);

(B) striking out the period at the end of paragraph (10) and inserting in lieu thereof "; and"; and

(C) adding at the end thereof the following:

"(11) of appeals described in section 516A of the Tariff Act of 1930.

For purposes of paragraph (11), the provisions of section 516A of the Tariff Act of 1930 shall apply to such appeal and, except to the extent it is inconsistent with such section, the Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit may take such action on appeal as may be taken pursuant to this title.".

(4) Section 2631(j)(1) of title 28, United States Code, is amended—

(A) by inserting "and" at the end of subparagraph (A),

(B) by striking out subparagraph (B), and

(C) by redesignating subparagraph (C) as subparagraph (B).

(5) Section 2639(a)(1) of title 28, United States Code, is amended by striking out ", 516, or 516A" and inserting in lieu thereof "or 516".

(6) Section 2647 of title 28, United States Code, is amended to read as follows:

"§ 2647. Precedence of cases

"The following civil actions in the Court of International Trade shall be given precedence, in the following order, over other civil actions pending before the Court, and shall be assigned for hearing at the earliest practicable date and expedited in every way:

"(1) First, a civil action involving the exclusion of perishable merchandise or the redelivery of such merchandise.

"(2) Second, a civil action commenced under section 515 of the Tariff Act of 1930 involving the exclusion or redelivery of merchandise.

"(3) Third, a civil action commenced under section 516 of the Tariff Act of 1930.".

(c) The amendments made by this section shall apply to agency determinations made on or after the date of the enactment of this Act.

SEC. 405. EXPEDITED COUNTERVAILING OR ANTIDUMPING DUTY PROCEDURES.

"SEC. 708. ELECTION OF EXPEDITED PROCEDURES.

"(a) IN GENERAL.—If any interested person elects to have the provisions of this section apply with respect to any investigation under this subtitle, then—

"(1) the provisions of subsections (a) and (e) of section 703 and of paragraphs (1) and (2) of section 703(d) shall not apply with respect to such investigation (and this subtitle shall be applied without regard to such provisions);

"(2) subsections (b) and (c) of section 703 shall be applied—

"(A) by substituting '100 days' for '85 days' in section 703(b)(1),

"(B) by substituting '130th day' for '150th day' in section 703(c)(1), and

"(C) without regard to the requirement in section 703(b)(1) that the preliminary determination by the administering authority be made after a preliminary determination by the Commisision,

"(3) the periods within which final determinations must be made under section 705 shall be determined under subsection (b), and

"(4) subsection (c) shall apply in determining whether countervailing duties are imposed by section 701 with respect to the unliquidated entry of the merchandise.

"(b) TIME FOR MAKING FINAL DETERMINATIONS.—If an election is made under subsection (a), the determinations under section 705 shall be made as follows:

"(1) The determination under section 705(a)(1) shall be made within 150 days (180 days if section 703(c)(1) applies) of—

"(A) the filing of the petition under section 702(b), or

"(B) the date on which the investigation is commenced under section 702(a).

"(2) The determination under section 705(b)(1) shall be made within 5 days after the date of the determination made under section 705(a)(1).

"(c) IMPOSITION OF COUNTERVAILING DUTIES.—If—

"(1) an election is made under subsection (a),

"(2) the final determination of the Commission under section 705(b)(1) with respect to any merchandise is affirmative, and

"(3) in such determination, the Commission finds that the domestic industry has been materially injured, then the countervailing duties imposed by section 701 shall apply to the entry, or withdrawal from warehouse, for consumption of any of such merchandise that is unliquidated on or after the date on which the Commission publishes notice of such final determination in the Federal Register.

"(d) INTERESTED PERSON DEFINED.—For purposes of this section, the term 'interested person' means—

"(1) in the case of a petition filed under section 702(b), the person filing such petition, or

"(2) in any other case, an interested party described in subparagraph (C), (D), or (E) of section 771(9) who is acting on behalf of an industry.".

(2) Subparagraph (B) of section 705(c)(1) (19 U.S.C. 1671d(c)(1)(B)) is amended by striking out "where the preliminary determination by the administering authority under section 703(b) was negative" and inserting in lieu thereof "in which the administering authority has made a negative determination under section 703(b) and the application of section 708 was not elected".

(3) The table of sections for subtitle A of title VII is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new item:

"Sec. 708. Election of expedited procedures.".

"SEC. 741. ELECTION OF EXPEDITED PROCEDURES.

"(a) IN GENERAL.—If any interested person elects to have the provisions of this section apply with respect to any investigation under this subtitle, then—

"(1) the provisions of subsections (a) and (e) of section 733 and of paragraphs (1) and (2) of section 733(d) shall not apply with respect to such investigation (and this subtitle shall be applied without regard to such provisions);

"(2) subsections (b) and (c) of section 733 shall be applied—

"(A) by substituting '100 days' for '160 days' in section 733(b)(1),

"(B) by substituting '130th day' for '210th day' in section 733(c)(1), and

"(C) without regard to the requirement in section 733(b)(1) that the preliminary determination by the administering authority be made after a preliminary determination by the Commission,

"(3) the periods within which final determinations must be made under section 735 shall be determined under subsection (b), and

"(4) subsection (c) shall apply in determining whether antidumping duties are imposed by section 731 with respect to the unliquidated entry of the merchandise.

"(b) TIME FOR MAKING FINAL DETERMINATIONS.—If an election is made under subsection (a), then the determinations under section 735 shall be made as follows:

"(1) The determination under section 735(a)(1) shall be made without regard to section 735(a)(2) and within 150 days (180 days if section 733(c)(1) applies) of—

"(A) the filing of the petition under section 732(b), or

"(B) the date on which the investigation is commenced under section 732(a).

"(2) The determination made under section 735(b)(1) shall be made within 5 days after the date of the determination made under section 735(a)(1).

"(c) IMPOSITION OF ANTIDUMPING DUTIES.—If—

"(1) an election is made under subsection (a),

"(2) the final determination of the Commission under section 735(b)(1) with respect to any merchandise is affirmative, and

"(3) in such determination, the Commission finds that the domestic industry has been materially injured, then the antidumping duties imposed by section 731 shall apply to the entry, or withdrawal from warehouse, for consumption of any of such merchandise that is unliquidated on or after the date on which the Commission publishes notice of such final determination in the Federal Register.

"(d) INTERESTED PERSON DEFINED.—For purposes of this section, the term 'interested person' means—

"(1) in the case of a petition filed under section 732(b), the person filing such petition, or

"(2) in any other case, an interested party described in subparagraph (C), (D), or (E) of section 771(9) who is acting on behalf of an industry.".

(2) Subparagraph (B) of section 735(c)(1) (19 U.S.C. 1673d(c)(1)(B)) is amended by striking out "where the preliminary determination by the administering authority under section 733(b) was negative" and inserting in lieu thereof "in which the administering authority has made a negative determination under section 733(b) and the application of section 741 was not elected ".

(3) The table of sections for subtitle B of title VII is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new item:

"Sec. 741. Election of expedited procedures.".

(c) The amendments made by this section shall apply to petitions filed, and investigations begun, after the date of the enactment of this Act.

SEC. 406. SAMPLING AND AVERAGING IN DETERMINING UNITED STATES PRICE AND FOREIGN MARKET VALUE.

(a) Section 777A is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 777A. SAMPLING AND AVERAGING.

"(a) UNITED STATES PRICE AND FOREIGN MARKET VALUE.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—For the purpose of determining United States price and foreign market value under sections 772 and 773, and for purposes of carrying out annual reviews under section 751, the administering authority may—

"(A) use averaging or generally recognized sampling techniques whenever a significant volume of sales is involved or a significant number of adjustments to prices is required, and

"(B) decline to take into account adjustments which are insignificant in relation to the price or value of the merchandise.

"(2) SELECTION OF SAMPLES AND AVERAGES.—The authority under paragraph (1) to select appropriate samples and averages shall rest exclusively with the administering authority; but such samples and averages shall be representative of the transactions under investigation.

"(b) MATERIAL INJURY.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—For the purpose of making determinations under this title, and for purposes of carrying out reviews under section 751, the Commission may, if the industry in the United States consists of small businesses, use averaging or generally recognized sampling techniques to determine—

"(A) whether such industry is being—

"(i) materially injured, or

"(ii) threatened with material injury, or

"(B) whether the establishment of such an industry is being materially retarded.

"(2) SELECTION OF SAMPLES AND AVERAGES.—The authority under paragraph (1) to select appropriate samples and averages shall rest exclusively with the Commission; but such samples and averages shall be representative of the industry concerned.".●

WORLD TRADE AND THE DEFICIT

● Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, the president of Caterpillar Tractor Co.; delivered a speech on October 15 which I read at that time. It impressed me then, and as I have reread it, it impresses me even more.

Here is a company that is facing economic difficulties and understands the issues confronting us, both as far as trade and the deficit situation are concerned.

We ought to be listening carefully to this message. I urge my colleagues in the Senate to read his remarks, and I ask that the speech be printed in the RECORD. The speech follows:

PROGRESS OR SURRENDER—WHAT'S NEXT IN TRADE?

I'm greatly honored to receive the Robert Dollar Award. Anyone would be proud to receive recognition for "distinguished contributions to American foreign trade and investment."

At first, though, I wasn't sure you had the right guy. Caterpillar's export sales last year were off about 55 percent from their peak. Around Peoria, we don't call that "distinguished" performance.

We do appreciate your recognition of Caterpillar's long-standing commitment to a healthy world trade environment. Like Captain Dollar, we feel foreign trade provides opportunities to bring the peoples of the world closer together in peace and understanding.

We understand well the importance of a functioning, growing world trade system. About half of Caterpillar's sales are outside the United States.

Today, I'd like to talk about the world trade scene . . . from the viewpoint of someone who's out there trying to compete in it. I won't be painting a pretty picture. Massive trade imbalances exist, and trade-related tensions are threatening many relationships.

As a nation, we simply cannot afford to let the current trends continue. It's clearly in our interest to preserve the vigor and growth of the global trading system.

I believe it's within our power. But we had better start now.

It's traditional to use this forum to extol the benefits of free trade. I hope that tradition continues . . . as it will today.

Four years ago, I stood before you with a highly optimistic message. I spoke of "excitement in the air . . . excitement about restoring the economic vigor and competitive spirit of this nation."

I said we need to adapt to a changing world. We still do.

I said we need to remove barriers to exports. We still do.

And I said we need a free and open arena of international trade—in which companies from all nations compete on an equal basis. We still do.

Four years ago, I was worried that trouble was ahead in the form of growing international protectionism. There still is, and it's getting worse.

The free trade heritage in the United States is threatened . . . because companies that were the most competitive in the world a few years ago now struggle to stay competitive in the international marketplace.

As recently as 1980, the U.S. had a $5 billion trade surplus in manufactured goods. This year's trade deficit in manufactured goods is the largest contributor to a deepening national trade deficit.

Both consumer goods and automotive products have recorded growing trade deficits in their economic sectors.

In capital goods, the export surplus we enjoyed at the start of this decade has declined by two-thirds.

In 1980, U.S. machinery exports were nearly twice the dollar volume of imports. This year, exports are falling behind imports for the first time. Meanwhile, Japan's machinery exports are nearly six times imports.

In my own segment, construction machinery, U.S. exports increased 17 percent in the first half of this year. That was encouraging. But imports were up 127 percent over last year . . . and that's discouraging. Imports are growing seven times faster than exports.

In "high tech" manufacturing, the negative trend is even more pronounced than it is in capital goods—in spite of all that talk about high tech's role as America's salvation. The 1980 trade surplus in high tech goods has plunged by 75 percent.

The implications are major.

Our manufacturing industries have been the foundation for the nation's economic, political and military strength. It's true that our agricultural and service sectors are important, but we cannot sustain our world leadership without a growing, thriving manufacturing sector.

As American competitiveness declines, more and more of our industries are turning to protectionism. The recent list includes International Trade Commission cases involving steel, copper, machine tools, and more. Congress considered domestic content requirements for cars, restraints on steel imports, and wine quotas.

Only a few years ago, trade lawyers were the only people who talked about "upstream subsidies," "downstream dumping," and "industrial targeting." Today, most of us are familiar with the implications of these practices by our trading partners. These practices have increased protectionist pressures in this country.

Protectionist thrusts in the United States are becoming more sophisticated and more subtle. In labor negotiations, "job security" and "outsourcing" seem to get more attention than "wages" and "benefits." And we all should recognize that many approaches being used to achieve job security and restrain outsourcing are clearly protectionist.

Destructive conflict over protectionism separates good friends within the business community. At Caterpillar, we dealt with it first-hand when the steel and auto industries said they needed protection from imports to help their competitive position.

We said higher steel and labor costs would inevitably follow, and damage our company's competitive position. We wound up arguing publicly with other companies that are both major suppliers . . . and good customers.

Again and again, one man's protection is another man's poison. But as long as our country is losing ground in world competition, these kinds of squabbles are inevitable.

To deal with these problems, our nation needs a long-term commitment to an open international economic climate. Worldwide commerce promotes international economic stability and makes it possible for all the world to enjoy a rising standard of living.

We saw what protectionism can do to the standard of living during the Great Depression, 50 years ago. Those of us old enough to remember it don't care to see a rerun.

But perhaps our commitment to "free trade" can't be as pure . . . as doctrinaire . . . as unquestioning as it has been in the past.

The conclusion that free trade is good for your company and mine presumes that competitors from all countries have an equal chance of winning the business.

It's popular these days to talk about needing a "level playing field" so trade can prosper. I agree wholeheartedly. And I believe some important public policy changes will be needed to accomplish that leveling.

As we consider, those changes, each of us needs to look in the mirror at our own company's situation and make sure we have the right . . . the credibility . . . to call for dramatic action. Some American companies—including Caterpillar—face problems today because their own past decisions let costs get out of hand. If we refuse to deal with our internal problems we can't expect help with external problems.

We all know how to keep our companies competitive . . . staying on the cutting edge of technology in products and manufacturing . . . involving people in the decisions that affect them . . . innovative marketing . . . asset management . . . and what's been called a "bias for action," a willingness to assume more risk and respond more quickly to changing conditions.

Those approaches are included in Caterpillar's strategies. We face the toughest competition in our experience and we're dealing with it aggressively.

We're reducing costs—substantially, permanently, and relentlessly. We are emphasizing development of new and improved products. We intend to remain the industry leader in quality and value.

But if we want to stay king of the hill, the playing field of international trade has to be level.

There are many external conditions, beyond our immediate control, that we'd change if we could.

At the top of my list, and underlying all the others, is the continued lack of a consistent U.S. policy on investment and trade. Over and over, the United States makes domestic or foreign policy decisions with no apparent consideration of how those decisions will affect the ability of American companies to compete in world markets.

In my view, our competitive position in world trade should be a factor in virtually all U.S. government policy decisions. Obviously, it can't always be the controlling factor . . . but it should, at least, be considered.

The most important example of this problem is the lack of sensitivity to the impact of an overvalued dollar. I'm not sure whether to rejoice or despair at recent reports from Washington that a "subtle" change in administration policy has begun, designed to offset the impact of the strong dollar on export and import competition.

I regret that it took three years and 10 months to develop that sensitivity. I also regret that Don Regan recently repeated his old line about the dollar not being "overvalued" in a technical sense.

I say to the Treasury Secretary today, as I have many times in the past, that Americans out of work . . . exporters on the skids . . . and merchants losing sales to cheap imports don't give a damn about the technical niceties of currency alignments.

They care about their ability to compete. They care about their ability to survive!

The Council of Economic Advisors says the strong dollar is responsible for half of our trade deficit. And the Commerce Department says the dollar's strength contributed to the second quarter's current-account deficit of $24 billion.

The strength of the dollar is a competitive handicap in pricing products for the U.S. and third-country markets . . . and the flood of capital from abroad to fund the federal budget deficit has hindered foreign economic recovery and demand for U.S. products.

Our awesome deficits have helped create an insatiable appetite for capital. It's no accident that capital flows are overwhelming trade flows in determining exchange rate relationships.

Reduction of our debt has got to be a top priority in 1985. I share the general business community view that emphasis should be on the spending-cut side, but I'm not prepared to rule out possible tax increases as a way of dealing with the problem.

A related issue is the undervalued yen. That's a problem I've spoken about regularly for the past couple of years because it was . . . and I repeat, was . . . an orphan. No one seemed to care about it.

In the past year, the orphan found a home. President Reagan and Prime Minister Nakasone declared the yen/dollar problem a major bilateral irritant and committed both governments to action.

That commitment was fleshed out this May by Japan's agreement to undertake a number of key steps designed to internationalize the yen, liberalize capital flows, and provide access to the financial sector.

I believe Japan has displayed good faith by starting that undertaking. We don't expect quick results, but we're encouraged by the actions taken to date.

Clearly, there's more Japan must do. But it's also time for the United States to start fulfilling its part of the bargain by dealing effectively with the federal deficit, which contributes to high U.S. interest rates.

We must consider every available option to reduce the extraordinary misalignment between the dollar and other major currencies. As I've talked publicly about exchange rates over the past couple of years, I've always rejected devices like capital controls, import surcharges and restructuring of the monetary system.

Each of those cures has inherent problems. But my resolve is weakening. We've got to do something!

It's not too far-fetched to compare the situation to 1971, when President Nixon revolutionized our economic policy with a series of unilateral actions. The ultimate results included the 1973 Smithsonian Agreement, which "floated" the dollar in foreign exchange . . . the U.S. Trade Act of 1974 . . . and the Tokyo round of trade negotiations.

The impacts of those decisions have served us well for most of the last decade. But now the system is out of sync again and it needs some fine tuning, if not a major overhaul.

"Shock" treatment, of the magnitude that President Nixon applied, may be the only alternative for us if the trade imbalances persist.

Until the system is repaired, the U.S. must assertively enforce its unfair trade laws . . . and the principle of reciprocity in our trade relations. If our trade laws and their administration don't provide timely relief for clearly aggrieved industries, then we must improve them.

It shouldn't have taken such intense political pressure for the U.S. steel industry to get attention for its legitimate complaints about unfair trade practices, foreign steel industry subsidies, and dumping.

We also need export control policies that won't place us at a severe competitive disadvantage. Our nation's arrogant applications of trade restraints have disrupted domestic industry but barely raised a ripple in world events. It's time to face reality.

And, there is a need for a better system to assist employees displaced from the industries that have become non-competitive, temporarily or permanently. One response should be meaningful retraining for work in other industries, not just extended unemployment benefits.

All of these elements—and probably others—belong in a broadly conceived and broadly supported national policy to promote trade growth and respond decisively to any attempt at rigging the competitive game.

Today's extraordinary economic conditions call for extraordinary measures to preserve our competitiveness.

In my view, if our government is not prepared to take the necessary steps to keep America competitive, then protectionism may become the prescription of last resort we will all be forced to swallow.

I hope that day never comes. If it does, we'll be trading short-term advantage for long-term adversity. That trade's not free . . . it's expensive.

But your long-term prospects don't matter if you can't make it through the short term.

There's little solace in the slogan "free trader forever" if it's used as your epitaph.

Companies must prepare themselves to compete against all comers, adapting and changing as needed. There is no excuse . . . and no hope . . . for a business-as-usual attitude.

From our government, we must have fiscal responsibility. That means federal spending restraint . . . possibly higher taxes . . . and improved exchange-rate relationships. And we need assertive leadership in developing a set of international economic relationships that can put us back on the road to trade prosperity.

We can restore the balance of trade . . . create or restore millions of jobs . . . improve the chances for a sustained economic recovery . . . and heal some of the wounds that trade tensions have created among companies, trade unions and policy makers.

Let's have a trade policy that Robert Dollar would be proud of.●

TO ELIMINATE GENDER-BASED DISCRIMINATION—S. 86

● Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I am again pleased to be an original cosponsor of legislation to eliminate sex discrimination in the laws of the United States. S. 86 seeks, as did its predecessor in the 98th Congress (S. 501), to amend the 150 Federal laws identified by the Attorney General and the Senate Judiciary Committee as laws containing some form of unfair sex discrimination. Although S. 501 was unanimously approved by the Senate, no action was taken by the House of Representatives to enact it into law in the last Congress.

S. 86 amends several laws, particularly the Social Security Act and the Railroad Retirement Act, to guarantee equal benefits to all eligible recipients, regardless of sex. It amends other laws to make them gender-neutral and to conform them to existing practice and case law. A number of obsolete laws are simply repealed.

This bill's sponsor, our new majority leader, Senator DOLE, has stated the case for S. 86 very well:

> Though each of the laws to be amended may be of minimal impact, their cumulative effect is to imply an inferior or dependent status for women. Today, Americans overwhelmingly believe that men and women should be treated as equal partners in society. Our Nation's laws should reflect that fact, in both form and substance.

I urge my colleagues to join as cosponsors of S. 86 and to work for its early passage.

Thank you, Mr. President.●

A CALL TO CONSCIENCE FOR SOVIET JEWRY

● Mr. DURENBERGER. Mr. President, since 1976, Members of Congress have joined together in a Congressional Call to Conscience on behalf of the large number of Jews in the Soviet Union who suffer persecution. The precipitous decline in the number of Jews allowed to emigrate from the Soviet Union in the past 4 years is indeed disturbing. This is particularly so as it has been accompanied by a substantial increase in violence, persecution, and discrimination against Jews in the Soviet Union.

I am therefore pleased to join the Congressional Call to Conscience for the 99th Congress. I would strongly urge my colleagues to participate in this important human rights initiative. It is my understanding that we'll raise this issue on at least a weekly basis. Sadly, there is no shortage of victims of Soviet persecution. Even if each one of the 535 Members of Congress adopted 100 such victims, we would only begin to make a dent in the vast numbers of oppressed people in the Soviet Union. Nevertheless, our effort remains worthwhile and important.

Mikhail Elman was born in 1955 and is married to Dina Nayfeld. Misha and Dina have three children. He studied applied mathematics and later worked as a computer engineer. He first applied for the right to emigrate to Israel in 1979, but this request was refused by Soviet authorities without explanation. Following this application, Misha was dismissed from his engineering job. Later, he was able to find a job as an attendant in a public bathhouse in Leningrad.

On September 26, 1981, he and a friend were arrested and detained for 10 days for attempting to lay a wreath at the Babi Yar Memorial on the 40th anniversary of the massacre. In April 1982, Mikhail was brought before a Soviet court and charged with disobeying police orders. Three friends appeared on his behalf and he was fined 10 rubles.

On November 1, 1984, Mikhail was picked up in the street, driven to the militia offices, and pressured to give information against his refusenik friends. When he refused to do so, he was given a thorough beating and was told by Soviet security officials: "We'll put an end to religious activities." After 3 hours, he was forced to sign a pledge not to tell anyone of his treatment, and he was allowed home. Two days later, however, he was again picked up, again pressured to become an informer. When he refused, he was beaten again. On his release, the officer specifically mentioned his friends Yakov Gorodetsky and Leonid Rokhlin, and told Mikhail to warn them that they could expect "to be next in line for 'special treatment.'"

Dina Elman and her mother were given permission to leave the Soviet Union in February of 1983. After Dina married Kikhail, however, their request for exist visas was turned down. No reason for this refusal was given by Soviet officials. The Elmans live at 103 Suzdalsky Prospect, Apartment 55, Leningrad, R.S.F.S.R., U.S.S.R.

It is vitally important that free people in the West offer their support to all victims of persecution in the Soviet Union. The United States and its allies should raise the question of Soviet Human Rights violations in all bilateral and multilateral discussions with the Soviet Union. By doing this on a consistent and continuing basis, the Soviets will realize the depth and the breadth of our concern about the widespread violation of human rights in that country. It is my firm belief that such pressure will force the Soviets to come to their senses and will bring them to comply with the commitments that they made when they signed the Helsinki accords.●

WRITE TO VOTE

● Mr. PRYOR. Mr. President, I am proud to say that in Arkansas we have voters who are among the most enlightened anywhere in America. And we start them early.

Brian Keith Hudson, age 7, of West Helena, AR, won the "Write to Vote" national contest last fall that was sponsored by the Hospital Corporation of America for the children and grandchildren of hospital employees. Brian was recently in Washington with his parents as part of his prize for winning both the district and later the national contests.

Brian's essay is both enlightening and instructive. He says that voting, very simply, means freedom. And this basic definition is something all of us should keep in mind.

I want to congratulate Brian on his essay and on the timeliness of his message. I also want to thank the Hospital Corporation of America and Helena Hospital for sponsoring the contest that made possible Brian's contribution. They were determined to do everything in their power to combat voter apathy, and the results were impressive.

I ask that Brian's essay be printed complete in the RECORD at this point.

The essay follows:

WRITE TO VOTE

(By Brian Hudson, Desoto School, age 7)

When my mother first told me about this contest, I was not sure what voting really meant. Then my parents explained about the different countries and how they were governed. After hearing about the different countries, I think voting and being able to choose your own president is the best way.

Voting means freedom to me. In school we are studying about the freedoms that are in the constitution. If we could not vote, then we would not have one of our freedoms. The freedom to tell each other how we feel about something. If people did not vote then someone that was very powerful could take over and take away all our rights.

Voting is very important to America. If I was old enough to vote, I know who I would vote for. I would vote for —?— (that's my secret because I live in America.)●

INDEXATION OF INDIVIDUAL INCOME TAXES SHOULD BE A PERMANENT PART OF THE TAX LAW

● Mr. DURENBERGER. Mr. President, because Congress had the foresight in 1981 to enact legislation providing for the indexation of individual income taxes, and the wisdom not to modify it, many individual taxpayers will pay less Federal income taxes in 1985 than they would have paid if indexation had not been enacted. In the years to come, I doubt that many taxpayers will remember that the Economic Recovery Tax Act of 1981 provided the largest tax cut in history. However, I do expect that the 1981 Tax Act will be remembered as the law that added indexation to the Internal Revenue Code.

I strongly supported indexation when it was being considered in 1981, and today I am totally committed to its retention as a permanent part of the tax law. I believe that indexation was the most equitable provision of the 1981 Tax Act. The January 1, 1985, effective date for indexation was appropriate because of the phase-in of the 3-year individual tax cut that was enacted in the 1981 Tax Act.

The 1981 Tax Act provides for the indexation of the personal income tax brackets, the zero bracket amount and the personal exemption. The amount of the indexation for the calendar year—say 1986—will depend on the percentage by which the average Consumer Price Index for the preceding 12 months—ending in September 1985—exceeds the average CPI for the fiscal year ending September 1984. Thus, a new computation is made each year.

Under indexation, the tax rates are not changed but the amount of income subject to tax in the bracket will be adjusted according to the change in the CPI and rounded to the nearest $10. In the case of the zero bracket amount—the amount which is subtracted from total itemized deductions to determine the amount that the taxpayer may deduct from adjusted gross income—it will also be adjusted by the change in the CPI and rounded to the nearest $10. Similar annual adjustment will be made to the amount of the personal exemption.

Without indexation, inflation-boosted income pushes the taxpayer into higher tax brackets with progressively higher-marginal bracket rates. Indexation eliminates this bracket creep or the tax on inflation. This bracket creep is most unfair as it results in an unlegislated tax increase on the individual and a windfall to the Government. If taxes are to be increased, the Congress should pass the legislation and thereby, be responsible for the tax increase and accountable to their constituents.

Prior to the enactment of indexation in 1981, Congress attempted to deal with inflation-boosted income by making periodic changes to the tax laws. The official explanation of the staff of the Joint Committee on Taxation for adopting indexation in 1981 is as follows:

The Congress believed that "automatic" tax increases resulting from the effects of inflation were unfair to taxpayers, since their tax burden as a percentage of income could increase during intervals between tax reduction legislation, with an adverse effect on incentives to work and invest. In addition, the federal government was provided with an automatic increase in its aggregate revenue, which in turn created pressure for further spending.

The Treasury Department recently announced that for calendar year 1985, the personal exemption, the zero bracket amount and all marginal tax rate brackets will be indexed or increased approximately 4.1 percent. Treasury states that nearly 80 percent of the 1985 tax savings under the indexation will benefit taxpayers earning less that $50,000 a year. For 1985, the personal exemption will be increased from the present level of $1,000 to $1,040. The zero bracket amount will be increased from $2,300 to $2,390 for single returns and from $3,400 to $3,540 for joint returns. Treasury estimates that the tax saving in 1985 for a median-income family of four—$30,120 in 1984—will be $84 and if inflation stays at 4 percent over the next few years, indexation will save this median income family $2,576 of taxes for the years 1958 through 1990.

Indexation is of the greatest benefits to the low- and moderate-income taxpayers because they are the ones who are pushed into higher tax brackets. High-income taxpayers are already at the top tax bracket. Treasury states that nearly 80 percent of the tax savings under the indexation will benefit taxpayers earning less than $50,000 a year. Indexation is such a fair and equitable concept that one has to question why it was not added to our tax laws years ago.

For many years, I have been a strong supporter of indexation. Almost 2 years before the 1981 Tax Act, I introduced on November 2, 1979 a bill (S. 1974) which provided for inflation adjustments for certain provisions of the code. One part of my bill would have adjusted annually personal exemptions, zero bracket amount and the tax tables to reflect percentage increases in the CPI—the same items adjusted under the 1981 Tax Act. In my November 2, 1979 statement accompanying S. 1974, I stated that:

> The bill will . . . take the government's profit out of inflation . . . Indexing will give taxpayers the relief they need.

In July 1981, when the Senate was considering indexation, I spoke at length on the merits of indexation, and I referred to indexation as "the single most important step we can take to provide permanent relief to inflation—and tax-burdened Americans".

Soon after indexation was added to the law, there were a number of suggestions for its modification or repeal. In March 1983, the Washington Post published by op-ed remarks entitled "We Need Tax Indexing" in which I supported indexation and I referred to how the tax indexation system was working in my State of Minnesota. I concluded that:

> Indexing will bring fiscal responsibility and accountability back to the federal government as well.

I ask that the entire texts of my November 2, 1979 remarks, my July 1981 remarks, and my March 1983 remarks be printed in their entirety in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD at the conclusion of my statement.

There have been a number of thoughtful articles written on the merits of indexation, and I believe the following articles deserve your attention:

First, "Why Tax Indexing Must Not Be Repealed" by Martin Feldstein, former Chairman of the Council of Economic Advisers, published in the Wall Street Journal for March 1, 1983;

Second, "A Way to Keep the Government Honest" by Senator BOB DOLE, Republican of Kansas, and recently elected majority leader of the Senate, published in the New York Times for March 6, 1983.

Third, "Indexed Taxes and Honesty" by George F. Will, published in the Washington Post for May 3, 1983; and Fourth, "Don't Derail Indexing" by Donald T. Regan, Secretary of the Treasury, published in the New York Times for January 23, 1984.

I ask that the entire texts of the four articles referred to above be printed in their entirety in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD at the conclusion of my statement.

The principle of indexation has survived in our tax laws without change for the past 4 years and it has now gone into effect. In all probability there will be additional efforts to modify or repeal indexation. Those who have thoughts about eroding indexation should know that I feel strongly that it should be a permanent part of the tax law. It is an equitable solution to solving the tax burden for individuals caused by inflation. Indexation works—let us keep it.

S. 1974. A bill to amend the Internal Revenue Code to provide for inflation adjustment; to the Committee on Finance.

TAX INDEXING

Mr. DURENBERGER. Mr. President, today I am introducing a bill to take inflation out of the Internal Revenue Code for the individual income tax, capital gains tax, corporate income tax brackets, and depreciation.

It is clear that our present tax system must be corrected. The system that has evolved over the years places virtually all the burden of inflation on taxpayers, while Government reaps the benefits. In the current era of double-digit inflation, that burden is breaking the backs of many. We cannot sit back and do nothing. Taxpayers are falling farther and farther behind the cost of living and Government spending, funded in large part by the windfall inflation tax, continues virtually unabated.

The fact that Government is the major beneficiary of inflation was emphasized in an article Monday in the New York Times. The Times reported that revenue in relation to the gross national product will rise from 20.5 percent this fiscal year to 21.3 percent next year and 22 percent in 1982. The 1982 ratio will reach a record high, surpassing the peak set in World War II.

An example will point out Government's inflation windfall. Assuming a cost-of-living wage increase of 10 percent per year during the next 3 fiscal years. Government will reap a windfall profit of $13 billion in 1980, $26 billion in 1981, and a staggering $40 billion in 1982. This undeserved revenue, due directly to inflation, will be at the expense of individual taxpayers.

The massive transfer of purchasing power from consumers to the Government, in an attempt to balance the budget, is a true windfall profit. It is unconscionable that the same folks who have created double-digit inflation and caused the American public to suffer from the ravages of inflation by misguided fiscal and monetary policies are now reaping a windfall profit for such policies.

What are these misguided policies? In recent years, we have increased the demand for goods and services by increasing spending, allegedly cutting taxes, and creating money faster than ever. We have had the largest deficits in history. We assumed that supply would automatically rise to satisfy the demand. This policy has not worked. Output has not responded. Output has not responded because Government has restrained it with higher taxes and higher regulatory costs. Government has increased demand and throttled supply resulting in double-digit inflation.

Inflation pushes people into higher tax brackets. Our so-called tax cuts in recent years have not kept pace with inflation, especially if we include social security taxes. The marginal taxes taken out of each cost-of-living increase have reached amazing levels. Even middle income taxpayers now face tax rates of 40 percent to 50 percent on each additional dollar earned.

The high and rising marginal tax burdens have reduced the rate of return to labor. There has been no increase in real after-tax-spendable-earnings for the average worker since 1965. Extra effort is taxed at record rates. Workers have substituted leisure, early retirement, and nontaxable fringe benefits for added work and added pay. A graphic demonstration of the impact of inflation on wages and taxes was published in a monthly economic letter of Citibank:

Take the example of a family of four that earned $15,000 in 1955 and suppose that its income has kept pace with inflation during the ensuing 21 years: that is, its gross income buys neither more nor less in 1976 than it did in 1955. If, for the moment, we ignore changes in the tax law so we can get a clear picture of the pure effects of inflation, the equivalent of a $15,000 income in 1955 is $32,900 in 1976, an increase of 120 percent. But taxes on those equivalent incomes rise from $1,540 to $6,600, a 330-percent increase. This happens because the family's marginal tax rate—the highest rate at which an extra dollar of its income is taxed—increased from 22 to 36 percent. The combination of inflation and tax progressivity lowered the family's real after-tax income by 11 percent even though real gross income was constant.

Capital gains are another area where the Tax Code levies a tax on illusory gains due to inflation. Capital gains have been eroded by inflation to such an extent that most reported gains are really losses when adjusted for inflation. In a study done for the National Bureau of Economic Research by Martin Feldstein and Joel Slemrod which analyzed 1973 tax returns, the authors found that individuals paid taxes on $4.5 billion in nominal capital gains made from the sale of stock. But after adjusting for the increases in the Consumer Price Index since the stock was purchased, the study found that the sellers actually had a real capital loss of nearly $1 billion.

The process by which phantom windfalls tranform real capital losses into gain is also strikingly apparent in the purchase and sale of a personal residence. Assuming that we could lower inflation and keep it constant at a 6-percent rate for future years, a family that bought a home in 1977 for $40,000 and kept it for 20 years would have to receive $130,000 upon its sale in 1997 in order to receive back their initial investment. In that event, this family would owe a capital gain tax on $54,000 even though the real property value has not increased.

Even more dramatic is the assumption of an inflation rate of 12.2 percent. The $40,000 house in 1977 would have to be sold in 1997 for $400,000 in order to break even, and the family would face taxes on a capital gain of $216,000. While the family may defer its tax liability by buying another home, the potential tax liability remains.

Mr. President, another study by the National Bureau of Economic Research reported that the effect of inflation with the existing tax law was to raise the 1977 tax burden on corporate income by more than $32 billion. This is an amount equal to 69 percent of the real after-tax income of the nonfinancial corporate sector.

Mr. President, the above examples clearly show the need for legislation to adjust certain portions of the Internal Revenue Code for inflation.

The bill I am introducing has four provisions:

First. Individual rate tables, the personal exemption and the zero bracket amount are adjusted annually to reflect the precentage increase of the Consumer Price Index for the current year ending September 30, to that for the year ended September 30, 1978.

Second. Section 11 of the Internal Revenue Code provides a graduated corporate income tax for small businesses of: 17 percent on the first $25,000 of taxable income; 20 percent on the second $25,000; 30 percent on the third $25,000; 40 percent on the fourth $25,000; and 46 percent on the taxable income over $100,000.

This provision would adjust the corporate tax brackets for small businesses by the percentage by which the GNP deflator for the preceding calendar year exceeds the GNP deflator for calendar year 1978.

Third. For the purposes of determining gain or loss on the sale of capital assets such as stock, tangible personal property, and real estate, the basis of the property is adjusted by the percent increase in the Consumer Price Index from the date of purchase.

Fourth. For purposes of determining the allowance for depreciation, the annual deduction is adjusted for inflation or replacement cost of the asset, whichever is lower.

Mr. President, the continuing problem of inflation and prospects for future inflation requires the above adjustments to the Internal Revenue Code to protect the American people from inflation induced tax increases. Inflation has been defined as a hidden tax because it is a tax that can be imposed without specific legislation. It has been labeled as "truly taxation without representation" but I call it taxation with representation as long as we, the elected representatives of the people, allow it to continue. It is also a true windfall profits tax accruing to the Government at the expense of the taxpayer.

Some opponents have said indexing is a concession of defeat in our battle against inflation. That argument ignores the point and the purpose of indexing. This legislation will assure people that they will be required to pay taxes at no more than the statutory rate.

The bill will also take the Government's profit out of inflation. Indexing will not curb inflation. We must take immediate action toward that end. But, while we are working on a remedy, we cannot allow the patient to die of the disease. Indexing will give taxpayers the relief they need.

[From the Congressional Record, July 15, 1981]

TAX INDEXING

Mr. DURENBERGER. Mr. President, none of the tax reform measures we have considered this week are as desperately needed, or as long overdue, as tax indexing. Passage of the Finance Committee amendment is the single most important step we can take to provide permanent relief to inflation- and tax-burdened Americans.

Tax indexing is nothing more than a windfall profits tax on Government. It proceeds from the philosophy that any windfall income created by inflation should remain with the income earner and taxpayer as a buffer against rising prices, rather than passing to the Federal Government. And this is a sound philosophy.

Under the pressure of consistently high inflation, the present tax system has demonstrated built-in inequities and an inherent tendency to fuel the inflationary cycle. Individuals receiving cost-of-living wage increases are penalized by a tax system that simply thrusts them into higher brackets.

As a result, these individuals often suffer actual loss of income through the losses in real dollar purchasing power. They end up falling behind the rise in living costs, forcing them to rob their savings and investments to feed, clothe, and shelter their families. This fuels the desire for even higher wage increases in the next round of bargaining, but the results remain the same. Without indexing, the present tax system guarantees progressive erosion of real income, at the same time it spurs inflationary psychology.

In the absence of indexing, that system inevitably makes Government, one of the primary causes of inflation, also the main beneficiary of inflation. For each 1 percent rise in the Consumer Price Index, Federal tax receipts rise by approximately 1.4 percent. This process cuts deeply into savings and investment, disrupting the balance of the economic system as a whole. It also permits Government to profit from annual tax increases without the necessity of congressional actions—a paradox in this era of increasing demand for Government accountability. It is, in effect, a 1981 version of taxation without representation. Tax increases should neither be hidden nor automatic. Unless Congress chooses otherwise, the inflation dividend should remain in private hands where it can be saved, invested, or used to mitigate the human hardship of inflation.

Frankly, Mr. President, I find it difficult to understand the argument that tax indexing is somehow a concession to inflation. On the contrary, tax indexing does nothing more than redistribute the tax implications of inflation, so that consumers no longer bear all of the burden, while Government reaps all of the benefits. In fact, there is empirical evidence that tax indexing has a positive fiscal effect in slowing down the increase in Government spending.

In Canada, where tax indexing became national policy in 1974, real dollar spending by the Canadian Parliament had been increasing at an annual rate of 15.9 percent prior to enactment of the indexing law. In the year following its enactment, that growth rate decreased to 10.2 percent, and it fell progressively over the next 3 years to a rate of 2.1 percent. In my own home State of Minnesota, during the years 1971-81, State spending grew at an average rate of 23.8 percent per biennium. Since we indexed our tax system, State spending has been increasing at the rate of only 14 percent. In terms of dollars, indexing will save Minnesota taxpayers over $4 billion during the next two bienniums.

What has happened, Mr. President, is what should be happening all over this country. This legislative session, the legislators came to the State capital in Minnesota and they reduced recommended spending by almost $1 billion. They got it right down to the hardcore of what they absolutely had to do to meet the needs of the people of Minnesota.

Then they went over and looked into the anticipated tax pot for the coming biennium and they found they were $503 million short.

The ended up having to increase State taxes to accomplish it.

The next time, I suspect they will find a way to reduce that spending even more by finding better ways to deliver public service.

So, clearly, in my opinion, the empirical evidence in at least one State and the figures I have cited show that by forcing revenue projections to be scaled down, tax indexing actually induces fiscal responsibility by placing a restraining effect on budgetary decisionmaking.

After a thorough examination of the nine States that have indexed their tax systems since 1978, the Advisory Commission on Intergovernmental Relations concluded that "we can draw one inference with a fairly high degree of confidence—indexation has forced State policymakers to take a somewhat harder look at their expenditure priorities than would have been the case under a nonindexed system."

That is what indexing is all about.

But, Mr. President, the best way to gauge the impact of an unindexed tax system is to measure its impact on individual taxpayers. For example, take the case of a family of four in Minnesota where one parent contributes 70 percent of the family's income while the other contributes 30 percent.

If the combined income of that family was $25,000 in 1979, and if the income kept pace with inflation through cost-of-living allowances, the family by 1981 would have lost $206 in purchasing power if the State tax system were not indexed. More important, with the effects of Federal taxes taken into account, the purchasing power of that family would be reduced by over $500 in just 2 years. In other words, inflation and "bracket creep" have left them with substantially less purchasing power despite cost-of-living wage increases. However, at the same time, the Government—which must share a major part of the blame for causing inflation—now has a lot more of this family's money to spend as it wishes.

Nationally, an employee receiving a 10-percent pay increase to offset a 10-percent inflation rate will be required to pay 16 percent more in Federal and State taxes. Thus, the Government benefits from a 6-percent increase in the employee's tax liability, while the employee loses purchasing power—the power to buy food, the power to buy shelter, the power to buy clothing, the power to buy an education for his family.

Mr. President, the indexing concept has been endorsed by such diverse sources as the American Enterprise Institute, the Christian Science Monitor, and the New York Times. In one form or another, it has become national policy in Brazil, Canada, Israel, the Netherlands, Argentina, Denmark, France, and Luxembourg. In this country, the States of Minnesota, Arizona, California, Colorado, Iowa, Montana, Oregon, South Carolina, and Wisconsin have indexed their tax systems to some degree.

Adopting tax indexing on a national level will minimize the short-term effects of inflation while we treat its causes with long-term remedies. And minimizing inflationary impact on human needs is, by any standard, the principal goal behind our anti-inflation policy.

The American people are demanding indexing, and after 2 years of double digit inflation, they need its relief as quickly as we can possibly provide it. So I speak as strongly as I can in favor of this amendment.

WE NEED TAX INDEXING

(By Dave Durenberger)

The 1981 Economic Recovery Tax Act is a historic bill. For better or worse, it is a major driving force in shaping our economy. The magnitude of individual tax relief through cuts in marginal tax rates and the reordering of priorities to encourage greater business productivity will be key stimulants in the economic recovery finally under way. As important as these provisions are, though, I'm convinced that in the long run, indexing inflation out of the federal income system will be seen as the bill's most significant achievement.

Indexing is the key that locks other accomplishments into place. Without indexing, the American taxpayer would have no guarantees beyond the three years of the individual tax rate cuts. Without indexing, we'd have a tax system that would be no more predictable than it was before the 1981 Economic Recovery Tax Act. Indexing makes our tax system more fair and our government more accountable.

An unindexed progressive income tax is a boon only to government. Interacting with inflation, such a system increases government revenues faster than the rate at which inflation increases taxpayers' incomes. In other words, government gets an automatic tax increase, while taxpayers get less real after-tax income as inflated incomes are taxed at higher average rates. The result: government continually extracts a greater proportion of taxpayers' real income for its coffers.

My own state of Minnesota illustrates the point. Like the federal government, Minnesota has a steeply progressive income tax, steeper than most other states'. In 1972, a typical taxpayer with a gross income of $20,000 paid 7.9 percent of his gross income to the state in income taxes. By 1978, assuming that his income increased at exactly the rate of inflation to $31,855, the interaction of inflation and the unindexed progressive Minnesota income tax had increased his average tax rate to 8.7 percent, even though his real income remained constant.

Let the record be clear: Minnesota's severe fiscal problems are not a result of indexing. It is true that for the 1980-81 biennium, indexing cost Minnesota approximately $317 million in lost revenues; in the current 1982-83 budget cycle, the estimated cost is about $543 million. But over the four years, this $860 million has been fully taken into account by budget restraint cutting programs, containing their growth or looking for better, more cost-efficient ways to meet the needs of people.

Something else happened independently of indexing to create fiscal stress on the state after 1979. Both the national and state economies fell far short of their expected performance, and so the drop in state revenues was over and above the expected and planned-for decreases due to indexing. This additional fall-off in revenues is what spawns Minnesota's continuing fiscal troubles. It has absolutely nothing to do with indexing. It has everything to do with a weak economy.

Another curious argument is that indexing is somehow a sneaky way to shift reliance away from the progressive income tax and onto the regressive sales tax. Again, the Minnesota experience, when fully understood, shows exactly the opposite. When state legislators in Minnesota had to raise additional revenues last year, competing proposals to raise the sales tax or raise the income tax were openly debated in the state legislature. The governor recommended increasing the income tax—already the highest in the nation in several brackets. But thousands of Minnesotans contacted their state legislators, and, in the end, an increase in the income tax was soundly rejected, while a 1 percent increase in the sales tax was approved.

This was certainly a more open way to increase taxes than under the previous unindexed system, when tax rates were automatically increased by inflation, and revenue rolled into the state treasury without a single public official's being accountable for a single public decision. Indexing restored rather than destroyed, honesty in Minnesota fiscal policy. It will do the same at the federal level.

To see the fiscal irresponsibility bred by an unindexed progressive income tax, one need only look to Minnesota over the 10 years prior to indexing. The state income tax served as a great money machine for the state government. To make matters worse, the legislature also put in place a well-known mechanism to dispense the money as fast as it came in: entitlement programs that do not have to be voted on each year but automatically send out the money. The state of Minnesota was on full automatic pilot, and on a collision course.

The entitlement with the largest appetite in Minnesota is the real property tax circuit-breaker, the Homestead Tax Credit. While the income tax levied hidden tax increases annually, the circuit-breaker bestowed highly visible—and politically valuable—so-called "tax relief" to homeowners and renters. This tax credit was continually increased until now Minnesota property taxpayers pay only about 42 percent of their levied property tax; the state of Minnesota pays the rest. Of course, this grew far beyond true tax relief, into a targeted political payoff.

Finally, Minnesota's experience with indexing explodes the myth that it hurts the low- to moderate-income taxpayers while giving a break to the rich. At lower income levels, tax brackets are much narrowed, meaning that inflation propels those taxpayers into a higher bracket much more readily than those already in a higher and wider bracket.

Indexing is designed to correct this "bracket creep." But since high-income individuals are already in the highest tax bracket, they do not suffer from bracket creep in the first place, so indexing gives them no special aid. Furthermore, taking into account the erosion of fixed-dollar deductions and credits as well, there is no doubt that indexing the Minnesota income tax granted greater relief to lower income levels.

For those who support ever-increasing spending through the public sector as a basic philosophy of government, indexing no doubt causes great concern. Indexing eliminates the part of the system that most facilitates and encourages the growth of government.

On the other hand, if one supports the notion that taxing and spending decisions should be made explicitly through the legislative process on a periodic basis, then indexing in Minnesota is having exactly the effect one would hope. Indexing will bring fiscal responsibility and accountability back to the federal government as well.

INDEXED TAXES AND HONESTY

(By George F. Will)

Before Congress enacted indexation of the income tax system, to take effect in 1985, Rep. Barber Conable (R-N.Y.) visited Canada to see how indexation was viewed there. Politicians told him: "Don't do it—you only get credit for it once." But taxpayers thought indexing was, in Conable's words, "the greatest thing since pearl-button spats."

Many Democrats (and a few liberal Republicans) seem determined to make repeal of indexation their principal contribution to social thought in 1983, thereby establishing the contrast between the parties that the president wants for 1984. He has the votes to sustain a veto of any repeal, but Democrats seem duty bound to try. Their budget proposal calls for $265 billion in new revenues through 1988, but the only revenue-raising measures Democrats are eager to discuss are repeal of the third year of the tax cut, and of indexation. Repeal of indexation would raise $90 billion, one-third of the Democrats' total new revenues—assuming what cannot be assumed: an inflation rate of only 4.5 percent. If inflation is higher than that there is a gusher of revenues.

Indexation adjusts brackets to compensate for inflation. It prevents "bracket creep," whereby inflation floats taxpayers into higher brackets so that their real tax burdens increase faster than their real incomes. It denies government a revenue windfall from the inflation government causes. Indexation determines the mode, not the level, of taxation. It means tax increases must be voted, not left to inflation. It means Congress cannot get credit every few years for tax cuts that merely reduce taxes to what they were before the last few years of inflation.

Indexation, although Reagan's most consequential domestic policy change, was not part of his original proposals. It bubbled up from the Republican fermentation in the 1970s, from line soldiers like Rep. Bill Gradison of Ohio.

Conable says that in 18 years in Congress he has seen five major income tax cuts and only one temporary surtax increase. The result of all this "reducing"? Federal revenues have risen from about $100 billion to $620 billion. Some of that has been due to real economic growth and social-insurance taxes. But, Conable says, the growth of government has been financed substantially by inflation—by "bracket creep."

By favoring repeal of indexation and cancellation of the third installment of the tax cut (due in July), Democrats forfeit their pose as the party of "fairness." If you earn $200,000, the third-year cut is just 5 percent of your benefit from the entire Reagan cut. But if you earn $25,000, the third year is 40 percent of your total cut. In fact, because of Social Security tax increases and bracket creep, if the third year of the cut were eliminated, only the wealthy would have received, on balance, a tax reduction. Furthermore, indexation is, Conable says, the populist issue where the populists are right: indexation offers nothing for the wealthy, who already are in the top bracket.

Many legislators rejected the president's proposal for a "standby" tax that would be automatically triggered a few years hence if budgetary conditions are bad. Opponents said, reasonably, that such a tax would be an abdication of legislative control. Those legislators should not vote to repeal indexation and leave the blind force of inflation as the nation's principal taxing power. Opponents of indexation say repeal is needed to shrink the deficit. But repeal cannot substantially reduce the deficit unless inflation is re-ignited. Is re-ignition an implied Democratic proposal?

Some conservatives supporting indexation are interested less in equity for taxpayers or governmental due process than in putting sand in the gears of government. They still believe what Reagan's experience refutes—the idea that you can suppress spending by suppressing revenues. But what really shrinks when revenues fall is support for the most important item on the conservative agenda—rearmament.

There is cynicism all around this issue. Many businessmen want indexation repealed because they are afraid their taxes will be raised if we adopt the novel practice of having taxes raised by the legislature, consciously, rather than by inflation, surreptitiously. Liberals who want government to grow and conservatives who say they do not (they do not count the Defense Department as part of government) share a cynicism: they assume Congress will not have the courage to raise taxes by candid action.

Those of us who believe the nation is undertaxed, given the bills it must pay, but who also support indexation as a step toward more honest and intelligent government, thereby acquire a duty. It is the duty to help create a constituency for a kind of courage Congress has not had to show when counting on inflation to generate revenues. Certainly a new era of legislative life begins in 1985: indexing, unlike pearl-button spats, will be permanent.

[From the Wall Street Journal, Mar. 1, 1983]

WHY TAX INDEXING MUST NOT BE REPEALED

(By Martin Feldstein)

The most important legislative battle this year will be the attempt to repeal the indexing of the personal income tax that is now scheduled to begin in 1985. Although tax indexing may seem at first to be a rather technical tax matter, it actually holds the key to controlling the future growth of government spending and to preventing a resurgence of spiraling inflation. The long-term success or failure of Ronald Reagan's economic program is likely to hinge more on retaining tax indexing than on any other piece of legislation.

In practice, an indexed tax system prevents inflation from pushing individuals into higher tax brackets and increasing the share of income taken in taxes. This is achieved by increasing each of the bracket points by the rate of inflation during the previous year. For example, in 1984 the 18% tax bracket will include income between $16,000 and $20,200. If consumer prices rise by 5% in the year ending Oct. 1, 1984, the 18% tax bracket for 1985 would be adjusted to the range from $16,800 to $21,210. Indexing would also raise the personal exemption from $1,000 to $1,050.

The repeal of indexing would mean that bracket creep would raise taxes higher and higher, permitting Congress to finance ever greater amounts of government spending without having to vote explicitly for any increase in tax rates. The repeal of indexing would permit Congress to reduce the budget deficit over time without any cuts in government spending by just waiting while tax receipts grow and grow.

TAXES WOULD BE HIGHER

Even with inflation declining gradually over the next few years as the administration forecasts, the repeal of indexation would raise tax revenue by $17 billion in 1986, $30 billion in 1987, $44 billion in 1988 and ever higher amounts in later years. A $44 billion tax increase in 1988 would mean that the repeal of indexing had raised taxes by more than 10%. And after a decade of inflation at just 4% a year, taxes without indexing would be 25% higher than if indexing is retained.

Of course, a higher rate of inflation would mean more bracket creep and thus a bigger tax increase each year. If inflation averaged 6.5% for the next five years, the extra tax revenue in 1988 would be about $80 billion instead of $44 billion. And a replay of the inflation experience of the 6.5% in 1985 to 13.5% in 1988—would raise tax receipts by about $120 billion more in 1988 if the tax system is not indexed.

The repeal of indexing would thus give Congress a strong incentive to pursue inflationary policies. With indexing gone, spiraling inflation would generate a surge of tax revenues that could finance greater government spending while permitting Congress the political luxury of voting occasional "tax cuts" that actually failed to offset inflation but provided a framework for further income redistribution.

Many financial investors and others would interpret the repeal of indexing as an indication that inflation would soon be on the rise. This change in the expected rate of inflation would raise interest rates, especially long-term interest rates on bonds and mortgages. Higher interest rates could threaten the recovery in housing and other interest-sensitive sectors and possibly bring the incipient recovery in the economy as a whole to a premature end.

Those who want to repeal indexing frequently wrap themselves in the cloak of fiscal responsibility and argue that "with the large budget deficits that we now face, we cannot afford an indexed tax system." What they should say is that the large budget deficits in future years mean that we must either cut spending or raise taxes or both. The administration's budget calls for a balanced package of spending cuts and revenue increase, including a standby tax equal to 1% of GNP that will go into effect in October 1985 unless very rapid economic growth between now and then had reduced the deficit to less than 2.5% of GNP.

If tax revenue must be raised, the repeal of indexing isn't a satisfactory substitute for an explicit tax increase. Because the repeal of indexing is a hidden way of increasing taxes, it removes the pressure to choose between spending cuts and more taxes. And unlike voting an explicit tax increase, repealing indexing doesn't provide a fixed amount of additional tax revenue but starts a money machine that will squeeze more and more money from taxpayers in the years ahead. The repeal of indexing is politically tempting to many without explicitly increasing taxes. But it is the very opposite of responsible budgeting.

A common alternative rationale for repealing indexing is given by those who mistakenly believe that the combination of indexed benefits and indexed taxes inevitably produces budget deficits because "indexing raises benefits but reduces taxes." This argument is wrong because it misrepresents what indexing is all about. The indexing of benefits means that benefits just keep pace with inflation. The indexing of tax rates means that tax receipts don't rise faster than inflation through bracket creep. With complete indexing, inflation doesn't alter the real value of either benefits or taxes and therefore doesn't increase or decrease the real value of the deficit.

There are finally those who claim that they don't want to repeal indexing but just to postpone it for a year or two to help shrink the budget deficit. In reality, postponing indexing would have relatively little effect on future budget deficits. Slipping the starting date for indexing to 1986 would only raise an extra $12 billion in 1988. It is hard to avoid the suspicion that those who advocate postponement believe that if indexing is postponed once, it will be postponed again and again until it is eventually repealed. It is critically important to start indexing on schedule in 1985 because once the Ameican taxpayers experience indexing it will be here to stay.

If indexing were repealed, the resulting tax increases would be relatively greatest for the lowest income taxpayers. It is the lowest income taxpayer who benefits most from the indexing of the $1,000 personal exemption and the $3,400 zero bracket amount. In addition, since the tax brackets are narrower at lower incomes, bracket creep is more severe. Eliminating indexing would cause the 1985 tax liability of those with incomes under $10,000 to rise by more than 9% while the tax liability of those with incomes over $100,000 would rise by less than 2%.

The liberals who want to repeal indexing are unconcerned about this increase in the tax burden on low-income taxpayers. revenue that would result from de-indexing would permit Congress to vote further tax cuts for these lower income groups that would more than offset the effect of bracket creep on their tax liabilities. Tax reform would thus be deflected from a proper concern about incentives and simplification and would be focused instead an annual debates about egalitarian redistribution.

NO NATURAL CONSTITUENCY

The current congressional discussion about the repeal of indexing is counterproductive in several ways. By raising the possibility that indexing might be repealed, it increases the risk of high inflation in future years and thereby keeps current long-term interested rates higher than they should be. By focusing attention on the indexing issue, Congress avoids facing the difficult decisions about the control of spending and about the explicit tax changes that must eventually be made as part of this year's budget process.

Unfortunately, despite the critical importance of the indexing issue, it doesn't generate much pressue on Congress from individuals or from representative groups. While proposed policies that would affect a segment of the population often induce intensive lobbying activity, a major subject like indexing that influences the entire economy doesn't have a natural constituency. There is therefore the danger that Congress won't recognize how important indexing is to the public both now and in the future.

President Reagan strongly supports indexing as a central feature of his tax program. He has said clearly that he will veto any legislation that would repeal indexing or postpone its starting date. The president believes that an unindexed tax system is fundamentally dishonest. The repeal of indexing would eliminate political accountability and encourage wasteful government spending. It would make greater inflation an aid to politicians and an extra burden to taxpayers. It would initiate a continuous battle over the distribution of the tax burden.

The indexing of the personal income tax is the most fundamental and far-reaching aspect of Ronald Reagan's tax program. It must not be repealed.

DON'T DERAIL INDEXING

(By Donald T. Regan)

WASHINGTON.—Income-tax indexing, one of the most important aspects of the Economic Recovery Tax Act of 1981, is scheduled to take effect in 11 months. This provision is both fair and fiscally responsible. It is imperative that Congress refrain from interfering with indexing—in a misguided attempt to lower Federal deficits—through repeal or revision.

Instead of attacking overspending, which is the true cause of the deficit, some members of Congress would prefer that indexing not take effect—and thus continue to profit from inflation at the taxpayers' expense.

Without indexing, we will continue to see automatic, non-legislated tax increases caused by "bracket creep." This is the process by which unsuspecting taxpayers are shoved into higher tax brackets because of inflation. It raises tax liabilities as a percent of income even when real income does not rise. Currently, because of this country's graduated tax system, every 10 percent rise in aggregate prices and wages pushes taxpayers' Federal income tax up 17 percent.

Indexing is designed to counteract bracket creep by adjusting tax rates to inflation, allowing higher taxes only when real income gains are made. Under indexing, all tax rate schedules (including the zero bracket amount) will be adjusted by Dec. 15 each year to reflect any increase in the Consumer Price Index. The $1,000 personal exemption will also be adjusted to reflect increases in the index.

Yet some legislators are growing nervous, and as the time when indexing will take effect draws near, we may see attempts in Congress to revise or scuttle the policy. The reason for this nervousness is plain enough: many legislators realize that indexing will deprive them of the built-in tax increases that bracket creep automatically provides. They are also aware that if indexing goes into effect as scheduled, they will have to change their free-spending ways unless they are ready to vote on the record, subject to the electorate's judgment, for new tax increases.

Repealing indexing, or revising it to water it down, would have serious long-term consequences for the entire United States economy. Excessive Federal spending lies at the core of the economic problems in this country. If lawmakers know they can count on continued, easy revenue increases through bracket creep, they will have little incentive to change their spending practices. And the tax-spend-re-elect cycle will continue. Inflation is the key here. The higher the rate of inflation, the faster tax revenues accrue to the Federal Government. This is why some legislators (to the extent it is politically feasible) would favor and even welcome some degree of inflation.

Besides its importance to the economy, tax indexing is desirable simply because it is fair. Polls show that taxpayers continue to be deeply concerned about not only the growing tax burden but also about questions of whether the tax system is equitable.

Moreover, indexing is perhaps of greatest importance to lower-bracket taxpayers, since inflation forces incomes to rise fastest through the bottom tax brackets. In addition, personal exemptions and the zero bracket amount are large relative to total income in the lower brackets. Indexing will prevent these exemptions from losing their real value and won't allow inflation to push the very poor onto the tax rolls.

The importance of indexing is illustrated in the following example. Our estimates show that inflation-induced bracket creep will cause income tax increases totaling almost $100 billion for fiscal years 1985 through 1988, if indexing is not in effect. This is $100 billion collected in taxes without a single vote being cast in Congress. Taxation without representation was a primary reason for one American revolution. But indexing is itself another American revolution—this time, a revolution in the economic thinking of both Congress and the taxpayers.

Opponents have said that by reducing Federal tax receipts, indexing will drive deficits up even more. This argument is mathematically faulty and demonstrates the free spenders' refusal to concede that the problem is excessive outlays, not inadequate revenues. Nor would indexing cause additional shortfalls in revenues earmarked for programs that themselves are adjusted for inflation. Additional revenues would accrue at the same level of inflation.

This Administration promotes indexing as a cornerstone to its tax program. No one can argue that indexing is inequitable or irresponsible. To American taxpayers, the burden of bracket creep is no less real than a legislated tax increase. For these reasons, opponents of indexing will inevitably be on the defensive. And whether the smokescreen arguments of the opposition actually prevail may well be determined in the voting booth.

A WAY TO KEEP THE GOVERNMENT HONEST

(By Bob Dole)

There are certain things that everyone is in favor of as a matter of principle, but that somehow never seem to win out when real decisions are made and votes are counted. Balancing the budget is one example; getting rid of pork-barrel projects in the Federal budget is another. At times we make some progress to support these goals, but the fact remains that real, significant, lasting political reforms are rare indeed. That is why we ought to consider very carefully before we undo the most vital reform of the past decade—the decision to index our progressive income tax to inflation.

The problem that tax indexing addresses is simply stated. For many years we have held fast to the notion that those who have more ought to contribute more to support public services and provide for our national needs. To achieve that goal we have instituted a system of income taxation with a series of tax brackets, with the applicable rate of tax increasing as the taxpayer's income rises, from the lowest to the highest bracket.

Inflation, however, plays havoc with the system, first by eroding the dollar's purchasing power. As a consequence, it also erodes the real value of cut-off points for each tax bracket, which are stated in dollar terms. As the value of the dollar declines in real terms, effective tax rates go up. A $15,000 income is taxed at the same rate even after, say, 10 percent inflation. Yet that $15,000 is worth 10 percent less to the taxpayer.

Take the example of a family of four in 1980 that had a 10 percent cost of living increase in its annual income, to $16,500 from $15,000. This pushed it from a tax bracket of 18 percent to the 21 percent tax bracket. The value of the personal exemption—$1,000 per taxpayer—also fell by 10 percent because of inflation. Thus, this family's tax bill rose by more than 23 percent—from $1,242 to $1,530—while its income grew by only 10 percent.

As a simple matter of equity, it would seem that tax indexing to eliminate this unlegislated bracket creep ought to have universal support. To be fair, opponents of indexing generally acknowledge that bracket creep is a real problem; they simply reject indexing as a solution. Generally, they make two arguments: that Congress provides ad hoc inflation adjustments by periodically legislating tax cuts and that fiscal policy in a period of inflation requires bracket creep to automatically dampen the economy and keep up with the rising cost of Government.

Unfortunately, these arguments are self-contradictory, and both miss the real point. Congress does cut taxes, but it tends to redistribute the tax burden when it does—it does not compensate all taxpayers equally for their inflation tax increases. Further, automatic tax increases do not stablize the economy when inflation is accompanied by little or no real growth. In any event, the Government always manages to find a way to spend whatever revenues it can get its hands on. The fact that the Government can always use more money is no justification for unlegislated tax increases.

Eliminating tax indexing is no solution to the deficit problem. Fiscal responsibility means making the necessary legislative choices to bring revenues and expenditures as nearly into balance as the state of the economy permits. We may make mistakes, but at least we will be making decisions, openly and honestly, that the public can judge on their own merits.

That is just what we in Congress have been trying to do over the past two years. It is a slow and painful process, but it is necessary. It has to continue. With tax indexing, revenues will continue to rise with inflation—they simply will not rise faster than inflation, as they do under the nonindexed system. That should be adequate to finance increments in Government expenditures caused by inflation. If we need to spend still more, for defense, food stamps or whatever, we can vote to raise the necessary revenues.

Proponents of tax indexing have no reason to be on the defensive. It is the advocates of repeal who had better be prepared to explain their case to the American people. As President Reagan has stated, this is fundamentally an issue of accountability. Will we take responsibility for our tax and spending decisions, or will we again resort to evasion of the inflation tax? Low- and moderate-income taxpayers—who are hit hardest when we fail to index the rate bracket, the zero bracket and the personal exemption—will be watching what we do. No issue is more vital to the working man and woman than tax indexing.

But the voters will not be the only ones watching. Financial markets and economic decision-makers around the world understand the implication of tampering with tax indexing. As Martin Feldstein, chairman of the Council of Economic Advisers, said last year, eliminating indexing would send a signal that the Government intends to reduce the deficit by inflating the economy, pushing taxpayers into higher brackets, and collecting more taxes.

Tax indexing is a potent symbol of our will to resist inflating the economy. At this crucial juncture in our campaign to achieve long-term stable growth, we need tax indexing more than ever before. It is not only a pledge to be honest with the American people: It is a sign of our commitment to lead the world to an economic recovery that will last. Indexing will have lasting significance for our political process and for our economy. This is one political reform that should be preserved.●

U.S. FOREIGN POLICY

● Mr. QUAYLE. Mr. President, my good friend and colleague from Indiana, Mr. LUGAR, made his first major speech January 23 as chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee to the National Press Club here in Washington. I believe that Senator LUGAR is charting a new path, not only to revitalize the Senate Foreign Relations Committee but also to open an important dialog on U.S. foreign policy in the next decade. In view of the importance of his remarks to the institution of the Senate and to the Nation as a whole, I ask that his remarks be printed in the RECORD.

The remarks follow:

THE DIRECTION OF AMERICAN FOREIGN POLICY

(By Senator Richard G. Lugar, Chairman, Foreign Relations Committee)

I have accepted the hospitality of the National Press Club as the Mayor of Indianapolis advocating general revenue sharing, as a newly elected Senator from Indiana advocating the overthrow of encrusted special interests, and as Chairman of the Republican Senatorial Committee advocating universal Republican victory.

Had Bob Dole simply chosen to run for President without entertaining new responsibilities or had Chuck Percy and Jesse Helms conducted their reelection campaigns in different ways, I might have returned to you as Majority Leader, or Chairman of the Senate Committee on Agriculture, or even more simply as Chairman or Leader of nothing at all. Although it was not a Chairmanship that I sought or could have predicted would come to me though the decisions of others, I have tried to answer questions about my new role with cheerfulness and courage.

The first question usually begins with a background paragraph sketching in a political graveyard and with tombstones bearing the names of previous Foreign Relations Committee Chairmen. The second usually starts with the Foreign Relations Committee described as a faded flower with sharply diminished glory and future prospects.

Nevertheless, my best political judgment, reinforced by 92 Indiana County grass roots political coordinators and smoothly functioning fund raising machinery still warm from the 1984 campaign, convinces me that reelection prospects for 1988 are good and that a remarkable opportunity is at hand for significant public service.

The Senate Foreign Relations Committee is about to enjoy an extraordinary period of education, decision making, and achievement.

At the beginning, we will seek to find and to strengthen an American consensus for clear and achievable foreign policy.

On January 31st, Secretary of State George Shultz and Secretary of Defense Caspar Weinberger will commence a comprehensive review of American foreign policy. The hearings will continue on February 1, and on the 4th through the 7th of February, and for several weeks following the Lincoln Day recess. These hearings will, I believe, establish the Committee as a place where the future of American foreign policy will be debated.

At grass roots town meetings, constituents often ask if we have a foreign policy. They have heard that we have sacrificed steadiness and consensus of the past for the unpredictability of one crisis after another of the present. Much is made of the disruptions and new beginnings of a succession of Presidencies, as well as strong Congressional intervention on foreign policy. Indeed, perhaps too much is made of this.

Nevertheless it does seem to me that the United States has not yet fully recovered from the Vietnam War. Not has the United States fully adjusted to the role which its values, its economic strength, its geography, and its interests define for it in the world today.

Before Vietnam, some widely shared assumptions were held about the national interest and potential threats to it. Some consensus was apparent on appropriate remedies to our problems. One of the costs of Vietnam was the break up of this consensus. The United States has been and continues to be uncertain about the use of force in the conduct of American foreign policy. A broader popular involvement in foreign policy questions has deepened the historical reluctance of Americans to employ force to achieve our national purposes.

We continue to employ a strategy which is still best described by the word "containment". But in recent years there is evidence that this has become a very special kind of containment policy: It is containment without cost. In poll after poll, Americans express their concern about hostile governments which imperil our interests in Latin America and elsewhere. But in these same polls, Americans display an equal and overwhelming opposition to any course of action which might actually frustrate governments which are harmful to us.

It is important to restore a greater degree of consensus about our interests and commitments around the world and about our willingness to defend them. Do we really have vital intersts all around the globe? Do we have the economic and military capabilities and the political will to support these interests with a safe margin of risk? Do we have a long term, substantial, and correct view of the Soviet Union? Do we have an appropriate understanding of the economic, political, and spiritual forces that move nations?

There are grounds for optimism. The great majority of the American people agrees upon several basic truths about American foreign policy: a sense of realism about the Soviet Union; an appreciation of the need for a strong defense; solidarity with allies and friends; openness to discussions and negotiations with adversaries; and a strong commitment to justice, human dignity, and economic well-being for all people.

We have just inaugurated President Ronald Reagan for a second four year term. I believe that President Reagan is open to the idea of consensus in foreign policy around the themes which I have mentioned. I believe too, that the outcome of the recent election should indicate to many Democrats the importance of foreign policy consensus around these themes which are so fully supported by the great majority of American people.

Questions about commitments and the proper use of force must be resolved in the coming years and strengthen the heart of American foreign policy.

The foreign policy discussion agenda is substantial. The issues include the health of our alliances, the readiness of our forces, regional instabilities, indigenous revolutions, human rights violations, nuclear proliferation, resolution of famine and hunger crises, and the evolution of new economic and technological realities. Today, I will discuss two areas, however, which are surely at the core of our foreign policy: Namely, (1), East-West relationships and Arms Control; and, (2), the state of the international economy.

What is to be our relationship with the Soviet Union and with countires that are held within its orbit? This has been an issue for American foreign policy since the end of World War II. The key factor of this relationship has been containment. At one point, we attempted to move beyond containment to what has been described as detente.

Much has been said and written about the meaning of detente. As I understand this view, it was intended by its American originators to have contained two elements. Coupled with a relaxation in our direct bilateral relationship with the Soviet Union, there was to be an understanding of the continued need for American political will and resoluteness in defending ourselves and those at the margin of the East-West dispute. Two things went wrong. First, it is apparent that the Soviet Union either did not play by the rules of the understanding that it shared no such understanding in the first place. The Soviet Union continued on a course of unparalleled arms expansion and strenuous activity in Africa, Asia, Latin America and elsewhere to undermine governments friendly to the West. Second, of course, was Vietnam, which shattered our will to employ force anywhere in the World.

We have been down that road and a substantial majority of Americans in both political parties now maintain a high degree of realism about the Soviet Union. At the same time, most Americans continue to hope that a common interest on the part of the United States and the Soviet Union might result in a reduction of nuclear arms which are poised on both sides.

A key question in analyzing the state of the Soviet-American relationship concerns the place of the arms control process and any arms control agreements in the broad context of that bilateral relationship.

Arms control negotiations and possible or actual agreements must be viewed as part of a broad range of policies and actions designed to protect and promote U.S. interests in a world where Soviet power has been steadily increasing and Soviet ambitions are actively asserted. The U.S. purpose must be to see to it that at any given moment and also over time, Soviet leaders recognize that the risks of assertive and aggressive uses of power outweigh the benefits. This is essential for a positive evolution of U.S. relations with the Soviet Union.

The broad purpose of the United States in conducting its policies toward the Soviet Union must be defined in terms of American interests. These interests clearly include the prevention of war and may, in that respect, overlap to a degree with the interests of the Soviet Union. But they cannot ignore, and must centrally incorporate, the protection of U.S. security and well-being in the face of challenges posed to the United States and other nations by the emergence of the Soviet Union as a major military power. There are few signs that the impulses and ambitions which have carried the Soviet Union to the position and status it has reached to date are subsiding. On the contrary, they remain a central ingredient in Soviet conduct. Soviet interests in arms control remains subordinated to these adventurous ambitions. Of course, the Soviet Union wants to see potential enemies constrained, particularly the United States with its impressive economic and technological resources. And Soviet leaders probably wish to have greater certainty in their economic planning. But they are unlikely to want to see their one shining achievement and the principal source of their international influence—military power—significantly curtailed.

The expanded Soviet role and influence in the world, undergirded by growing military power, leads inevitably, to the conclusion that we cannot in the foreseeable future expect to avoid maintaining strong and diversified military forces of our own. Arms control arrangements can affect the pace and character of some military programs, but they cannot alone contribute substantially to the balance we require for our security.

This brings us to the present stage of Arms Control negotiations and the results following from the meeting between Secretary Shultz and Soviet Foreign Minister Gromyko earlier this month. The Reagan Administration approach to Geneva reflects the need for major changes in the framework of our thinking about Arms Control policy. I firmly believe that without the introduction of the new strategic defense initiative, we would have little reason to hope for any substantial or positive development in Arms Control negotiations. The fact is that the realities of offensive weapons and modernization programs on both sides would have led to little positive incentive for alternation of the stalemate which has existed for a decade.

The strategic defense initiative offers something which is new and helpful. We do not know the form or the completeness which a strategic defense system might take. But we do know that for the first time there are incentives for both sides to look to something other than the development of newer, more powerful, more precise offensive weapons of mass destruction. The full scope of the changes which will flow from these developments has not yet been sufficiently appreciated.

S.D.I. has already made its first contribution to Arms Control. The Soviet Union is back at the negotiating table. We should not expect the S.D.I. to do too much too quickly, but we should be prepared for the fact that this research effort is here to stay and that its consequences will be great.

The technological capabilities which make it possible to conceive a strategic defense leads me to a second set of foreign policy issues, the economic and technological realities underlying many of the political and military decisions which we confront.

In this city are located many experts who debate the arcana of arms control negotiating positions, conventional force postures, and a host of other topics well known to those in the political/military world. These are important in their own right, but if I have one wish, it would be that these decisions must be grounded more fully in the economic realities which make an adequate defense possible at all.

Defense is costly, as we all know. Defense spending must compete with many other important and worthy programs, not only in this country but among our allies and among countries in the developing world. We simply must learn to confront the dangers and dilemmas, as well as to maximize the opportunities, inherent in a world economy. Too often, debate about budgets and deficits takes place wholly apart from debates about defense. There are deep connections between our own budget decisions and the defense decisions which we expect from others. Would a freeze in United States defense spending have no consequence on our demands for greater burden-sharing on the part of our allies?

We must confront the imperative of economic growth directly. If, for example, the nations of West Europe do not grow at a rate comparable to that of the United States or the countries of the Pacific Basin, will Europe be able to retain, much less to expand, its own role in the defense of West Europe if challenged by the need for strong leadership to invigorate its economies and, in some cases, to break out of constraining economic rigidities.

In the same vein, we must address complex relationships between the economies of major trading nations. Rapid currency changes have placed intense political pressures on nations to protect their own industries.

The dollar has soared against major currencies by some 41 percent since 1980. The strong dollar is the major contributing factor to the record trade deficit in 1984, a deficit calculated to be some $130 billion and growing to some $140 billion in 1985. Imports to the United States in 1984 were up some 27 percent over the 1983 figures, while U.S. exports increased in 1984 by some 8 percent, as the strong dollar that accompanied economic recovery in the United States made American products sold abroad much more expensive. The strong dollar-high interest rate impact of the budget deficit on the American economy has been mixed, with the anti-inflationary trends reinforced by low-priced imports more than counter-balanced by increased prices on American exported goods and the resulting impact on American manufacturers.

The accelerating trade deficit is a major cause for concern in efforts to sustain the American economic recovery, for it undermines those key industries who find it increasingly more difficult to sell their products overseas while simultaneously enhancing the pressures for greater protectionism. If the dollar stays high and the trade deficit worsens, demands for action by the American business community are likely to grow more strident. Protectionist sentiment, including even extreme measures such as import surcharges, may find a greater resonance in the Congress as the 1986 elections draw nearer. While the idea of import surcharges may enjoy little support at the moment, that could change if the trade deficit continues to grow and the White House and the Congress prove unable to agree on means for cutting the budget deficit. And, of course, any attempts to restrict imports by quotas or tariffs would likely generate severe trade conflicts between the United States and its trading allies.

Like the future course of the dollar, the direction of American trade will have an important bearing on the overall prospects for the world economy. Increasingly we have come to appreciate the close relationship of trade and development finance issues, especially for Third World debtor countries. World trade volume after exploding by nearly 11 percent in 1984, is likely to grow by only 5 percent in 1985 and 4 percent in 1986. That will hurt Third World debtor nations who can service their debts (let alone actually repay capital) only by increasing their exports. However, such an expansion of Third World exports will come up against pressures for new barriers to world trade. This means that the Third World debt problem is still very much alive and must be a constant high priority consideration.

After a few weeks, I believe that the Committee will better define how many missions our country has undertaken. We will have a better idea of the military forces needed to meet our obligations and the economic resources required to sustain those commitments.

We will probably agree on containment of Soviet adventurism, the value of nuclear reduction negotiations, the importance of world-wide economic growth, of fewer trade barriers, greater building of democratic constitutions and human rights guarantees. We will probably make progress on famine relief and necessary long-term agricultural assistance. We will have a better idea of the strength and the future requirements of international institutions and our proper role in them.

During all of this revitalization of the Committee, I will be in Indiana much more often than on Embassy Row.

The foreign policy consensus that we seek is not simply one of a few dedicated Senators, but a coming together of the American people at the grassroots.

The role of a free and responsible press, world-wide, will be an essential element in the rebuilding of an informed and vital consensus. The availability and openness of public servants will be equally important.

I am deeply gratified for the opportunity you have given me to make an important beginning step, here, today●

TAXING OF FRINGE BENEFITS

● Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, during the 98th Congress, I joined a number of my colleagues in cosponsorings S. 2995, legislation introduced by my good friend and colleague from New York, Senator MOYNIHAN. I am pleased to again join Senator MOYNIHAN in introducing legislation identical to S. 2995.

This legislation would rectify an inadvertent error in the fringe benefit provisions of the recently passed Deficit Reduction Act of 1984. These provisions generally made most fringe benefits nontaxable by statute. Previously, a moratorium had been in place prohibiting the IRS from issuing regulations taxing most fringe benefits. This moratorium expired on December 31, 1983.

The Deficit Reduction Act of 1984 stated that a fringe benefit provided by an employer to an employee that represented no additional cost of service would be treated as nontaxable income to the recipient. However, this only applied to employees of the direct company providing the service, not a separate subsidiary of the same parent corporation.

In particular, the legislation introduced in this session by Senator MOYNIHAN rectifies this problem for Pan Am. Pan American World Services is a subsidiary that provides a myriad of services, including servicing Pan Am aircraft. Yet, under the Deficit Reduction Act of 1984, Pan American World Services' employees cannot enjoy previously received fringe benefits. This is unfair and would change the rules for thousands of employees in the middle of the game.

Mr. President, this legislation is narrow in focus. It would allow the employees of Pan American World Services to receive their traditional fringe benefits with no change in tax status. This would only apply to individuals employed by Pan American World Services as of September 12, 1984.

The bill would assist 7,700 employees in Pan American World Services that are hurt only by the unique corporate structure of Pan Am. No other airline has this particular corporate problem. These employees provide a range of services many of which invlove servicing the airline. I feel that equity dictates that this corrective legislation be enacted into law.

Mr. President, I urge the Senate to support this important legislation which will allow middle-class individuals to continue to enjoy their fringe benefits on a nontaxable basis.●

TRIBUTE TO DON BUTLER

● Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, all too often, veteran politicians and journalists spar with each other like two punch-drunk fighters. There is little time for assessing strengths and weaknesses, just hard-fought confrontations. These scraplike tussles, especially during an election year, do not a friendship make. Today, I should like to talk about an exception, where one politician and one journalist became fast friends, not because they needed each other's favor but simply because they had each other's respect, found comfort and laughter in sharing a good story, and satisfaction that they were serving the public's needs.

Of course, the politician is myself, and the journalist, Don Butler, was a good friend I wanted you to meet. Unfortunately, Oregon TV veteran Don Butler died recently, last winter, climbing to the base camp of Mt. Everest in Nepal. Friends tell me Don was fulfilling a lifelong dream just being able to stand at the foot of the Everest, the world's highest peak.

One tragic fact about his death is that Don, a very athletic man, died from a stroke, a freak mishap prompted by lack of oxygen, during what seemed like a safe day hike with his wife, Laura, and two other friends.

Still another tragedy, and the reason I speak before this Chamber today, is a greater loss for all U.S. citizens that Don's death brings: the absence of a great standard bearer for American journalism.

Don Butler, executive producer of KOIN-TV's investigative weekly news magazine, "Northwest Illustrated," received local, regional, and national recognition for outstanding reporting, including broadcasting's equivalent to the Pulitzer Prize, the prestigious Columbia-Dupont Citation, given to the program in 1979.

Don produced "Northwest Illustrated" since the program's inception in 1978. One goal of the program was to provide Portland's KOIN-TV news with an investigative arm, which might better serve the community by providing in-depth exploration of complicated stories and issues. Committed to his profession, and a bit of an idealist, Butler saw his role as a conduit or information broker, working in the public's interest.

Don's no-nonsense style and dedication to fair, balanced reporting earned him the respect of others during his early career. He started at KOIN-TV in 1969 as a general assignment reporter. Soon his workaholic proficiency earned him a spot as the city hall reporter, a much-sought-after news beat. In 1971, Butler became the station's State political reporter. As executive producer of "Northwest Illustrated," Don wrote expansive bimonthly segments of the program. A Portland native, Butler attended Benson High School. He obtained his bachelor of arts degree from Washington State University at Pullman in 1964.

He started his broadcast career at KELA-Radio in Centralia, WA, where he served as news director. Butler's next broadcast move was to KID-TV in Idaho Falls, ID. An Army veteran who served in Vietnam in 1968, Don was a member of the 116th Combat Engineers of Idaho. He served as a select member of Oregon's State Legislative Improvement Committee in 1974, as well as the 1972 Citizens Committee on Tri-Met, Portland's public transit authority.

In Don's memory, KOIN-TV established the Don Butler Memorial Scholarship Fund, which will provide cash grants to deserving students from Oregon, enrolled in Oregon colleges and universities—and at Don's alma mater, Washington State—to pursue their studies in broadcast journalism.

It is my hope that this small entry into Congress' official RECORD will pay a very small tribute to a man not many Americans knew, but whose contribution we can all appreciate.

He is one friend I will not forget.●

INTERNATIONAL CUSTOMS DAY

● Mr. ABDNOR. Mr. President, 32 years ago, on January 26, 1953, the international customs organization known as the Customs Cooperation Council held its first meeting in Brussels, Belgium. In recognition of this occasion, the Council has declared January 26 as International Customs Day. This occasion is also being used to give recognition to customs services around the world in view of the role they play in producing national revenue and in protecting national borders from economically and physically harmful importations.

I am particularly proud of the U.S. Customs Service for its great contributions to the Nation over the past 196 years of its existence. U.S. Customs was once the sole revenue producer for a young United States. Although that role has diminished over the years, in fiscal year 1984, Customs collected a record $12.5 billion in revenue. In addition, Customs has taken on such important responsibilities as interdicting narcotics at our borders, preventing the exportation of critical technology, and enforcing the regulations for over 40 Government agencies.

The U.S. Customs Service represents the United States at the Customs Cooperation Council [CCC], a 95-member international organization founded to facilitate international trade and promote cooperation between governments on customs matters. The CCC works to simplify and standardize legal instruments and rules of international customs. The CCC also renders technical assistance in areas such as customs tariffs, valuation, nomenclature, and law enforcement. Its objective is to obtain, in the interest of international trade, the best possible degree of uniformity among the customs systems of member nations. The United States became a member on November 5, 1970. All America benefits when both exporters and importers operate in an atmosphere of simple and unambiguous customs operations around the world.

I want to take this opportunity to congratulate the Customs Cooperation Council on its past accomplishments and for its ambitious goals of further harmonizing and simplifying those customs rules which affect international commerce. I also congratulate the U.S. Customs Service for its fine work both nationally and internationally.●

ADVANCE NOTIFICATION—PROPOSED ARMS SALES

● Mr. LUGAR. Mr. President, section 36(b) of the Arms Export Control Act requires that Congress receive advance notification of proposed arms sales under that act in excess of $50 million or, in the case of major defense equipment as defined in the act, those in excess of $14 million. Upon receipt of such notification, the Congress has 30 calendar days during which the sale may be reviewed. The provision stipulates that, in the Senate, the notification of proposed sales shall be sent to the chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee.

Pursuant to an informal understanding, the Department of Defense has agreed to provide the committee with a preliminary notification 20 days before transmittal of the official notification. The official notification will be printed in the RECORD in accordance with previous practice.

I wish to inform Members of the Senate that two such notifications have been received.

Interested Senators may inquire as to the details of these advance notifications at the office of the Committee on Foreign Relations, room SD 423.

I ask that correspondence in this connection be printed in the RECORD.

The correspondence follows:

DEFENSE SECURITY ASSISTANCE AGENCY,
Washington, DC, January 18, 1985

In reply refer to I-17366/84.

Mr. GRAEME BANNERMAN,
Deputy Staff Director, Committee on Foreign Relations, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. BANNERMAN: By letter dated 18 February 1976, the Director, Defense Security Assistance Agency, indicated that you would be advised of possible transmittals to Congress of information as required by Section 36(b) of the Arms Export Control Act. At the instruction of the Department of State, I wish to provide the following advance notification.

The Department of State is considering an offer to a Middle Eastern country tentatively estimated to cost $50 million.

Sincerely,

PHILIP C. GAST,
Director.

ESTABLISHMENT OF ENGLISH AS OFFICIAL LANGUAGE

● Mr. ABDNOR. Mr. President, I rise today as a cosponsor of the proposed constitutional amendment introduced January 22 by my distinguished colleague from Idaho [Mr. SYMMS] to establish English as the official language of the United States.

Mr. President, this is an issue about which I feel very strongly. In this Nation, comprised of people from every corner of the globe, our common language is our most vital link. Let me speak for a moment of my own family's experience.

My father came to this great Nation from Lebanon. While peddling goods in rural South Dakota, Sam Abdnor learned English from speaking with farm families who asked him to join them for meals. A number of years later, after settling in Kennebec, SD, Sam met and married his wife, Mary, who also immigrated to the United States from Lebanon, in Cedar Rapids, IA. My parents established a general merchandising business in Kennebec, where they raised my brother, Joseph, my sister Marina, and me.

My parents believed that familiarity with the common language of this country, the English language, is essential for all Americans. Thus, they spoke English, rather than their native Arabic, in our home. Although there are times when I wish I was conversant in Arabic, I am not sorry my parents placed such great importance on the English language.

Mr. President, I believe that if one is to benefit fully from the tremendous opportunities this Nation has to offer, he or she must be fluent in the English language. I am concerned that in recent years, we have lost sight of the significance of this most common of all denominators. It is the English language which unites us all as citizens of this great Nation. It is time we specify that the language of our Consitution—the English language—is indeed the official language of the United States.

Mr. President, I call on all our colleagues, in this and the other body, to act favorably and expeditiously on this necessary amendment to our Constitution.●

GAO HOTLINE IS 6 YEARS OLD

● Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, this month marks the sixth anniversary of the most established, cost-efficient weapon in the battle against waste, fraud, and abuse in the Federal Government: the nationwide toll-free fraud hotline of the General Accounting Office.

Instituted at my urging, the hotline began receiving and processing allegations of waste, fraud, and abuse over its nationwide, toll-free telephone line back in January 1979. Since that time, the small hotline staff operating out of a modest one room headquarters in the sixth floor of the GAO's office building at 441 G Street, NW., in Washington, DC, has received over 64,000 calls, resulting in 15,900 cases significant enough to be classified, and nearly 11,000 of which were serious enough for further investigation.

Mr. President, I ask that additional details concerning the 6 years of the GAO hotline operation be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

Abstract data never convey the reality nor the human dimension involved in a case in which someone willfully defrauds our Government. Following are some examples of the types of allegations reported to the hotline and successfully resolved, either through legal prosecution or through some sort of administrative action.

The material submitted for printing in the RECORD follows:

EXAMPLES OF GAO HOTLINE ALLEGATIONS SUBSTANTIATED BETWEEN JANUARY 18, 1984, AND JANUARY 17, 1985

An informant alleged kickbacks and bribery between a company supplying aircraft parts and a DOD civilian responsible for the procurement. The DOD-OIG found that the company and its owner set up "shell" corporations to submit bids on spare parts contracts in order to create an appearance of competition. The DOD civilian received kickbacks for awarding contracts to the company. The company was suspended from doing business with the government and fined $159,000. The owner was found guilty of 10 counts of bribery and nine counts of mail fraud, resulting in a four year jail term and a $209,000 fine. The government employee pleaded guilty of receiving illegal gratuities and conspiracy and was sentenced to serve one year and one day in jail. The case also resulted in three other convictions and spin-off investigations.

An anonymous informant alleged that a Lieutenant General (LTG) in the Army had misused Army aircraft. The Army-IG found that the LTG had an Army aircraft deliver a small dog he had sold for $175 to a General in the state national guard. The Vice Chief of Staff, in the Army, wrote the LTG about his conduct even though the LTG has since retired from the military.

An anonymous informant alleged that a contractor was overcharging the Air Force for a simple spring used in an aircraft. As result of the complaint, the contractor reduced his price from $390 a unit to $109, and repaid over $2,200 that it had overcharged the government.

A DOD employee supplied documentation to the GAO hotline showing the prices on computer parts a manufacturer sold to the government thru GSA were higher than the open market prices for the same parts by the same manufacturer. GSA-IG's investigation showed that the manufacturer had failed to disclose price and discount arrangements during negotiations with GSA. The manufacturer refunded $3.2 million for the overcharges.

An anonymous informant alleged that a Naval shipyard was ordering brass fittings from a contractor and scrapping most of them because of poor appearance or manufacture. The Defense Logistics Agency investigated the allegation for the DOD-IG and found that the shipyard was correct in scrapping the parts but had not properly reported the deficiency to the personnel monitoring the contractor's performance. A number of recommendations were made to prevent this from occurring in the future. While the contractor was responsible for the poor products, the government did not require the company to redo the fittings because the government was partially responsible.

An anonymous informant alleged that a cashier at a VA Medical Center in Norfolk, Virginia, was making travel reimbursements to people who were not veterans and did not have appointments at the center. The VA-OIG investigated and proved that the cashier working with six others had defrauded the government by submitting over 700 false travel claims. The cashier was convicted and received a 10 year prison sentence for conspiracy, bribery and fraud. In addition he agreed to pay a $70,000 judgment. The others were allowed to plead guilty on misdemeanors in exchange for their testimony against the cashier.

Two civilian Naval officials in California used free airline tickets received as a result of mileage accumulated from government travel for vacation trips to the Bahamas instead of turning them in to the government for future use. An investigation revealed both officials violated Naval policy. Both were issued letters of reprimand and they are making restitution to the Navy of $5,597.

An anonymous informant alleged that FAA employees were misusing a micro computer at a facility. The DOT-IG investigated and found an unreasonable number of computer games and personal data in the computer. Only about 12 percent of the data in the computer related to government business and it was only used 30 minutes a day for official purposes. As a result of the DOT-IG's investigation, employees involved were counseled and FAA advised all employees nationwide that personal use of computers, in the future, would result in disciplinary action.

An allegation that a school was improperly using Title III institutional development grant funds was substantiated by the Education-IG. Funds were being used for labor costs not associated with that program, for non-Title III activities and for supplanting other program funds. Request for repayment of $188,801 is disallowed expenditure has been made.

An anonymous Army command's employee alleged that their contracting office was paying for training courses that were not being conducted by the contractor. An investigation by DOD found that the contractor failed to deliver contractually required services and that command officials were derelict in their duties and approximately $110,000 to $125,000 was misspent. The command took administrative action against certain employees and are seeking restitution from the contractor and possible criminal action.

A caller alleged that an administrative law judge was assigning cases to be heard by himself so that he could combine the hearing with a personal visit to relatives. The caller stated that it would be more efficient and less costly to assign a field judge to the matter.

An investigation by the agency substantiated the allegations and recovered the travel funds from the judge. In addition, reporting procedures were changed so that the judge became more accountable for his time and attendance.

It was alleged that several tenants of a subsidized housing complex were not reporting total income and were ineligible for the subsidy. A HUD investigation revealed that 13 tenants had received subsidy overpayments of $59,701 and that project management had illegally collected $1,920 in subsidies from HUD after a tenant had moved out of the complex. Claims collection action was initiated by HUD against the tenants and project management refunded the $1,920. The AUSA declined prosecution in lieu of HUD administrative action.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, it is only when an act of waste, fraud, or abuse is caught, punished and corrected that the hotline is able to perform another important service: It becomes a deterrent to those who might commit such acts. Untold millions of dollars are saved American taxpayers through this deterrent function.

Another major indication of the success of the GAO hotline is reflected in its emulation through the establishment of hotlines by State and local governments which have contacted GAO for assistance, and by other Federal agencies. Over 20 Federal agencies have hotlines of their own. These hotlines have provided agency inspectors general with reports of allegations of waste, fraud, and abuse that have yielded substantial savings to the Federal Government—a fact in which the administration and all of us concerned about this issue have taken great satisfaction.

We in Congress cannot stop, however, in merely taking satisfaction with the proven record of achievement of the GAO hotline and its emulators. We must begin to take advantage of the data base generated by the network of hotlines and use it to impose reforms in the Federal system. We must prevent waste, fraud, and abuse from occurring, not just report or punish these acts.

Toward this end, I will push for studies of the data accumulated by the hotline directed at promoting systemic reforms which will further reduce waste, fraud, and abuse in the Federal Government.

Mr. President, the Congress the administration and the American people are indeed fortunate that Comptroller General Charles Bowsher has given, and continues to give, the hotline operation his full support.

Also essential to the continued success of the hotline are the others who share in its management and operation. They are:

Frederick D. Wolf, Director of the Accounting and Financial Management Division [AFMD].

Arthur R. Goldbeck, Deputy Director, AFMD.

John J. Adair, Deputy Director, Fraud Prevention and Oversight Group, AFMD.

Gary W. Carbone, Director, Fraud Referral and Investigations Group, AFMD, Barney Gomez, Harvey Gold, Yvonne MacDonald, Jerry Wilburn, Woodrow Hunt, Hugh Delaney, Ray Liebricht, Tom Luttrell, Warren Martin, Glenn Wolcott, Sam Holland, Teresa Renner, Ron Ramsey.

Administrative staff: Denise Brooks, Yvonne Prince, Trudy Moreland.

Mr. President, I want to point out that the GAO encourages both the public and Federal employees to call the hotline.

The nationwide hotline number is 1-800-424-5454; in the Washington, DC, area, the number is 633-6987.

I ask that material in connection with this subject be printed in the RECORD.

The material follows:

GAO FRAUD HOTLINE SUMMARY REPORT—JANUARY 17, 1985

VOLUME OF CALLS AND GEOGRAPHIC AREA—FIRST 6 YEARS OF OPERATION

We announced the hotline telephone number on January 18, 1979, and after the first 6 years of operation, (January 17, 1985), had written up over 15,900 allegations which require classification as to materiality, agency and program involved, and geographic location. In addition to the above, we have received numerous calls that were more appropriately the concern of other Federal agencies or State or local officials that were referred but not written up. We have received over 64,000 calls in total.

Calls have been received from all 50 States, the District of Columbia, and overseas locations.

A geographic breakdown based on the 10,959 allegations believed to warrant further review in our screening of 15,961 cases is as follows:

TYPES OF ALLEGATIONS RECEIVED

Approximately 25 percent of all calls received appear to have some substance and are written up for further evaluation. After additional screening approximately 69 percent of those written up appear to have some substance for investigation or audit. For example, of 15,961 allegations that have been screened, 10,959 appear to have some substance for investigation or audit. Of the 10,959, about 21 percent are in the "mismanagement" category, while the remaining 79 percent appear to involve intentional wrongdoing.

In summarizing the allegations of wrongdoing, we found it useful to categorize them according to participants in the alleged improper activity. We established the following five activity participant categories:

1. Federal employees only.
2. Federal employees in conjunction with others.
3. Federal contractors or grantee organizations.
4. Individual and corporate recipients of Federal financial assistance.
5. Other individuals or corporate entities.

Of the 8,638 allegations of wrongdoing, the highest proportion, 36 percent, was in the participant category "Individual and corporate recipients of Federal financial assistance." The following table shows the number and proportion of total wrongdoing allegations falling in each of the five participant categories.

Participating category	Number of allegations	Percent of total
1. Federal employees only	2,220	26
2. Federal employees in conjunction with others	460	5
3. Federal contractors or grantee organizations	1,639	19
4. Individual and corporate receipts of Federal financial assistance	3,114	36
5. Other individuals or corporate intities	1,205	14
Total	8,638	100

Looking first at the "Federal employees only" category, we found there were 299 allegations of theft, 473 allegations of private use of Government property, 655 reports of employee working hour abuses, 435 report of improper financial transactions, and 358 reports of other improper activities.

In the second category, "Federal employees in conjunction with others," there were 210 allegations of a bribe or kickback having been paid, 7 allegations of extortion and 243 miscellaneous other allegations.

In the "Federal contractor/grantee" category there were 641 allegations of contract non-performance, 121 reports of the theft of Government funds or property and 582 other allegations of various natures.

The fourth category, "Individual and corporate recipients of Government financial assistance," included 1,010 allegations of welfare cheating, 499 of cheating on social security benefit eligibility, 707 on collecting inappropriate disability benefits, 137 of cheating on veterans benefits, 202 instances of food stamp cheating, 77 of medicare/medicaid cheating, and 482 miscellaneous allegations.

The fifth and final category, "Other individuals or corporate entities" included 905 allegations of personal and corporate income tax cheating and 300 other allegations of improper activity.

The allegations of wrongdoing that were received to date involve the funds of every one of the 13 cabinet departments of the Federal Government and involve activity in Washington, D.C., and all 50 States.

In 70 percent of the cases, the informant was anonymous. Twenty-eight percent of the informants were Federal employees.

THE WRONG WAR

● Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, recently I read an article that appeared in the Baltimore Sun on November 28, 1984, entitled "The Wrong War." It is my hope that by placing it in the RECORD, other Members of the Senate and the House will think about the subject in depth. As we approach the problem of reducing our deficit, it may well be that the savings that some argue for in defense could be accomplished while at the same time improving our overall defense capability. I ask that the article I have referred to be printed in the RECORD.

The article follows:

[From the Baltimore Sun, Nov. 28, 1984]

THE WRONG WAR—PENTAGON PLANS FOR AN IMPROBABLE THREAT

(By Jeffrey Record)

WASHINGTON.—In 1951, in response to General Douglas MacArthur's plea to expand the Korean War by launching attacks on China, Omar Bradley, the chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, commented that "this strategy would involve us in the wrong war, at the wrong place, at the wrong time, and with the wrong enemy." U.S. force planners may be committing the same mistake today.

Since the end of World War II the United States has fought two major wars, both of them in Asia against Asian enemies. U.S. military forces also have intervened, and in some cases been attacked, in a variety of places, including the Far East, the Middle East and Caribbean. Nowhere have U.S. forces clashed directly with Soviet forces, and in no instance have U.S. or NATO military units been called upon to fight in Europe. In fact, Europe, for centuries a hotbed of interstate violence and the cockpit of both world wars has for almost 40 years been an island of comparative peace.

Why, then does the defense of Europe against a massive Soviet attack remain the principal determinant of the size and structure of U.S. military forces (over 50 percent of the U.S. defense budget is consumed by preparation for war in Europe)? And why does the vision of a worldwide war with the Soviet Union remain the basis of the Pentagon's declared strategy? Secretary of Defense Caspar Weinberger has stated that, "Given the Soviets' capability to launch simultaneous attacks in [the Persian Gulf], NATO and the Pacific, our long-term goal is to be capable of defending all theaters simultaneously."

Forget that the strategic interests of the Soviet Union, which has a historic dread of two-front wars, might not be served by simultaneous attacks on two or more geographically separate fronts. Forget that "defending all theaters simultaneously" is simply beyond the present and projected military resources of the United States (even with the Russians on our side, it took us four years and a defense budget approaching 40 percent of the gross national product to beat Nazi Germany and Imperial Japan). Forget that NATO has successfully deterred a Soviet attack on Europe for over 35 years, in large measure because of the unacceptable risks posed to the Soviets' own survival by the continuing presence on Allied territory of thousands of nuclear weapons coupled with NATO's declared determination to use them first in extremis. Also forget that it is high time that our fat and prosperous European allies assumed more responsibility for their own defense.

The real issue is the cost, in terms of U.S. military effectiveness, of continuing to prepare for a war that has never taken place and is unlikely to do so, instead of preparing for the kinds of wars and violent incidents that have engaged the United States and almost certainly will again. Different kinds of wars against different kinds of enemies in different kinds of places require different kinds of force structures and weapons. If the Vietnam War and more recent terrorist attacks on U.S. diplomats and military forces have taught us one thing, it is that a military establishment geared primarily to stop Soviet armor in Europe is not necessarily capable of dealing with other kinds of violent challenges outside Europe.

Primary focus on Europe's defense against technologically-advanced Soviet forces has compelled investment in such large complex and costly items as tank-heavy ground divisions, high-performance fighter aircraft and nuclear-powered submarines. Tank divisions, however, have little utility in the jungles of Southeast Asia and Central America. Nor are high-performance aircraft of much use against unconventional foes of the kind we encountered in Vietnam. And nuclear powered submarines are irreleveant counters to terrorist threats of the kind that claimed the lives of 241 United States servicemen in Beirut last year. Even the high-tech, set-piece conventional Falkland Islands War of 1982 was ultimately decided by foot-slogging light infantry.

Future historians may well judge it remarkable that U.S. military planners, 40 years after the end of World War II, continued to focus on a world war with the Soviet Union despite the Korean War, the Bay of Pigs, the Vietnam War, the Pueblo incident, the Mayaguez incident, the seizure of American hostages in Iran and the truck-bombing of Marines in Beirut. In most of those instances the performance of U.S. military forces proved wanting, in large measure because they were designed and equipped primarily for the one war they were never called upon to fight.

There is no doubt that the Soviet Union is America's most dangerous potential adversary. And there is no doubt that the defense of Europe is vital to the United States, and that American investment in Europe's defense has contributed substantially to deterring war there. Few would suggest that the United States abandon its commitment to Europe's defense or that U.S. force planners be instructed to ignore the possibility of a war with the Soviet Union in Europe or anywhere else.

On the other hand, it must be recognized that investment in deterrence of improbable threats is not synonymous with adequate preparation for defense against more likely threats, threats that have actually and repeatedly materialized. While the U.S. military has succeeded in deterring war in Europe, it has neither deterred attacks on American interests elsewhere nor provided an effective defense of those interests when attacked.

All of this suggests an urgent need for a reduction in current levels of investment in so-called "general purpose forces" (i.e., heavy, high-tech forces designed primarily for combat against heavy, high-tech Soviet forces) in favor of heightened investment in lighter, more strategically mobile forces that are specifically tailored, both in organization and weaponry, to deal with the unique threats and operational environments that characterize much of the world beyond Europe.

To its credit, the U.S. Army is moving in this direction. The Army plans to create at least two new small light infantry divisions structured for combat in rugged terrain, and is expanding investment in such special operations units as the Rangers, Special Forces and counter-terrorist formations, and both the Army and the Marine Corps are working on new armored fighting vehicles light enough to be rushed in quantity overseas by air.

On balance, however, the Pentagon's primary focus remains on the defense of a peaceful continent against an adversary that seems to have no desire to attack it.●

AUTHORITY OF THE SENATE LEGAL COUNSEL

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I send to the desk a resolution on behalf of myself and the distinguished minority leader, Senator BYRD, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be stated by title.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A resolution (S. Res. 49) directing the Senate Legal Counsel to represent the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs in obtaining a Writ of Habeas Corpus Ad Testificandum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs wishes to apply to the U.S. District Court for the District of Columbia for a writ of habeas corpus ad testificandum. The purpose of the application is to obtain the testimony of a Federal prisoner, who is presently in Florida, at a hearing of the committee in New York City on January 28, 1985. The following resolution will authorize the Senate Legal Counsel to represent the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs in this matter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution (S. Res. 49) was agreed to.

The preamble was agreed to.

The resolution, with its preamble, reads as follows:

S. RES. 49

Whereas, the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs wishes to file an application in the United States District Court for the District of Columbia for a writ of habeas corpus ad testificandum to federal authorities to bring Luis Hector Neira, a witness who is in the custody of federal correctional authorities in Florida, to New York, New York, for questioning by the Committee at hearings to be held there;

Whereas, pursuant to section 708(c) of the Ethics in Government Act of 1978, 2 U.S.C. 288g(c)(1982), the Senate may direct the Senate Legal Counsel to perform such duties consistent with the purposes and limitations of title VII of the Ethics in Government Act of 1978 as the Senate may direct: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Senate Legal Counsel is directed to represent the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs in its application for a writ of habeas corpus ad testificandum to obtain the presence of Luis Hector Neira at a hearing of the Committee.

AUTHORITY FOR THE RECORD TO REMAIN OPEN UNTIL 5 P.M. TODAY

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the RECORD remain open until 5 p.m. today for the introduction of bills and resolutions and for the submission of statements.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

TIME AGREEMENT ON BAKER NOMINATION

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, as in executive session, I ask unanimous consent that following the conclusion of morning business on Tuesday, January 29, the Senate go into executive session to consider the nomination of James A. Baker, to be Secretary of the Treasury, and that it be considered under the following time agreement: Two hours equally divided between the Senator from Oregon [Mr. PACKWOOD] and the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. LONG], or their designees; and that following the conclusion or yielding back of time, the Senate proceed to vote on the nomination of James A. Baker, to be Secretary of the Treasury.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I failed to mention and I assume on the Baker nomination we may expect a rollcall, so Members should be on notice there will probably be a rollcall on this nomination.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I believe that the distinguished majority leader reserved the time which would be under my control under the standing order of 10 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. BYRD. I thank the Chair and I thank the distinguished majority leader.

IMPROVEMENTS IN SENATE PROCEDURES

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a statement which I made during a hearing before the Committee on Rules and Administration today with reference to improvements in Senate procedures be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

IMPROVEMENT IN SENATE PROCEDURES

Mr. BYRD. Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the opportunity to appear before the Committee on Rules and Administration today in order to discuss several suggestions I have made regarding modifications in the standing rules of the Senate.

On January 3, 1985, I submitted a series of resolutions recommending a number of changes in the rules. S. Res. 2 is on the Senate Calendar, over under the rule. However, S. Res. 28, an identical resolution was submitted and referred to the Rules Committee, along with nine other resolutions which represent the individual components of S. Res. 28.

There has seemed to be increased dissatisfaction among the Members with the manner in which the Senate has been functioning. While I believe that many of our present rules, if observed, would provide increased efficiency and while I do not necessarily support changes in the rules simply for the sake of change, I do believe that there are some areas where modifications or new concepts would be beneficial to the overall operation of the Senate. Changes are possible which respond to new conditions without violating the unique rule of the Senate. It is possible to maintain our traditions while also meeting the realities of our times.

A number of the suggestions contained in S. Res. 28 are designed to move the Senate toward an acceptance of the current state of technology by providing for electronic voting and television and radio broadcasts of Senate proceedings. However, a number of my proposals are simply ones that I believe are necessary in order to improve the daily functioning of the institution.

Without television coverage, the Senate is rapidly becoming the invisible half of the Congress. Almost every evening Americans see the House of Representatives on the nightly news and numbers of them watch live coverage of debate in the House on C-Span. At the other end of Pennsylvania Avenue, the President always has ready access to media coverage of any announcement, speech, press conference, trip, or ceremonial event. The Senate, however, is forced to rely on far less visible forums in order to communicate its views. As a result, it is often difficult to provide coverage of both sides of an issue or relay interesting, lively, actual debate in the chamber. I believe it is becoming increasingly essential to find a way to accommodate television broadcasts of our proceedings if we are to remain a visible policy-making part of our national Government.

In the interest of providing media coverage of Senate proceedings, we should not trample on Senate traditions and rules in such a manner that the unique aspects of this body are lost.

While a tradition of free and open debate has remained in place for 196 years, changes have been made in our rules which permit debate to be shut off, but it requires more than a simple majority to do so. Agreements by unanimous consent have evolved so that the time for debate can be controlled if the body wishes. These practices and modifications have developed in response to changing situations, and in just such a manner the Senate needs to adopt the necessary changes to move into television coverage without losing its unique identity.

Proposals for television coverage of our proceedings have been controversial over the past several years and with good reason. The difficulty of structuring Senate debate for television under Senate rules cannot be underestimated, particularly when it comes to providing equity in debate time. How can we ensure that all sides of an issue receive their fair share of time available? When an issue is divided along partisan lines, how can the minority party be assured that the majority party, which often controls the Chair and which has the majority leader with priority recognition, will afford the minority with equal time to present opposing views?

I believe the difficulties can be overcome.

In an effort to deal with some of the fairness problems, my resolution would require a nondebatable motion, jointly agreed on by the majority and minority leaders, for the Senate to enter into a televised session. One leader could not offer such a motion without the support of the other leader. Whenever the Senate is being broadcast, time would be divided and controlled so that equal time is ensured to both majority and minority parties.

In order to permit Senators to attend televised sessions of the Senate, my resolution provides that the Senate shall be in session on Mondays, Tuesdays, and Thursdays, and committee meetings must be scheduled on days or times that the Senate is not being televised. In this manner, Senators will not face scheduling conflicts between committee meetings and Senate debate being televised.

If there is no necessity to be in session on one of the 3 days mentioned or if there is need to be in session on Wednesdays, Fridays, Saturdays, or Sundays, the majority leader may make that change by motion or by unanimous consent. The daily convening time is handled in much the same way. The Senate has a regular convening time of 12 noon—or such other time as may be decided by Senate resolution at the beginning of a new Congress—but that time can be, and now is, adjusted by unanimous consent or motion on almost a daily basis.

There are other more technical problems of camera coverage and lighting. Senators do not speak from one fixed place on the floor and the resolution provides that the camera is to cover the Presiding Officer and those Senators the Presiding Officer has recognized, including Senators who are recognized with the consent of another Senator.

A trial period for television broadcast is provided in the resolution. This trial is to be conducted by the Senate Committee on Rules and Administration over the coaxial cable system of the Architect of the Capitol and is not to be available for the public. Termination of the trial period is to be at a date agreed upon by the majority leader, minority leader, chairman of the Rules Committee, and ranking member of the Rules Committee.

In addition to the specific sections on television coverage of the Senate sections 1-8 of S. Res. 28, contain the following eight changes in the rules.

1. It provides that any vote may be conducted by electronic voting procedures, upon joint agreement by the majority and minority leaders. Electronic votes are to last 15 minutes and any subsequent back-to-back votes shall be 5 minutes each (secs. 11 and 12).

In recent years, we have tended to use way more than 15 minutes for each roll call. An electronic voting system should help to keep us to a stricter time limitation for votes and would also be useful for televised coverage.

2. It proposes a 2-hour time limitation on a motion to proceed to a measure or matter made outside the morning hour other than a change in Senate rules. (sec. 14).

This proposal removes one layer of filibuster but it is still possible to filibuster the measure itself, amendments thereto, and there are other opportunities further down the legislative road such a House message on the same matter, appointment of conferees, or a conference report on the measure. It does give the majority leader the opportunity to at least bring a bill up for consideration—a right which is generally recognized by the fact that cloture is almost always invoked on a motion to proceed.

3. It contains a motion, which can be made twice in any one calendar day, to require that amendments to a measure must be germane to the measure or to the committee amendment. Such motion would have to be carried by three-fifths of those present and voting. After the adoption of such a motion, any appeal from a ruling of the Chair that an amendment is not germane must be carried by two-thirds of those present and voting in order to overrule the Chair. Sense-of-Senate and sense-of-Congress amendments that do not directly relate to the measure would be considered nongermane (sec. 16).

The use of nongermane amendments has proliferated and, because of this, there has been an increased difficulty in obtaining time agreements. A germaneness motion, such as the one contained in S. Res. 28, would give the Senate the option of deciding that only germane amendments are in order without having to resort to the stricter requirements of cloture or without the specific limitations that a unanimous consent time agreement imposes. A two-thirds requirement to overturn the Chair on the question of germaneness after such a motion is adopted helps to ensure that a simple majority will not contradict the Senate's prior decision by three-fifths of those voting to impose a requirement of germaneness.

4. It modifies rule XXII with respect to cloture by requiring that the motion to invoke cloture be carried by two-thirds of those present and voting with the exception of invoking cloture on a change in the Senate rules, which would require two-thirds of those duly chosen and sworn. After cloture is invoked, any appeal from a ruling by the Chair on the question of germaneness must be carried by two-thirds of those present and voting. Once cloture has been invoked no more than 20 hours are available for debate, and the time is then equally divided and controlled by the majority and minority leaders or their designees (sec. 17).

The Senate did not agree to provide any mechanism to shut off debate until 1917, and since then, any attempt to strengthen the cloture rule has been exceedingly controversial. It has become easier and easier to invoke cloture in recent years but the technique of post-cloture filibuster has thwarted the decision to bring debate to an end, and if used at the end of a session, has made cloture almost meaningless. In addition, the Senate came all too close to overturning the Chair on a question of germaneness during consideration of the so-called Grove City amendment last fall. In that instance, overruling the Chair would have produced far-reaching and serious consequences.

In that instance, 92 Senators voted to impose cloture on the Grove City amendment, but, subsequent to cloture's having been invoked, a simple majority was about to overturn the Chair's ruling on the germaneness of certain amendments. This would have been most unfortunate from the standpoint of orderly Senate procedure under cloture. The germaneness requirement under rule XXII would have been gutted. While 60 Senators are needed to invoke the strict germaneness and time requirements of cloture, once cloture has been invoked, 51 Senators can overturn the Chair. If this happened, it would be next to impossible to invoke cloture in the future.

5. It changes the 3-day rule on availability of reports to a 2-day rule with Sunday and holidays excluded (sec. 15).

This is a relatively minor change. A report would still have to be available for 48 hours prior to moving to a piece of legislation but by eliminating 1 day from the present 3-day rule, it would make it easier for the majority to schedule legislation for debate, while, at the same time, affording sufficient time for Senators to study a committee report and prepare for action on the measure reported.

6. It prohibits the defense of germaneness of amendments to appropriations measures unless there is House legislative language on the subject matter contained in a given amendment (sec. 13).

This precedent was set on November 9, 1979, and the Senate has been operating under this precedent since that date.

7. It eliminates the committee-of-the-whole proceeding from consideration of treaties in executive session. The treaty would be open for debate and action by the Senate, but the repetitious and needless step of considering the treaty in the committee of the Whole would be deleted (sec. 10).

The committee-of-the-whole proceeding was removed from consideration of legislative business many years ago.

8. It requires that any matter reported by any committee not be reported by polling (sec. 9).

A prohibition on polling would emphasize that the present rule which requires a quorum present in order to report legislation or other matter from a committee cannot be circumvented.

Whenever changes in the rules are contemplated, there are a number of complex questions to be answered. From my experience, as former majority leader in this body, I know of changes in the rules that would make it easier for a majority leader to move legislation more efficiently through the Senate. Changes such as a 2-hour debatable motion to proceed, and reducing the 3-day rule to 2 days on availability of reports are changes of this nature.

From my experience as minority leader, I also am aware of the necessity to protect the rights of the minority. The changes I have proposed would not leave the minority without resources to effectively protect its rights.

Delay, when warranted, will still be possible, and the minority will still have available the legislative tools with which to protect itself against the tyranny of a majority.

A great number of the present membership of the Senate has indicated support for changes to improve the capability of the Senate to act without sacrificing the unique powers and purposes of this body.

The Rules Committee may feel that constructive improvements may be made in some or all of my proposals, and I invite all of my colleagues to carefully examine them in the interest of necessary modifications in Senate procedure to carry us through the remaining few years of this century and beyond.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I have nothing further and I again thank the distinguished majority leader.

RECESS UNTIL MONDAY, JANUARY 28, 1985 AT 10 A.M.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I move in accordance with the previous order that the Senate stand in recess until 10 a.m. on Monday, January 28, for a pro forma session only, there to be transaction of no business; it will be pro forma only.

The motion was agreed to and, at 2:41 p.m., the Senate recessed until Monday, January 28, 1985, at 10 a.m.

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

COMPARABLE WORTH—A REPLY TO NISKANEN

HON. FORTNEY H. (PETE) STARK
OF CALIFORNIA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, January 24, 1985

● Mr. STARK. Mr. Speaker, it has always seemed to me that it is elementary fairness that people who do essentially the same type or value of work should be paid about the same. But the idea of comparable worth was ridiculed last fall by one of President Reagan's Council of Economic Advisers, William Niskanen, who called the idea a truly crazy proposal.

Maybe it is time to abolish the Council.

In any event I would like to include in the RECORD the very fine and thoughtful comments of Ms. JoAnn S. Ainsworth, legislation chair of the Bay Valley District of the California Federation of Business and Professional Women. I think she helps set the record straight.

The comments follow:

CALIFORNIA FEDERATION OF BUSINESS AND PROFESSIONAL WOMEN,
Oakland, CA, October 24, 1984.

MR. WILLIAM NISKANEN,
Member, President's Council of Economic Advisers, The White House, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. NISKANEN: Business and Professional Women (BPW), the voice of working women since 1919, supports, through its California legislative platform, the implementation of comparable worth.

Friday's San Francisco Chronicle reported your comments on comparable worth before the Women in Government Relations meeting. The report said you consider comparable worth to be "a truly crazy proposal" and that salaries of 40-year-old single men and women in the same field would be "essentially identical" except that "most of the difference between men and women's salaries is a consequence of the fact that many, if not most, women have interruptions in their job experience over a period of time associated with marriage and child-bearing."

This letter is to tell you that the research I have done on comparable worth for BMP and my own personal experience give the lie to the statements you made.

First of all, most women who started working in the 1950's or early '60's had little chance to be in the same field as a man. I am a 45 year old woman. When I started working in 1956, women were strongly urged (it was called 'counseling') into the fields of nursing, teaching and secretary. I chose secretary. While a male starting as stock clerk had the opportunity to become chairman of the board, a woman starting as secretary could not expect to become chairwoman. Her highest expectations were executive secretary or administrative assistant to the president or chairman, or office manager.

But, you say, that is a discrimination problem, not a comparable worth issue. I say gender discrimination is basis for the inequities that comparable worth will resolve. Historically, the work of women has been undervalued. Jobs where 70% or more of the workers are women—when compared as to skill, education, responsibility, working conditions and effort to male-dominated jobs—are usually 20-40% underpaid.

And education and child bearing are not the problem. My child was born when I was 39. I have a B.A. with honors in English and social science from U.C.-Berkeley; a Masters in Teaching, cum laude, from Fairleigh Dickinson University; and M.B.A. studies from Pepperdine University, lacking only a thesis to complete the degree. My salary in no way equates with a man of my age with my education and years of working experience. Research shows that women workers with four or more years of college make about the same income as men who have one to three years of high school. The Willis Study done for the State of Washington shows the value of the job of legal secretary at 187 points while a warehouse worker had 97 points and a laborer 110. Guess who makes the most money? The answer is in the undervaluing of the work done by women.

It took almost ten years of my working before things started to loosen up—after the civil rights activity in the '60s. By 1966 I was Chief Clerk of a U.S. Senate Subcommittee. Although I had the title and the responsibilities of Chief Clerk, my salary equated more with that of the secretaries. My salary history (the basis for my Chief Clerk salary) was that of secretary and administrative assistant—one of those job categories dominated by women and which is undervalued and underpaid.

Suppose that instead of a 40 year old woman, we consider a woman in her 20's who has had the benefit of the civil rights laws. Research shows women and men now receive approximately equal starting salaries for entry jobs. However, soon a noticeable difference takes place. The woman trails the man in income. A Columbia University study of "executive ladder" jobs shows, over a ten year period, males exceed the salaries of females by an average of $14,000 a year. For me the answer to this difference is not childbearing. Forty-four percent of the women working are either single, widowed, divorced or separated. We work out of dire necessity. Yet women, even today, are not being selected for the training or promoted into the career paths that will lead them into the power positions that command high income. The question is "why?"

I believe the answer is that men and women of today are still not able to envision women in power positions. I will give a personal example.

Recently I spoke with a male administrator in charge of hiring a new manager for a top position in a firm. While speaking, the administrator said, "When he's in place. . . ." I said, "or she."

I'm told this administrator is kind to his secretary, good to his family, and admired by his peers. But, although he had replied immediately, "of course, or she," he unconsciously dropped right back into saying, "When he's in place. . . ." I say unconsciously, because it was not a deliberate slight on his part towards me. You can imagine that I was not surprised when indeed the new manager who arrived was male.

Even my management textbooks go through the levels of a business hierarchy saying "he," presumably following traditional grammatical style. Then the author gets to the clerical level. Style goes out the window. The "he" turns to "she" and remains until the work of the secretary or clerk has been discussed and dismissed. This kind of perception gets passed on to the students who then envision males in top corporate positions and females in low-paying clerical positions. The power of its suggestion is tremendous.

Considering the number of women in the work force, female C.E.O's and Chairwomen of the Board are far and few between. Often the woman, in order to get into these power positions, must be two to three times as good at the work as the male and very aggressive. Women come in the same ranges of abilities and personal work styles as men. Not all of us can be that good or that aggressive. And why should we be? We should have equal opportunity.

Working women are concentrated into approximately 20 of the over 400 jobs categories reported by the federal government, and those 20 job categories are lower paying. To say move to higher-paying, male-dominated job categories to demand equal pay is not the full answer either. It is estimated that a job shift of 10 million workers would have to take place to get things to where women and men would be evened out in jobs categories so that the equal pay for equal work concept could come into play. That is a drastic shift.

Women are not working for pin money these days. The number of female-headed households increased 97% nationwide between 1970 and 1980. One half of all the children in the United States today can expect to live in one-parent homes for a significant part of their lives. A divorced husband usually becomes "single" while the wife becomes a "single mother." Only three years after a divorce, just 19 percent of divorced fathers continue to pay awarded child support.

As Nila Bevan says in her article, "One Man Away from Welfare," (Ms., July 1984), "Three of us live on less than what their father has for himself, and our rent, utilities, and so on are much higher than his. Even at that, I am so much better off than many other single women I have met."

In California it is feared that, if the current trends are not reversed, by the year 2000 almost all those in the poverty level will be women and children.

The problem is insidious. Lower salaries produce lower salary histories produce lower dollar raises produce lower pensions. We slip into poverty, either with our children or in old age.

Women are not asking for the disruption of economies when asking to receive the pay they deserve for the value of the work they do. Senator Linda Berglin of Minnesota came to California to assure us that comparable pay implementation in Minnesota did not disrupt its economy. The pay increases are being implemented over several years and employers are indemnified against past discrepancies.

I have obtained my information from "Pay Inequities for Women: Comparable Worth and Other Solutions" (Calif. Comm. on the Status of Women, 926 J Street, Room 1506, Sacramento, CA 95814), the information packet of the Comparable Worth Project of Oakland (488 41st Street, No. 5, Oakland, CA 94609), A Public Forum on Comparable Worth, June 22, 1984 (Senate Office of Research, 1100 J Street, Suite 650, Sacramento, CA 95814) and the Lt. Gov.'s Commission on the Feminization of Poverty (1028 State Capitol, Sacramento, CA 95814). I suggest that you read them.

For myself, I would like to have the titles and addresses of the resource materials you used as the basis for your comments. I am open to hearing new information. I trust you are, too.

Sincerely,

JoAnn S. Ainsworth,
Legislation Chair

PANAMA CANAL INTEREST BILL

HON. JACK FIELDS

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, January 24, 1985

● Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Speaker, I am today reintroducing my legislation to correct a fundamental problem in the Panama Canal Act of 1979.

Joining me in this important effort are several of my very distinguished colleagues from the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee including Congressmen Walter B. Jones, Don Young, Carroll Hubbard, and Billy Tauzin.

This bill was first introduced in the last Congress to insure that the interest on the U.S. investment in the Panama Canal is paid to the general fund of the U.S. Treasury.

While H.R. 5655 was passed overwhelmingly and without dissent by the House of Representatives on June 25, 1984, regrettably, the other body was unable to approve this proposal prior to its adjournment.

Mr. Speaker, it was clearly the intent of the authors of the Panama Canal of 1979 that the interest payment on our investment in the canal would be paid directly into the general fund of the U.S. Treasury. Unfortunately, because of the ambiguous wording of section 1302(b) of Public Law 96-70 that interest is now being paid into the Panama Canal Commission Fund instead of the general fund of the U.S. Treasury.

As a result, the Federal Government has not only been denied access to these funds but the level of our investment in the canal has been reduced by some $52 million in interest.

Mr. Speaker, my bill corrects this glaring problem by simply requiring that the interest on our investment in the canal be automatically deposited on a monthly basis into the general fund of the Treasury. By so doing, the bill not only solves the interest problem but it ensures that there will be no further erosion in our investment base.

In this era of serious budget concerns, my colleagues will be interested to know that the interest payment to be deposited in the general fund would amount to some $10 million each year.

Mr. Speaker, while this bill will eliminate the interest problem in a prospective manner, it does not deal with the interest payments currently deposited into the Panama Canal Commission Fund. I have opted not to address this issue because the Commission has strongly indicated that this money is needed to assist them in their cash flow requirements.

Nevertheless, as I have previously stated, if a method can be devised to transfer the $52 million into the general fund of the Treasury without adversely impacting upon the cash needs of the Commission, I will gladly support such an effort.

Mr. Speaker, I strongly believe this simple, straightforward proposal is long overdue and I am hopeful this Congress will quickly enact this important legislation.

For the benefit of my colleagues, I have submitted for the Record a section-by-section analysis of this legislation.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The section-by-section analysis follows:

Section-by-Section Analysis

Section 1(a)—Section 1302(b) of the Panama Canal Act requires that all tolls and other receipts of the Panama Canal Commission be deposited in the Panama Canal Commission Fund in the U.S. Treasury.

The bill amends Section 1302(b) and directs that the portion of the tolls that represents the interest on the U.S. investment in the Panama Canal be deposited on a monthly basis into the General Fund of the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts.

Section 1(b)—Section 1603(b)(2)(A) of the Panama Canal Act states that monies deposited into the "Treasury" (which according to Section 1302 is the "Panama Canal Commission Fund" in the Treasury) will decrease the U.S. investment in the Panama Canal. When that money is withdrawn from the Panama Canal Commission Fund and deposited into the General Fund of the U.S. Treasury, the U.S. investment would be increased by that amount, thereby nullifying the decrease required by Section 1603(b)(2)(A) (See Section 1603(b)(1)).

This section of the bill strikes the word "Treasury" and inserts in lieu thereof "the Panama Canal Commission Fund". This ensures that the deposit in the General Fund required by Section 1 of this bill will have no impact on the level of the U.S. investment.

Section 2—Section 1302(b) of the Panama Canal Act states that the provisions of the Act became effective upon it being signed into law. Section 2 of my bill simply states that the provisions in this legislation will become effective when it is signed into law.●

CIVIL RIGHTS RESTORATION ACT OF 1985

HON. TONY COELHO

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, January 24, 1985

● Mr. COELHO. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to join with my colleagues in introducing the Civil Rights Restoration Act of 1985. This legislation will restore the foundations of our four major civil rights laws and clarify Congress' intent that programs and activities receiving Federal financial assistance do not discriminate against any segment of our society.

In the attention given to the Supreme Court's Grove City decision, many overlooked another opinion handed down by the Court that same day. Disabled people won a major victory in Conrail versus Darrone. The Supreme Court unanimously ruled that section 504 of the Rehabilitation Act, the primary civil rights law for disabled individuals, covered employment discrimination.

Employment is one of the cornerstones of the disability rights movement. Without a job, disabled people remain dependent on friends and family, church and charity, and the Government. But, holding a job provides the income security, the independence, the pride that we all feel in making our own way.

Our Supreme Court victory may be short lived, however, because the Court added a caveat to its Darrone decision. Section 504 would cover employment discrimination only in the specific program receiving Federal funds. The Court specifically referred to its Grove City decision and sounded an ominous warning that section 504 coverage was narrow and limited as that of title IX.

I referred to our Supreme Court victory. I am a disabled person. I know only too well the pain of discrimination. When I was diagnosed as having epilepsy, people suddenly no longer saw me but only a disability. They presumed that epilepsy dictated my life. Well, they were wrong. The social stigma of disability—the discrimination which is often worse than the disability—must not be condoned by our Government.

There are those who believe that the only legislative remedy we need is one limited to education. I think the Supreme Court's caveat in the Darrone decision explains why such legislation is inadequate. The Court clearly indicated that it would apply the same reasoning about narrow coverage to other civil rights laws, and would apply it in other areas other than education, such as employment. Congress must clearly ban discrimination in all areas receiving Federal aid, including education, employment, health, social services, transportation, and housing.

Section 504 guarantees 36 million disabled Americans the opportunity to participate fully in our society. The Civil Rights Restoration Act ensures that the opportunity is not a hollow one. I will work in the coming weeks to persuade my colleagues to expeditiously enact this legislation. I look forward to the day when all disabled people can take their rightful place in our society.●

TRIBUTE TO RICHARD NICHOLAS IVINS

HON. JOHN J. DUNCAN

OF TENNESSEE

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, January 24, 1985

● Mr. DUNCAN. Mr. Speaker, Daniel Boone, Joseph W. Burns, Davey Crockett, Sam Davis, Cordell Hull, and Presidents Jackson, Johnson, and Polk are a few of the outstanding Tennesseans listed in a recent article by Richard N. Ivins. Mr. Ivins is himself another proud man of that State with accomplishments which merit recognition.

While serving in the 117th Infantry—or the old 3d Tennessee—during World War I, Mr. Ivins was awarded a Purple Heart, a Victory Medal, and the Cross of the Confederacy among other distinguished medals for meritorious military service. Following military duty, he privately studied in his father's law offices and then pursued degrees at both the University of Tennessee and Vanderbilt Schools of Law.

The 10 years between 1922 and 1932 saw Mr. Ivins in many trial and appeals courts, until he was subsequently appointed to the Veteran's Administration in Louisville, KY. Following this, he served the Department of Justice handling war risk insurance.

Due to lung damage sustained under gassing in World War I, the military could not accept him for additional service for World War II, but the Department of Justice transferred Mr. Ivins to Washington, DC, utilizing his extensive trial experience through 1950. Until retirement in 1960 he served an appointment to the Federal Power Commission. His immense record shows he lost very few litigated cases, and his decisions were never reversed by either the National Labor Relations Board, the Federal Power Commission, or the courts.

In his retirement, Mr. Ivins continues to fulfill family, civic, and church related responsibilities in Tennessee, while writing articles for newspapers in the area. These articles describe the importance of democracy and praise the beauty of his home State.

Richard N. Ivins is one of many men and women who tirelessly served their country and continue through the later years of life to work for their community. I would like to offer my high esteem for this gentleman, as he typifies the American ideal.●

ELECTION REFORMS TO STIMULATE VOTER TURNOUT

HON. MARIO BIAGGI

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, January 24, 1985

● Mr. BIAGGI. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing two separate bills aimed at stimulating our Nation's dismal voter turnout rate. The two measures, which are similar to legislation I authored during the prior Congress, both seek to accomplish this worthwhile objective by making it more convenient for people to vote.

The first measure would change election day to Sunday and require that all polling places across the country would open at 12 p.m. [e.s.t.] and close at 9 p.m. [e.s.t.]. This same-time/Sunday-voting format would apply for a 4-year experimental period beginning with the 1988 Presidential election.

The second measure would provide for 24-hour voting, beginning at 9 a.m. [e.s.t.] on the Tuesday now used for Federal general elections. This same-time/24-hour-voting format would also apply for the same 4-year experimental period covering the 1988, 1990, and 1992 Federal general elections.

Both of these measures would also provide that absentee ballots may be mailed free of postage. Unlike the other election reforms proposed, this change would apply on a permanent basis.

Having carefully studied the issue of election reform, I am convinced that either same-time/Sunday voting, or same-time/24-hour voting would significantly increase voter participation in the United States. It is my understanding that the House Administration Committee will soon be conducting hearings on a variety of election reform proposals and I believe both of the measures I am introducing today should be considered during those hearings. Only after careful deliberation by the committee should a decision be made as to whether Sunday voting, 24-hour voting, or a combination of the two is more preferable.

The need for a more convenient voting procedure is clear. Under our current election system 80 percent of the normal 13-hour-voting period falls during the time our Nation's work force is either at their jobs or commuting to and from their jobs. A 24-hour-voting period, or moving election to a nonwork day, would solve that inconvenience problem.

Further, simultaneous opening and closing of the polls, which is called for under both of these proposals, would eliminate early election projections by the media. This is especially significant since the television networks recently agreed not to use exit polls or any other means to project the winner of Presidential elections before all polls have closed. This development, which is largely attributable to the diligent work of our distinguished colleague from Washington, Mr. SWIFT, makes same-time voting all the more appealing.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, it should be pointed out that the 28 Western democracies, 17 of which vote on Sunday or have 24-hour voting, have a median voter turnout rate of 82.8 percent. This is in dramatic contrast to our own paltry participation rate of 53.3 percent in the 1984 Presidential election. The time has come for a change and the two measures I am introducing today provide us with that opportunity.●

ENGLISH THE OFFICIAL LANGUAGE

HON. NORMAN D. SHUMWAY

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, January 24, 1985

● Mr. SHUMWAY. Mr. Speaker, I, and 12 other Members of the House, are proposing a constitutional amendment designating English the official language of the United States. We share the view of a growing number of Americans that English must remain our only national language, and that the Federal Government should not encourage the use of others.

Throughout our history, America has been immeasurably enriched by her ethic, religious, and cultural diversity—and it is vital that this tradition be preserved. At the same time, our common language has been a powerful factor in forging national strength, unity, and stability.

Unfortunately, the primacy of English in America has been challenged in recent years by a trend toward the quasi-official recognition of languages other than English. This trend is clearly seen in Government-sponsored policies that recognize other languages as the accepted medium of instruction in school. Such programs, although well intentioned, actually discourage proficiency in our common tongue. While purportedly temporary in nature, these programs foster continued dependence on languages other than English—thus serving to impede the process of assimilation of our Nation's linguistic minorities.

The English language amendment, therefore, seeks to provide a needed measure of legal protection to the English language, and makes it clear to our Nation's immigrants that proficiency in English is a civic responsibility as well as an indispensible ticket to educational, professional, and social opportunities in America.

The joint resolution that we are introducing establishes English as the official language of the United States, prohibits the use of the bilingual ballot, allows the instruction of English in non-English languages for the purpose of making students proficient in English, and ends the use of foreign languages in subject-matter instruction. This amendment does not seek to discourage the use of any foreign language for religious or ceremonial purposes, for domestic use, or for the preservation of ancestral culture; nor does the bill affect the teaching of foreign languages to American students.●

A BILL TO CORRECT MISTAKES BY THE SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY IN ISSUING NOTICES OF DEFICIENCY

HON. FORTNEY H. (PETE) STARK

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, January 24, 1985

● Mr. STARK. Mr. Speaker, The Secretary of the Treasury is required to issue a statutory notice of deficiency in order for unagreed cases to legally proceed to the Tax Court. Since the Secretary mails these notices in the hundreds of thousands, it should come as no surprise that the Secretary may on occasion send one out erroneously. However, the inflexibility of current law prohibits the Secretary from correcting such mistakes. As a result, a taxpayer who receives an erroneously issued notice of deficiency must either petition the Tax Court to prevent the disputed tax from being assessed, or agree to pay this tax and then file a claim for refund. Either way, that is a lot of trouble to put taxpayers through just to handle a procedural error inadvertently committed by the Government. There has to be a better way.

The legislative solution to this problem I am proposing is a simple one, but it will be fully effective in righting the wrong. Under the provisions of this bill, if the Secretary determines that a notice of deficiency was erroneously sent to a taxpayer, the Secretary would be empowered to withdraw it! How is that for simplicity? The only imposed condition is that the notice of withdrawal must be sent to the taxpayer before he or she would have to file a petition with the Tax Court under present law.

This legislation remedies a chronic and long-standing defect in the statutory rules that govern the administration of unagreed tax cases. It gives the Secretary needed authority to nullify unintended notices of deficiency, and will thereby facilitate the Service's administrative consideration of such cases. The bill should help produce more settlements, and also reduce the cost and inconvenience of resolving these cases to both the Government and the taxpayer.

I hope that Members will fully support this worthwhile legislation.●

RED RIVER GORGE

HON. WILLIS D. GRADISON, JR.

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, January 24, 1985

● Mr. GRADISON. Mr. Speaker, today my colleague from Kentucky, Mr. HOPKINS, and I are reintroducing a bill to designate a portion of the Red River in Kentucky as a component of the National Wild and Scenic Rivers System.

This section of the river, known as the Red River Gorge, is a beautiful, untouched area, and is one of the most scenic stretches of river in the Eastern United States.

It richly deserves its name as the "Grand Canyon of the East." The Red River twists through the 600-foot gorge overshadowed by jagged hills. Thirty naturally formed stone bridges are still intact in this area, which also contains a unique diversity of animals and plants, some of which are classified as endangered.

In 1962, the Army Corps of Engineers proposed to build a dam on the Red River, an action that would have flooded the gorge and destroyed its beauty. National attention was drawn to the need to preserve the area in its natural state when Supreme Court Justice William O. Douglas led a march of concerned citizens through the gorge. After years of debate, Congress chose not to fund construction of the dam, but the door remains open for future development.

As one who hiked and camped in the area, I have a strong interest in protecting the gorge. The first bill I introduced when I came to Congress 10 years ago was to protect the gorge from the dam. I also authored language in the 1978 Parks and Recreation Act authorizing the U.S. Forest Service to study the Red River as a candidate for the Wild and Scenic Rivers System. The Forest Service completed the study in 1984. I was deeply disturbed that, despite the fact the study states that the river qualifies for the Wild and Scenic Rivers System in every respect, the Forest Service recommended against designation. Not only does the study contradict itself, but the recommendations differ totally from the recommendations made in an earlier unpublished draft which called for designation.

Not surprisingly, the Forest Service has received a significant number of public comments in opposition to their recommendations. The bill that we are introducing today would override the Forest Service's proposal. Wild and scenic status would preserve the gorge by barring any construction or water projects which would affect the free flow of the river.

We owe it to future generations to preserve outstanding natural resources like the Red River Gorge. I believe that this legislation will provide lasting protection for this priceless natural treasure.●

HOUSTON SHIP CHANNEL NAVIGATION IMPROVEMENT ACT

HON. JACK FIELDS

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, January 24, 1985

● Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Speaker, I am today introducing the Houston Ship Channel Navigation Improvement Act of 1985.

This comprehensive proposal includes four measures I introduced separately in the 98th Congress to improve the operation and efficiency of the Houston ship channel.

Since coming to Congress in 1981, I've had the honor of representing this vital waterway which has grown to become our Nation's third largest port.

The Houston ship channel, which is a 40-foot deep waterway, was officially opened to ocean-going vessels by President Woodrow Wilson on November 10, 1914.

Since that time, the availability of this waterway has acted as a magnet to industry and dozens of companies who have invested more than $15 billion in plants along both sides of the ship channel, which has become known as the fabulous 50 miles.

Today, the ship channel is home for one of the largest petrochemical complexes in the entire world.

It has been estimated that $1 of every $3 in the Houston economy can be attributed to the ship channel. Directly and indirectly, the Port of Houston provides jobs and livelihoods for thousands of Houstonians.

In the State of Texas, the port provides positive economic benefits to some 160,000 of our citizens and over $3 billion a year in tax revenues.

I firmly believe that by enacting this legislation we will improve the overall efficiency of the port, thereby helping the economy of the entire Houston area and protecting vital jobs along the channel.

The first operative section of my bill authorizes the Army Corps of Engineers to maintain a 40-foot depth in the Barbours Cut Channel at Morgan's Point.

The Barbours Cut terminal is a relatively new, multimillion dollar intermodal facility constructed by the Port of Houston Authority in 1970.

Prior to that time, the Barbours Cut Channel had been a part of the Federal Houston Ship Channel project and it served as a barge-depth tributary.

By 1970, however, it became obvious that existing cargo handling and storage facilities could not accommodate the increasing amount of waterborne traffic which arrived at the port on a daily basis.

In response to this growing demand, the port authority built the Barbours Cut terminal and on three separate occasions has dredged the 40-foot-deep access channels to the new cargo handling facilities at an estimated cost of $1.9 million.

Since that time, the terminal has played an increasingly active role in the overall commerce of the port and, in fact, in 1983 it handled some 2.2 million tons of general cargo.

What the Port of Houston Authority is seeking is not any type of Federal reimbursement for its construction and dredging costs but simply that the Corps of Engineers maintain the Barbours Cut terminal channel at a 40-foot depth.

This maintenance responsibility is one that the corps has assumed throughout its history and it is fully consistent with its congressional mandate.

Section 3 of my legislation is similar in that it would require the corps to maintain a 40-foot level at a second tributary of the Houston Ship Channel known as the Bayport Ship Channel.

The Bayport Ship Channel, which is also owned by the port authority, was completed in 1975 at a cost of $21 million. Its purpose was to connect the Houston Ship Channel with a new industrial complex in southeast Harris County.

While commerce at this facility has not approached that of the Barbours Cut terminal, the Bayport Ship Channel will play a key role in the future economic development of the Port of Houston.

Like the Barbours Cut terminal, the Corps of Engineers would assume the financial responsibility of maintaining this tributary at 40 feet.

The Fourth section of my bill requires the corps to maintain a 40-foot depth at Greens Bayou, also a tributary of the Houston Ship Channel.

Like the first two projects, the Greens Bayou area was dredged and has been maintained by the Port Authority of Houston. In the case of this project, the problem has been that the River and Harbor Act of 1965 authorizes the corps to maintain the water depth at 36 rather than 40 feet. As a result, the port authority has maintained the level at 40 feet and has borne the cost of keeping this tributary free of silt and debris.

Once again, this is contrary to Congress' mandate to the Corps of Engineers. I believe we must eliminate this technical limitation of 36 feet. By so doing, there will be no appreciable additional cost to the corps since once the initial dredging has been completed, a similar amount of silt and debris must be removed to maintain the channel's depth.

The final section of my bill would allow the port authority to receive Federal reimbursement for the raising of a railroad bridge which the Coast Guard ruled was an obstruction to navigation over the Greens Bayou area.

While actual modifications were completed in 1980, I believe the Federal Government should provide partial reimbursement for these repairs which became necessary because of severe land subsidence.

Since the port authority spent in excess of $1 million to make the necessary Coast Guard modifications, I'm hopeful Congress will authorize a payment of a portion of their expended funds.

Mr. Speaker, the components of this legislation are neither new nor radical. In fact, they have been the subject of numerous congressional hearings and were incorporated within H.R. 3678, the omnibus water resources development bill, which passed the House overwhelmingly on three separate occasions last year.

In addition, with the assistance of the House Public Works and Transportation Committee, my proposal has been incorporated into H.R. 6, the Water Resources Conservation, Development, and Infrastructure Improvement and Rehabilitation Act of 1985 introduced by Congressman JIM HOWARD on January 3 of this year.

Mr. Speaker, I'm extremely grateful for the committee's support in helping to secure congressional approval of these important projects and hopeful we will act favorably and expeditiously on H.R. 6.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.●

THE BANKING CONVENIENCE ACT OF 1985

HON. GEORGE C. WORTLEY

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, January 24, 1985

● Mr. WORTLEY. Mr. Speaker, when low-tech laws collide with high-tech developments, somebody gets hurt, and that somebody is the consumer. But the consumer does not have to be a loser. Prompt enactment of the Banking Convenience Act will put things in proper perspective.

Congressman LAFALCE and I, along with Senator TRIBLE, have introduced legislation, which assures customers of small banks, big banks, savings banks, savings and loan associations and credit unions that they can continue to put their plastic cards into automatic teller machines and obtain cash, check their balances and make deposits.

Why is legislation necessary for something that's been a widely accepted practice for the last decade?

Because a law suit was filed in the U.S. District Court for the Western District of New York that claimed shared automatic teller machines violated the 1927 Federal law that sets out the rules for branching by national banks. A decision was rendered that stated that a national bank was guilty of illegal branching by participating in a shared automatic teller machine network. The decision is now on appeal.

Prior to the recent decision in the second circuit, the courts had held that a national bank was gui'.y of illegal branching via automatic teller machines only if the bank owned or rented the teller machine. If a national bank participated on a transactional fee basis, it could not be accused of illegal branching.

The Banking Convenience Act clears up what has become a murky situation by codifying the so-called owned or rented rule.

The Banking Convenience Act is not just a New York issue. The Banking Convenience Act protects consumers across the country who own access cards to shared automatic teller machines that were issued by national banks.

In 1927, Congressman McFadden produced his landmark banking bill, which permitted national banks to obtain parity on the branching question with their State chartered sister banks. At the time it was a very liberal law. Now 58 years later, the McFadden Act has been turned around by the courts.

Wise as Congressman McFadden was, he could not have anticipated the many changes in technology that have occurred in the last 50 years but I do believe he would be aghast at the manner in which the courts have interpreted the law bearing his name.

Customers of national banks should be able to participate in shared networks. And if national bank customers are away from home and need a cash advance, they should not be discriminated against.

Customers of other financial institutions that belong to shared networks do not want to be priced out of the automatic teller machine market by absorbing more and more of the costs due to the loss of national bank customers in their system.

Funds available for customers of financial institutions is an important matter. If the Banking Convenience

Act is not enacted in a timely fashion, then Congress will be guilty of making it more difficult for average national bank customers to get their money when it is convenient for them and where it is convenient for them.

Consumers need protection from arbitrary court rulings. I suggest we start with the enactment of this bill.●

FRITZ GRUPE, "STOCKTONIAN OF THE YEAR"

HON. NORMAN D. SHUMWAY

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, January 24, 1985

● Mr. SHUMWAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask that my colleagues join with me in paying tribute to Greenlaw (Fritz) Grupe, of Stockton, CA. Fritz has been chosen as the "Stocktonian of the Year" by the city's board of realtors for his exceptional contributions to the betterment of the community. I am delighted to have this opportunity to recognize his outstanding accomplishments, and to congratulate him on this highly regarded award which is so well deserved.

For five generations, the Grupes have loved the land around Stockton and Fritz is no exception. As chairman and chief executive officer of the Grupe Co., Fritz has perpetuated his family's dedication to productivity and environmental beautification through carefully planned and executed development projects.

Fritz' leadership has benefitted the community across the spectrum. He has served as president of the chamber of commerce and the board of realtors. He is a member of the Board of Trustees, Research Foundation, Land Use Policy Board and Executive Committee of the Urban Land Institute. He also serves as a member of the International Board of Directors of the Young President's Organization, and is a member of the University of the Pacific Board of Regents.

From athletics and physical fitness through youth programs and family activities to education and culture, Fritz Grupe has contributed his time and talent to virtually every aspect of Stocktonian life. He has worked to fight world hunger, to assist the United Way Campaign, and to promote community health, spirit, and cooperative understanding.

In short, Fritz Grupe exemplifies the type of community spirit so important to the American way of life. He has never been too busy to give a little more of himself to another worthwhile endeavor. Fritz has gone out of his way to enhance Stockton, and it is especially fitting that Stockton express its appreciation with this high award. Congratulations to Fritz, and every best wish for continued success.●

JOJOBA TAX SHELTER ELIMINATED

HON. FORTNEY H. (PETE) STARK

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, January 24, 1985

● Mr. STARK. Mr. Speaker, today I am reintroducing a bill to clarify that the farm syndicate rules which requires capitalization of expenses under section 278(b) of the Internal Revenue Code apply to jojoba growers.

In case you haven't heard of these desert-style tax shelters, jojobas are beans which grow on bushes in arid climates and produce an oil used in shampoo and cosmetics and as an industrial lubricant. The jojoba plant takes 5 or 6 years to produce oil for marketing purposes. It takes 3 years to determine if the plants are female and bear beans. It takes then another 3 years for the plants to mature to a stage when they can produce the oil which can be marketed as a substitute for sperm whale oil.

During the first 6 years, the jojoba produces something better than sperm whale oil: The jojoba promoters claim that jojoba syndicates shelter outside income of investors with deductions for 6 years in a row before there is any income from the investment. Their claim, however, is not substantiated by the Tax Code.

The Tax Reform Act of 1976 provides that, when a crop grown by a farming syndicate is the type of crop which takes years to develop from planting to marketing stage, the investors must capitalize the costs of planting, cultivating, and maintaining the crop until there is a commercial crop or yield. The law expressly covers fruits and nuts.

The jojoba investors have argued that section 278(b) does not apply to them because the jojoba is the seed of a fruit and is inedible. Then IRS issued regulations in November 1983, making it quite clear that the capitalization requirement covers jojoba growers. These regulations have brought great consternation on the part of jojoba investors who have petitioned me to "save the whales." Maybe the jojoba investors don't realize that Congress stopped the importation of sperm whale oil in 1971. I surmise that it's a whale of a tax shelter they want me to save.

I am not about to protect taxpayers who have profited from end-running the Tax Code. Therefore, I am introducing this bill today to amend section 278(b) of the Internal Revenue Code to remove any possible shade of ambiguity, any doubt, that the capitalization requirements apply to jojoba syndicates.●

THE FUNDS AVAILABILITY ACT OF 1985

HON. JOHN J. LaFALCE

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, January 24, 1985

● Mr. LaFALCE. Mr. Speaker, I would like to introduce legislation designed to end what is called the float game—a game in which banks have been able to set their own rules, often to the detriment of their customers. This is legislation which I proposed with the last Congress.

By way of explanation, the float game is played when a bank and thrift customers are refused access to their funds until deposited checks have cleared. In some instances, customers are informed that the clearing process takes up to 3 weeks—a time period that hardly squares with the reality of the check clearing system.

In part, the float game is a creature of the technological revolution in banking, and its existence demonstrates the unevenness of progress in the electronic age. The fact is that the movement of checks forward through the interstate processing system run by the Fed is quite efficient. When the accepting bank starts a check on its way through the system to the payer bank, the check is handled by machines programmed to read MICR—Magnetic Ink Character Recognition—codes. This mechanized handling of checks results in very rapid clearance of good checks. A problem occurs when a check is bad and must be sent back through the system to the bank which originally presented it for collection. Because only 1 percent of total checks fail to clear, there has been little investment of thought or money in the check return system. The return process is manual, and an uncollectable check must pass through each institution that has handled it, so final notification to the collecting bank can take days. In the interim, the check floats. Institutions that want to take advantage of the slow return process simply tell their customers they must wait until final acknowledgement is received that a check is good.

Depository institutions have a vested interest in the float game. This is so because as long as the funds are not credited and made available to the customer, the bank has the authority to make use of them. Overnight investments of floating funds earn millions for depository institutions—though often at the expense of the consumer.

The chairman of the House Banking Committee, FERNAND ST GERMAIN, has vigorously pressed Federal regulators to end the float game by requiring changes in bank policy and improving the return system. Last year, after

New York State moved to end the float game through regulation, Chairman ST GERMAIN declared that the time had come to demand action on the Federal level. I strongly support that view, and thus today introduce "The Funds Availability Act of 1985," a bill requiring the Federal Reserve to devise and implement rules providing a reasonable period of time within which banking customers can draw on an item deposited in their accounts. In addition, my bill requires institutions to notify their customers in writing of the time limitations applicable to their accounts and to post such notification in a conspicuous place at each branch of the institution.

The check clearing system is a complex maze that handles 3.5 billion pieces of paper per year. It is a system that should be used for the benefit of consumers—not against them. The "Funds Availability Act" would ensure that the system works well for all participants.

The text of the bill follows:

H.R. —

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SHORT TITLE

SECTION 1. This Act may be cited as the "Funds Availability Act".

PURPOSE

SEC. 2. It is the purpose of this Act to provide all retail banking customers with the ability to draw against items deposited fo posited for collection with any depository institution located in the United States within a reasonable period of time.

REGULATIONS

SEC. 3. (a) The Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System shall promulgate regulations to establish a reasonable period of time within which a depository institution shall permit a retail banking customer to draw on an item which has been received for deposit in such customer's account.

(b) The Board is authorized to collect from depository institutions such information as may be required by the Board for purposes of promulgating the regulations required by this section.

(c) If special circumstances are involved, a depository institution and a retail banking customer may agree in writing to a greater period of time than the period of time specified in regulations promulgated pursuant to this section for the drawing against items received for deposit in such customer's account, except that such agreement shall not be contained on a preprinted form and the use of such agreements shall not be a usual or regular business practice of such depository institution.

NOTIFICATION TO CUSTOMERS

SEC. 4. The regulations promulgated under this Act shall require each depository institution—

(1) to notify each of its retail banking customers, in writing, of the applicable time limitations on the right to draw on items received for deposit in such customer's account; and

(2) to keep posted, in a conspicuous place at each branch of such depository institution, a notice which substantially sets forth the generally applicable time limitations relating to the right of the customers of such depository institution to draw on items deposited in their accounts.

DEFINITIONS

SEC. 5. For purposes of this Act—

(1) the term "Board" means the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System; and

(2) the term "depository institution" shall have the same meaning given such term in clauses (i) through (vi) of section 19(b)(1)(A) of the Federal Reserve Act.

EFFECTIVE DATE

SEC. 6. This Act shall take effect on the date of the enactment of this Act.●

CAPPING FRINGE BENEFITS

HON. WILLIS D. GRADISON, JR.

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, January 24, 1985

● Mr. GRADISON. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to share with my colleagues an article which I wrote for the Cincinnati Business Courier on the subject of capping fringe benefits, and which appeared in the December 10–16, 1984, issue.

FRINGE BENEFITS: TIME FOR MODEST REFORMS

The Internal Revenue Code defines income for tax purposes to be "all income from whatever source derived." Like most rules, however, this one has its exceptions. Over the years, Congress has excluded from taxable income about a dozen fringe benefits. In addition, other nonstatutory benefits have been excluded on the basis of judicial rulings or administrative practice.

I believe it is desirable to encourage the availability of tax-free fringe benefits. They serve useful social purposes, such as providing health insurance education benefits, legal services, dependent care assistance, group term life insurance and pensions.

On the other hand, there are sound reasons to question the continuation on unlimited tax-free fringe benefits. For example, unrestricted employer-provided health insurance has had the unintended effect of helping to make health care costs the most inflationary component of the economy. The reason is that the present system has discouraged both health care recipients and providers from more carefully considering costs in selecting health care plans.

Based on data collected by the U.S. Chamber of Commerce and the U.S. Department of Commerce, the proportion of employee compensation represented by non-taxable fringe benefits has grown from 12.6 percent to 28.5 percent in 1983. Others have produced somewhat different numbers, but they all tell the same story. Clearly, without some modification, the present system threatens to erode the revenue base. A narrower tax base means higher deficits or higher tax rates, or both.

Fringe benefits comprise approximately one-third of all so-called tax expenditures, defined as how much revenue is lost because of tax exemptions, exclusions, credits and deductions. That's more than $100 billion every year because of tax-free fringe benefits alone! Unrestrained tax expenditures contribute to higher deficits every bit as much as runaway spending, and both deserve public scrutiny.

There are other reasons for concern. Tax-exempt fringes are obviously counterproductive to the goal of a simpler tax system. Furthermore, employer-provided benefits contain strong elements of inequity. For example, highly compensated employees benefit more from the same dollar value of fringes than do others. In addition, many people, such as most farmers and owners of unincorporated businesses, have no access to tax-free fringes.

This year, Congress clarified a tax treatment of non-statutory fringe benefits. Specifically, the Deficit Reduction Act of 1984 excludes from gross income (that is, as nontaxable) any employer-provided benefit which meets at least one of the following criteria: a no-additional cost service, a qualified employee discount, a working condition fringe, a "de minimus" (so small as to be insignificant) fringe, and on-premises gyms and athletic facilities.

One well-known benefit qualifying for exemption is free airline travel provided to employees by airlines. Under the new law, this and similar benefits will be continued, but only if specific non-discrimination and line-of-business requirements are met.

The changes recently approved by Congress generally have been confined to constraining fringes with relatively minor revenue impact. There are additional steps that would make our tax system fairer and more predictable.

One alternative is to place a value limit, or cap, on each fringe. Group life insurance and death benefits already have such limits. Recently, I proposed a $5,000 cap on employer-provided education assistance available tax-free to employees, which was enacted. (The average benefit is $250.)

I think an even better approach might be to provide a single cap on the total value of all fringes offered to each employee. Similar to a so-called cafeteria plan, employees would choose from a menu of fringes and would only pay tax on any amount that exceeded the total cap.

The basic tax treatment of fringe benefits is unlikely to change, nor do I advocate major change. But some reform is clearly appropriate. Modest reforms, along the lines I have just mentioned, will lead us to a more efficient and fairer tax system for all Americans.●

ON THE NEED FOR A SPECIAL ENVOY FOR NORTHERN IRELAND

HON. MARIO BIAGGI

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, January 24, 1985

● Mr. BIAGGI. Mr. Speaker, in my capacity as chairman of the bipartisan Ad Hoc Congressional Committee for Irish Affairs, I have introduced House Concurrent Resolution 7 to designate a special envoy for Northern Ireland.

I wish to place into the RECORD two articles which relate to the need for such a special envoy as well as the support which it enjoys within the Irish-American community. The first is an article by Jack Holland printed in the December 15, 1984, Irish Echo entitled, "After Thatcher's Out—The U.S. Should Come In." The second is an editorial printed in the Irish Echo the week that the new resolution was introduced.

Following these articles I also wish to insert the full text of House Concurrent Resolution 7 which I omitted from my CONGRESSIONAL RECORD statement of January 3, 1985:

[From the Irish Echo, Dec. 15, 1984]

AFTER THATCHER'S "OUT"—U.S. SHOULD COME IN

(By Jack Holland)

Now that British Prime Minister Thatcher has effectively squashed the prospect of any real progress in Anglo-Irish diplomacy on the matter of Northern Ireland, a few American politicians are arguing it is the time for some diplomatic moves on this side of the Atlantic.

Bronx Congressman Mario Biaggi and Bronx Assemblyman John Dearie both advocate, that the U.S. should take the opportunity to make itself heard in Ireland and England and Belfast. They suggest that the Reagan Administration appoint a special envoy to Northern Ireland. He would act as an "honest broker" between London, Dublin, and Belfast.

In a recent letter to the New York Times, Biaggi wrote: "The time has come for the United States to play a more positive role in trying to assist the peace process in Northern Ireland." He intends to reintroduce his resolution before the Congress calling for the President to designate a special envoy "to investigate and report how best the United States could assist parties in Belfast, Dublin and London, as well as communities in Northern Ireland, to arrive at an early, just and peaceful resolution of the present conflict in Northern Ireland."

Likewise, John Dearie, who has been advancing the special envoy proposal for 18 months, has come to "the sad conclusion . . . that virtually no realistic hope for progress to peace will be attained solely through Ireland and Great Britain negotiating."

"Now more than ever," he says, "American participation in both a peace process and a peace solution" is needed. He notes that every Irish American organization supports the idea of a special envoy.

He also observes that twice recently Reagan's administration rejected the idea. But he argues that Thatcher's off-hand and contemptuous dismissal of the forum report recommendations has created a new set of circumstances which might lead the administration to reevaluate its position. Dearie points out that Reagan gave verbal support to the work of the New Ireland Forum.

He says, "It would appear very inconsistent for the American Government to simply remain silent allowing Prime Minister Thatcher to flatly say 'no, no, no' to the major proposals the report advanced."

Dearie believes that the Irish American community "simply cannot let up their organized, unified voice," which should demand that America give attention to Northern Ireland and apply pressure on Thatcher.

Both Biaggi and Dearie note that President Reagan has made references to Northern Ireland's crisis on several occasions. Biaggi observes that on March 17, 1981, Reagan said, "As President, I recognize the vital importance to our nation and the Western alliance of a peaceful, just and swift solution to the current problems in Northern Ireland."

Earlier this year, Reagan spoke in support of the forum. But it is time, wrote Congressman Biaggi, "for the administration to back that sentiment with action." All the pious sentiments in the world, as everyone knows, "don't amount to a hill of beans"—in the words of Humphrey Bogart.

President Reagan will meet with Mrs. Thatcher next week, on Dec. 22. It is obvious what she will be demanding of him: stronger action against Irish American supporters of the Irish Republican Army—however they are vaguely defined.

But it is doubtful if Reagan will do anything to strain that "special relationship" between the two governments. He has shown no inclination to do so before—and there is, from his point of view, even less of a reason to do so now.

In the wake of the IRA's recent attack on Thatcher, Reagan will be more concerned about showing a solid front to oppose terrorism than getting involved in such a contentious issue.

The great pity of it is that Mario Biaggi and John Dearie and those other American politicians involved in the issue are right. There is a vital role for America in regard to Ireland. The British are more sensitive to American sentiment on Northern Ireland than they are to anything else.

The very fact that Irish Americans are monitoring British actions in Northern Ireland already acts as a kind of a brake on British military policy. A more concerted and formal diplomatic approach from the U.S. Government is probably the only thing that will get the British moving. Unfortunately, this administration has shown no will to initiate such an approach—nor is one likely. When I spoke with Congressman Biaggi last week on the phone from Washington, I asked him what he thought about prospects for some move on Reagan's part to pressure Thatcher on Northern Ireland. There was a short silence.

"Hope springs eternal," said the Congressman.

[From the Irish Echo, Jan. 12, 1985]

BACKING A SPECIAL ENVOY

On the opening day of the new Congress resolutions were introduced in both houses calling on the President to appoint a special U.S. envoy to assist in solving the Northern Ireland impasse.

There is ample precedent for such an appointment. In recent years special U.S. envoys have been involved in the Middle East and Latin America. More importantly, there is much that can be done by such an action in the role of a catalyst.

Northern Ireland has been left in a vacuum while world leaders concerned themselves with other trouble spots. This situation cannot continue. Indeed it continues at the peril of the Western democracies.

It is in the interest of not just Ireland and Britain that peace and justice come to this area, but it is important to the United States, Canada and all the Common Market nations.

We commend Representative Mario Biaggi and Senator Daniel P. Moynihan for introducing the resolutions and we urge other members of Congress to support this very worthwhile action.

H. CON. RES. 7

Whereas the conflict in Northern Ireland continues;

Whereas a lasting political and peaceful settlement in Northern Ireland can only be achieved through diplomatic discussion and accommodation based on the consent and respecting the rights and concerns of all of the people of Ireland;

Whereas the violence associated with the conflict in Northern Ireland, whether civilian or official in nature, serves to impede progress toward a peaceful political solution and has claimed throusands of innocent victims;

Whereas President Ronald Reagan on March 17, 1981, said "As an American proud of his Irish ancestry and as President I recognize the vital importance to our Nation and the Western alliance of a peaceful, just, and swift solution to current problems in Northern Ireland. The United States will continue to urge the parties to come together for a just and peaceful solution. * * * I add my personal prayers and the good offices of the United States to those Irish and indeed to all world citizens who wish fervently for peace and victory over those who sow fear and terror."; and

Whereas the United States has been constructive and helpful in trying to help settle other conflicts in troubled areas of the world by designating special envoys: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That it is the sense of the Congress that the President should appoint a highly qualified, independent, and appropriately experienced special envoy to investigate and report how best the United States could actively assist all intertested parties in Belfast, Dublin, and London as well as the communities in Northern Ireland to arrive at an early, just, and peaceful resolution of the present conflict in Northern Ireland●

TRADE PHOBIA

HON. DON EDWARDS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, January 24, 1985

● Mr. EDWARDS of California. Mr. Speaker, I, too, am committed to national security. However, I also want export policies that encourage U.S. firms to sell in the increasingly competitive world market. That is why I am deeply concerned with President Reagan's recent decision authorizing systematic Defense Department review of high-tech exports to 15 non-Communist nations.

I have written to President Reagan urging him to rescind his unfortunate decision. In view of the mounting trade deficit and the accompanying loss of millions of jobs, I believe that this increased Pentagon role in exports can only result in a further deterioration in overseas sales and a further loss of export-related jobs.

I would like to share with my colleagues my letter to the President and an editorial on the issue which was printed in my local newspaper, the San Jose Mercury News. I believe this material will be helpful in the upcoming debate on foreign trade.

CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, DC, January 15, 1985.

Hon. RONALD REAGAN,
President, The White House,
Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: It was with grave concern that I learned of your decision to authorize systematic Pentagon review of all applicaitons for licenses to export certain types of high-tech equipment to 15 non-communist nations.

Your order, Mr. President, clearly downgrades the Commerce Department. It removes from this department, traditionally interested in helping American business, the major responsibility for export licenses and shifts it to the Pentagon. Your order also apparently gives to the Pentagon new authority over "distribution licenses" and authorizes the Pentagon to revise the list of 15 countries as circumstances change. With this order, the signal will go to American manufacturers: "Don't bother to apply for an export license. The Pentagon bureaucrats with kill your sales, either by delay or harrassment."

I believe that proper management of the export license process by the Commerce Department can ensure that the Defense Department's concerns will be met. There is total agreement, shared by Commerce, that we don't want sensitive high-tech goods ending up in Soviet hands. The problems will not be resolved, however, by new responsibilities assigned to the Pentagon, a massive bureaucracy notorious for delays and excess paper work.

I represent a portion of California known as Silicon Valley where innovative companies have been at the heart of the explosive development of high technology, providing hundreds of thousands of new jobs and hundreds of millions of dollars in goods sold overseas. In recent years the overvalued dollar and other phenomena have caused our high-tech trade surplus to plummet from $26 billion in 1981 to approximately $5 billion in 1984.

I know, Mr. President, that with our trade deficit approaching $150 billion per year, you share my deep concern over our serious trade imbalance. This imbalance has already resulted in the loss of 2-3 million jobs. Yet your order, giving the Pentagon new powers over export licenses, can only result in a further deterioration in overseas sales and further loss of export related jobs.

Mr. President, the export licensing situation even before this unfortunate new order discouraged legitimate American exporters. Companies in my area have been coming to me frustrated with licensing delays and bureaucratic hassles. One firm, for example, had to wait up to 5 months for licenses which, in the past, had been routinely approved for shipments to Hong Kong, France, and Ireland. Six hundred thousand dollars worth of sales were at risk. Another had to wait nearly 9 months to add a new consignee to a distribution license. Still another, which has consistently exported the same type of product and never once had a license denied, suddenly had two licenses rejected in a matter of weeks. I believe the new order can only make matters worse.

I respectfully, but urgently, request that you rescind your decision transferring the responsibility for these export licenses to the Pentagon. The people in charge at the Commerce Department clearly care about our national security; but, they also clearly care about selling American-made products overseas. It is they who can best balance these two very important national concerns. For the export licenses at issue here, I strongly urge that you return the responsibility, and provide the resources to carry out that responsibility, to the Commerce Department.

With kindest regards.

Sincerely,

DON EDWARDS,
Member of Congress.

[From the San Jose Mercury News, Jan. 18, 1985]

TRADE PHOBIA

The Pentagon and the Commerce Department couldn't agree, so the National Security Council made up their minds for them. That's not a great way to make a decision, as the new rules for exporting high technology products show.

Last September, this issue seemed to have been largely resolved. High-tech companies would be required to put together a plan to assure that their exports didn't fall into unfriendly hands. The Commerce Department would write a model plan and check up on the companies.

But the Pentagon was displeased. Although its office of Strategic Trade already has authority to oversee any high-tech exports to communist countries, it was concerned about exports to nations like Austria and Hong Kong, where high-technology products have little difficulty parting the Iron Curtain.

Last fall's Commerce Department rules were a reasonable middle ground between national security concerns and the economic benefits of expanded trade.

The forced NSC compromise; on the other hand, may decide the delicate balance between trade and defense by pulling a heavy thumb on the Pentagon's side of the scale.

The NSC compromise allows the Pentagon to choose any 15 non-communist countries and review exports to those countries case-by-case. If the Pentagon objected to a potential shipment, it would have to object within 15 days. If Commerce and the Pentagon could not resolve the disagreement, an NSC deputy would decide.

For the NSC compromise to work well, the Pentagon would have to display an uncharacteristically light touch, choosing countries and products with restraint.

But its Office of Strategic Trade is gearing up to examine 16,000 cases per year which argues that defense authorities intend to make full, complete, and obstructive use of their new powers.

That would add an extra stratum of oversight to a trade process that is already buried in paper work.

The extra bureaucracy put U.S. firms at a competive disadvantage, while the buyers will simply turn to European or Asian suppliers. Up to 40 percent of Silicon Valley sales are exports so new restrictions could really hurt.

Meanwhile, there is no evidence that this extra level or review, over and above the existing Commerce Department restrictions will prevent the Soviets from acquiring technology from foreign products, from reviewing the published technical literature, and from outright theft and smuggling.

This battle over high-tech exports was fought all last year in the Congress. In the end, even the Republican-controlled Senate didn't believe it made sense to give the Pentagon the statutory authority to oversee exports to non-communist nations.

That was the right decision not this second-guess NSC compromise.●

AAA SUPPORTS SEAT BELT LAWS

HON. JOHN D. DINGELL

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, January 24, 1985

● Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, the American Automobile Association, which has been in the forefront of promoting automobile safety, recently has announced its strong support for State mandatory safety belt use laws as the preferred means of slashing highway death and injury toll. AAA will soon undertake a major nationwide effort to convince 40 State legislatures to pass such laws. A national survey of the general public recently completed by AAA showed that American drivers prefer safety belt use laws by a wide margin over automatic restraints. When asked whether they prefer mandatory safety belt laws or purchasing automatic safety devices, fully 67 percent preferred safety belt laws compared to only 27 percent who chose the purchase of automatic safety devices.

In this light, I insert into the RECORD the text of a formal statement on AAA's support for mandatory seat belt use laws which was presented by James B. Creal, AAA president, as part of the AAA Public and Government Services National Conference in Washington, DC, on December 10, 1984.

The statement follows:

STATEMENT BY JAMES B. CREAL, PRESIDENT, AMERICAN AUTOMOBILE ASSOCIATION

No one knows better than AAA that in our highly mobile American society death by motor vehicle is a national health problem. It ranks just behind heart disease, cancer and stroke as the leading cause of death in this country. And it is the leading cause of death for children and young adults ages 1 to 24.

In 1983, some 43,000 Americans died in highway accidents. Another 400,000 suffered traffic injuries. During the past 10 years 470,000 Americans died in crashes on our nation's roadways.

Total societal costs of these crashes, in 1980 dollars, is about $57 billion. This includes medical care, productivity losses, property damage, legal and court costs, coroner medical examiner, emergency services, insurance, public assistance administration and government traffic safety programs.

It is equally well known that the single best way to reduce these tragedies is to protect motor vehicle occupants by packaging them securely inside the passenger compartment.

In July of this year, 15 years after the automobile crash protection question first became a public policy issue, Secretary of Transportation Elizabeth H. Dole issued a final rule on occupant crash protection standards. The rule requires installation of automatic restraints in all new cars by the 1990 model year, on a phased-in basis beginning with 1987 models. However, the rule would be rescinded if states representing two-thirds of the U.S. population pass mandatory safety belt laws before April 1, 1989.

Three months ago we wrote to all AAA club managers seeking their views as to which option AAA should support—mandatory safety belt laws or automatic restraints.

Almost unanimously, clubs responding advocated mandatory safety belt use laws. They cite numerous surveys of AAA members on the question. All surveys reported to us show that given the choice, AAA members support belt use laws.

AAA Headquarters also commissioned a study of the attitudes of the general public on the occupant crash protection issue. The survey, just completed last week, was conducted by a reputable, full-service research organization on a national probability sampling basis. It involved 1,005 respondents.

When asked whether they prefer mandatory safety belt use laws or purchasing automatic safety devices, a vast majority of all respondents preferred safety belt use laws: fully 67 percent chose this option, compared to only 27 percent who chose the purchase of automatic safety devices. Six percent were undecided.

The general public, according to the survey, prefers safety belt use laws 2-to-1 over automatic restraints. Analysis of the data shows that the results hold true across all demographic lines—including age groups, income levels and education.

This is a remarkable turn-around in public attitudes over a period of just a few years. Just as drinking and driving is no longer acceptable in our society, there is a shift in mood toward slashing the sorry statistics behind highway crash deaths and injuries.

Based on these findings, the AAA Board of Directors has just unanimously approved a new policy on passenger protection.

The new policy of the American Automobile Association supports mandatory safety belt use laws.

The Board took this action at its December 6 meeting for four reasons:

1. AAA members and the general public show a significant preference for safety belt laws.

2. A policy change at this time positions AAA clubs to work now for laws in their respective states. Forty-four state legislatures should begin session next month. Forty-two of them are expected to have safety belt laws introduced, or public hearings held on the issue. Two other states—New York and New Jersey—already have enacted safety belt laws.

3. Safety belt equipment exists in almost every car on the road right now. It is easy to use, and there is no further cost involved. Its effectiveness has been proven worldwide. It can reduce—by half—the risk of death and injury in a crash.

4. Voluntary safety belt use, which AAA has always strongly promoted, reached an all-time high of only 15 percent national compliance in 1983. By June of this year the use rate had dropped to 13 percent, despite government and private sector initiatives to increase their use.

For these reasons, AAA supports legislation or regulations which mandate use of safety belts and approved child restraint systems by all occupants of passenger cars, vans, pick-ups and trucks, provided the legislation includes at least the following:

1. There should be a reasonable fine established, certainly no higher than that imposed for the ordinary traffic infraction.

2. Violation of the law should not be a part of a state's point system nor have any relation to suspension or revocation of a driver's license.

3. Exemption should be made for certain persons who cannot or should not use safety belts.

4. Exemption should be made for in-use vehicles that at the time of manufacture did not contain safety belt systems.

Where such legislation or regulations are enacted, states should also determine whether violations should be considered when assessing liability for damages in civil actions arising out of motor vehicle accidents, or for imposing surcharges on auto insurance premiums.

AAA also recognizes that compliance with mandatory belt use legislation requires continuing enforcement and public support. Also essential are information programs that increase public understanding of the safety benefits belt use provides to vehicle occupants in traffic crashes or other emergency situations.

At the same time, AAA recognizes that additional passenger protection is necessary. A decision to require vehicle occupants to use their currently available safety systems should not deter efforts to improve on crash protection.

Occupant restraint technologies have advanced considerably during the past decade and further breakthroughs should improve the performance and comfort of such systems, while reducing their costs to a reasonable figure.

Meanwhile, if all states can be convinced to pass safety belt laws, 5,000 lives can be saved each year.

Thirty-four nations with mandatory safety belt laws already have achieved significant decreases in serious injuries and fatalities. In many countries safety belt usage rates have doubled and reductions in fatalities range to nearly 20 percent.

The United States should do no less.

Let's all work to make it happen.●

TAX SEIZURE LEGISLATION—THE PUBLIC IS ENTITLED TO RELIEF FROM BAD DEALS

HON. FORTNEY H. (PETE) STARK

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, January 24, 1985

● Mr. STARK. Mr. Speaker, when regular Internal Revenue Service collection efforts fail and a taxpayer does not pay his delinquent tax obligations, the Government is empowered to seize the taxpayer's property and sell it to satisfy the liability. This does not happen very often but it does happen. The resulting revenue is very important to the Nation's tax base.

When the law requires the Government to acquire the seized property, this can often turn out to be a bad deal for the Treasury Department and the public. In the absence of an offer to buy the seized property at the minimum bid price, the Internal Revenue Code now requires that it "shall be declared to be purchased at such price for the United States."

What happens if the seized property turns out to be in poor condition or is otherwise unmarketable unless the Government makes a substantial additional investment in it? For example, what would be the result if the seized property is real estate with a cloud on the title, that would be prohibitively expensive to remove in relation to the delinquent tax obligation? Or how would a seizure be handled involving an automobile that is found to be a real lemon?

Obviously, these kinds of transactions turn out often to be bad investments for the Government. As the law now exists, the IRS has no choice but to bite the bullet, treat the property as purchased by it for the minimum bid price, get stuck with something the Government may not be able to dispose of except at considerable cost to other taxpayers and also lose its tax claim against the delinquent taxpayer for the amount of the mimimum bid price.

Some time ago, the General Accounting Office uncovered this problem and recommended that Congress find a legislative solution to it. I am pleased today to present a bill which addresses that concern. It should reduce the needless waste of revenue caused by the Government being forced to restore the marketability of unwanted property it reluctantly acquired through tax seizures.

The idea behind the bill is very simple. I propose that the Internal Revenue Code be amended to provide that if no person offers to buy the seized property at a sale for the minimum bid price, it shall be considered as either: First, purchased at such price for the United States; or second, released back to the taxpayer if the IRS determines it to be against the Government's interest to acquire the property. This Government election shall be made under criteria to be developed by the Commissioner of the IRS.

The bill makes a lot of sense by giving the Government added flexibility to conduct its property seizures on a more prudent and businesslike basis. I welcome Members' support of this needed tax reform legistation.●

TOLERANCE ABORTED

HON. LES AuCOIN

OF OREGON

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, January 24, 1985

● Mr. AuCOIN. Mr. Speaker, Tuesday was the 12th anniversary of the historic Supreme Court decision Roe versus Wade, and the Nation's Capitol was again filled with thousands of demonstrators participating in the annual "March For Life."

My record is one of strong commitment to what I consider to be a fundamental individual freedom for women and their families in allowing them, legally, under our laws, to make their own reproductive choices.

So I don't agree with the march participants who want to overturn Roe versus Wade and to make access to safe abortions in this country illegal.

But I believe most strongly that it is the marchers right to come here, to protest what they consider bad policy and to seek change through the legitimate and recognized channels of change. On this we agree.

And it is a far better response to a perceived wrong than the criminal violence we've seen in crimes across this country—arson and abortion clinic bombings—committed by individuals, and sometimes groups of individuals who somehow see their crimes as furthering their "pro-life" cause.

President Reagan addressed the "March For Life" for the first time since becoming President. I do not agree with his call for a constitutional amendment outlawing abortion. I'm more than a little mystified at the logic that allows him to call for a halt of Government interference in the lives of individuals during his inaugural speech while at the same time trying to inject the Government into the most private of all decisions.

But I was pleased to hear him repudiate the clinic bombings by calling for a complete rejection of violence as a means of settling the issue. In tandem with an earlier statement in which he condemned the violence and pledged to punish those responsible to the fullest extent of the law, a clear message has been sent from a President who opposes abortion but also abhors the bombings. Perhaps now we can be hopeful that the violence will stop.

Last year there were 25 incidents of arson or bombings of abortion clinics in this country, some in my home State of Oregon. Damage has been done in varying degrees—fortunately, so far, with no loss of life or major physical injury to individuals. But damage has been done just the same in terms of increased fear and concern of these bomb attacks and from an enormous increase in clinic picketing, and sidewalk intimidation and harassment. That's a kind of damage that can't be quantified, particularly in terms of invading one of the most private and tortuous decisions a woman ever makes. I'm convinced that the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms is committed to solving all of the clinic bombings, and commend their fine work I read about in the paper on Saturday in which an intensive investigation on their part led to the arrest of three Maryland men in connection with eight bombings of abortion facilities in the Washington area.

Our response to the violence must be measured and reasoned. And I urge my colleagues to consider some of the thoughts raised in the following editorial which appeared in the New York Times yesterday reminding us of the need for tolerance. With this in mind, I'm hopeful that hearings on clinic violence can be held sometime soon, with an opportunity for people on both sides of this issue to testify before appropriate committees.

The editorial follows:

TOLERANCE, ABORTED

Last Saturday, dozens of women—some still groggy from anesthesia, some weeping—stood shivering in the icy wind outside the Eastern Women's Center in Manhattan. They had gone there to end their pregnancies, a right affirmed by the Supreme Court in its Roe v. Wade decision 12 years ago; but that right was obstructed by a bomb threat that evacuated the building.

Roe v. Wade does not endorse abortion; it leaves the decision, at least during the first three months of pregnancy, up to a woman and her doctor. Nevertheless, some Americans disagree with it so strenuously that they approve of threats, forcing clinic patients to run a cruel gantlet, and even violence. There have been 30 instances of bombing, firebombing and arson at abortion clinics since May 1982.

"These are hard decisions they make and live with," the director of the center said of the women forced into the cold in Manhattan. "Why are they being singled out as targets of abuse? How can anyone dare?"

Those who dare—those hissers of threats and builders of bombs—do so because they are possessed by a zeal that poisons politics. They are so sure they are right they cannot acknowledge that people on the other side of the debate can also be creatures of conscience.

The abortion controversy did not begin with Roe v. Wade, or with modern medical technology. It has divided humankind for centuries; even Aristotle was wary of the question. Those who call themselves pro-life have as much right to speak their minds as those who call themselves pro-choice. But once the former denounce the latter as murderers, they risk one offense against civilized society and commit another.

The risk is that they inflame those hissers of threats and builders of bombs. The offense is that they deny the freedom of thought promised by the American contract.

They insist that they proceed on the basis of morality. Not your choice, they are telling women. Our choice. But someone who believes that no woman should be forced to incubate a fetus against her will can also proceed on the basis of morality.

How do societies resolve conflicts between two opposing moralities? In other countries and other eras, the answer has often been violence, even war. The answer that America has promised, from the Pilgrims forward, is tolerance.

Yesterday President Reagan addressed, for the first time, the annual March for Life anti-abortion protest. After calling for "a complete rejection of violence as means of settling this issue," the President reiterated his commitment to "ending the terrible national tragedy of abortion."

Mr. Reagan's statement was predictable. He has campaigned against abortion for years. But there are millions of Americans who hoped for something more from the President of the United States on this 12th anniversary of a decision that gives practical, even brilliant voice not to abortion and not to its foes but to tolerance.●

LEGISLATION CLARIFYING THE STATUS OF AUTOMATED TELLER MACHINES

HON. JOHN J. LaFALCE

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, January 24, 1985

● Mr. LaFALCE. Mr. Speaker, we all understand that one of the fundamental challenges of writing laws is to have them specific enough to ensure that the policy question at hand is addressed, yet general enough to anticipate what will take place in the future. Inevitably, we realize that we must rewrite and revise laws that did not anticipate the knowledge explosion and technological advances of the last two decades.

I have found these economic and technological advances to be of particular relevance in the area of banking law. Therefore, I wish to introduce a measure which seeks to smooth the way for consumers to benefit from innovation in the financial service sector.

THE BANKING CONVENIENCE ACT

Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing legislation to clarify the legal treatment of automated teller machines [ATM's].

In so-doing, I am joining Senator PAUL TRIBLE, who proposed this legislation in the Senate in the last Congress. Representative GEORGE WORTLEY of Syracuse also joins me as an original cosponsor.

USE AND DEVELOPMENT OF ATM NETWORKS

ATM's have become important sources of bank services for many consumers, and represent the fastest growing means of electronic funds transfer. Financial institutions are increasingly participating in shared ATM networks, where cardholders of one institution can engage in financial transactions at the terminals owned by many other institutions—ATM's are owned both by banks and by vendors in other industries.

Today, after an investment of over $1 billion in shared ATM systems, 50 million magnetic cards are used in networks and 9,000 financial institutions participate in over 200 regional systems and 7 national ones. This explosive growth in shared systems has been driven by financial considerations and consumer demand. Shared systems enable institutions to offer their customers convenience and, at the same time, reduce the costs of providing transaction services. Shared ATM's save the costs of tellers and branch facilities, and act as competitive equalizers for smaller institutions which do not have the customer base or income to build their own systems.

Shared ATM networks are also important structural components of the continuing revolution in electronically provided bank services. ATM network growth has stimulated interest in developing point-of-sale systems—in which the customer's account is accessed by electronic device at the point-of-sale—and in computerized shopping and banking services—both of which will demand system sharing.

ATM NETWORKS THREATENED

Because most of our banking laws were written before the electronic revolution in financial services, ATM networks have developed under a cloud of legal uncertainty and confusion. This cloud of uncertainty has darkened ominously because of a recent court case, and I believe that we must act immediately to dispel any doubts about the viability of these systems.

In April 1984, the U.S. District Court for the Western District of New York ruled that an ATM owned by a supermarket, but used by customers of Marine Midland Bank as part of a shared network, was a branch of the bank for purposes of the McFadden Act, and was thus subject to any branching restrictions applied by the State. Marine Midland is a national bank and had, like most banks participating in shared networks, relied on an interpretation by the Comptroller of the Currency that an ATM utilized by customers of a national bank was not to be considered a branch for the purposes of the McFadden Act unless the machine was owned or rented by the bank in question.

The district court ruling, which is now being appealed, has implications far broader than the specifics of the case imply. In fact, the ruling highlights what has become a patchwork quilt of State and Federal regulation of ATM's, and threatens the existence of shared systems across the Nation. If this ruling is upheld or similar suits instituted, the ultimate result could be that many institutions participating in networks will suddenly be deemed to be engaged in illegal branching. Under the McFadden Act, national banks can branch only to the extent that their state of residence allows State-chartered banks to do so.

In 1981, anticipating such a legal quandary over the status of ATM's, I introduced legislation authorizing national banks to gradually expand their ATM services. These services would expand in the home office area and State, and ultimately across State lines. In January, Representative CHALMERS WYLIE, the ranking Republican on the House Banking Committee, introduced a bill containing language to except ATM's from McFadden Act branching restrictions—an approach I endorse as an ultimate goal.

At this time, however, I have determined to join Senator TRIBLE in introducing legislation to get at the immediate problem of the viability of shared ATM networks. This approach simply codifies the Comptroller's ruling that an ATM is not to be considered a branch under McFadden unless it is owned or rented by the bank in question.

I should add that in addition to the question of economic and consumer convenience addressed in this legislation, we would also be working toward a more equitable system of regulation for the Nation's banks and thrifts. Under current laws, federally chartered thrifts and credit unions and nondepository institutions like Sears are not subject to restrictions on participation in ATM networks or on their geographic placement. Banks should be accorded the same treatment.

Mr. Speaker, in approving the Banking Convenience Act we would be promoting the very beneficial aspects of the electronic revolution, thus ensuring that consumer convenience is well served.

The text of the bill follows:

H.R. 688

A bill to amend section 5155 of the Revised Statutes

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "Banking Convenience Act of 1985".

SEC. 2. Section 5155 of the Revised Statutes (12 U.S.C. 36) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"(i)(1) Notwithstanding any other provision of this section, a national bank may share, or permit its customers to use, an automated device that is not established by that bank, and such automated device shall not be considered a branch of that bank within the meaning of subsection (f) of this section.

"(2) For the purpose of this subsection—

"(A) an automated device is established by a national bank only if it is owned or rented by that bank;

"(B) an automated device is not established by a national bank if the bank is assessed transactional fees or similar charges for its use; and

"(C) the term 'automated device' includes, without limitation, automated teller machines, customer bank communication terminals, point-of-sale terminals, and cash dispensing machines.".●

CONDEMNING VIOLENCE IN SRI LANKA

HON. MATTHEW G. MARTINEZ

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, January 24, 1985

● Mr. MARTINEZ. Mr. Speaker, in the wake of the senseless assassination of President Indira Gandhi, world attention has turned toward India. As this occurs it is my hope that we can all look southward and observe the violent situation occurring on the island nation of Sri Lanka.

I have recently been informed of the murder of a Catholic priest, Father Mary Bastian, at his church situated at Bangalai Mannar in the northern province of Sri Lanka. This tragic act is but one of thousands that have taken place over the years between the Sinhalese and Tamil communities. The major source of tension involves a movement for greater autonomy by Tamils. The Sinhalese majority had made a concerted effort to reduce the power and influence of the Tamils, who have lived for centuries in the north of Sri Lanka.

Both sides have perpetrated violence against each other. However, what is most alarming is the Sinhalese government's sponsorship of violence against unarmed civilians. The mass relocation of Tamil youths to detention centers is a reprehensible human rights violation. This coincides with reports that government troops have been sent to indiscriminately burn down the homes and businesses of thousands of Tamils in retaliation for the terrorist acts of a small group of Tamil rebels.

Our Nation has been active in seeking a diplomatic resolution to this situation which could soon become an all out civil war. It is essential that the Sinhalese and Tamils come to a negotiated agreement, and that the United States urge the government in Sri Lanka and the rebel Tamils to control their armies and not use innocent civilians as targets to induce terror and submission.●

UKRAINIAN INDEPENDENCE DAY

HON. BENJAMIN A. GILMAN

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, January 24, 1985

● Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, today, I would like to join my colleagues in commemorating the 67th anniversary of Ukrainian citizens proclaimed an independent and sovereign Ukraine.

But this short-lived independence fell under Communist domination 3 years later, in 1921, when Soviet military might and represession crushed the small Ukrainian Army. Eleven years later, this group of men, women, and children was subjected to Josef Stalin's instigated famine of 1932 and 1933. Ukrainian citizens were made slaves of the Soviet Union and ordered to turn over all of their grain to the State. To insure industrialization and collectivization of the Soviet Union, Stalin forced an estimated 7 million Ukrainians to starve to death. Not only did this Soviet tyrant deny that a famine existed, but he refused international assistance and increased grain exports from the Soviet Union. This famine can only be called a manmade holocaust.

This commemoration day of independence 67 years ago serves as a constant reminder of the many decades of oppression committed by the Soviet Union to freedom loving peoples. Human rights violations continue to occur on a daily basis in the Soviet Union and its satellite countries. The nations of the free world cannot overlook the many years of defiance by the Soviet Union against the spirits of freedom and independence. This spirit is being crushed today in Poland and Afghanistan, and against the more than 50 million Ukrainians held hostage in their own land.

I join my colleagues in commemorating the 67th anniversary of Ukrainian Independence Day today, and pray with them that one day they will see the light of freedom shine across their own shores.●

ECONOMIC OUTLOOK FOR 1985

HON. LEE H. HAMILTON

OF INDIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, January 24, 1985

● Mr. HAMILTON. Mr. Speaker, I would like to insert my Washington report for Wednesday, January 23, 1985 into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD:

ECONOMIC OUTLOOK FOR 1985

The economy is doing well at present, but serious troubles lie ahead if several problems are not addressed. The curious thing is that the better the economy is doing, the harder it will be to address the problems.

For the moment, anxiety about the economy is not in style. Economic forecasts have brightened, and there seems to be reason for optimism. The numbers on inflation, growth, interest rates, employment, and industrial activity look good. On the other hand, the strong dollar, the trade deficit, and the federal budget deficit are major obstacles to sustained prosperity.

Will these obstacles bring about a new recession in 1985? I think not. None of the usual signs of an impending recession, such as shortages of labor or rising prices for oil and commodities, are present. Consumers are still confident. The last few recessions were brought about to fight inflation, and with no double-digit inflation to contain there is no good reason to allow another. Thus, I expect the economy to maintain forward momentum in 1985.

While I do not anticipate a recession in 1985, I doubt that we will have another surge of growth. I look for slow growth in the next two years, primarily because rapid growth would raise the prospect of a clash between the economy's need for credit and the Federal Reserve's determination to keep the money supply under control.

The government predicts growth of 4.3 percent in 1985. That is not very different from private forcasters, whose projections for growth are only a bit lower. Recently, for example, a group of economists unanmously predicted that the economy will keep moving. They said that the gross national product will expand at a healthy 3 percent to 4 percent rate in 1985, typical for the third year of a recovery and close to what has been viewed as the long-term potential of the economy. They expect the unemployment rate to drop from 7.2 percent to 7 percent by mid-1985, short-term interest rates to rise only slighly, and inflation to vary little from last year's historically high but now seemingly reasonable rate of 4.3 percent if oil and commodity prices continue to be weak and wage settlements remain moderate. In the longer term, there is concern about resurgent inflation. We have not "nailed inflation," as the White House just announced. There is also concern that joblessness will remain indefinitely at today's fairly high levels.

One very worrisome obstacle is the strong dollar, which makes foreign goods cheaper and U.S. goods more expensive. It is the major reason that the U.S. is running a record trade deficit of $150 billion per year. Although low-priced imports into this country do much to keep inflation in check, a trade deficit of such size means that most gains in domestic demand promote employment and production abroad rather than in the U.S. Imports are expected to grow faster than exports again this year. Even if the dollar begins to fall soon, I believe that the trade deficit will deepen in 1985 because adjustments occur slowly.

The dollar is being kept up by foreign investors seeking a safe haven and high interest rates in the U.S. Foreigners pumped more than $100 billion into the economy last year alone, a rate of investment that soon will turn the U.S. into a debtor nation for the first time since World War I. The conditions that attract foreign investment exist in part because the federal budget deficit now exceeds $200 billion a year. Government borrowing on such scale props up interest rates and draws in money from all over the world.

Immediate and concrete action to cut the federal budget deficit is needed for several reasons. Such action will push the dollar down and narrow the trade deficit. It also will lessen the chance of a recession caused by a clash between a Federal Reserve determined to keep the money supply under control and the demand for credit generated by a growing economy and heavy government borrowing. The willingness of foreign investors to supply most of the funds that business needed was the only reason that government demand for credit did not crowd out business demand last year. However, when the desire of foreign investors to place their money here diminishes, interest rates could skyrocket and the economy could slide into recession if the federal budget deficit has not been cut.

My view is that the economy will not move ahead briskly enough to sweep away these obstacles to sustained prosperity. Consumer spending, the largest single component of the gross national product, is expected to rise only modestly. With federal spending still rising sharply, federal purchases of goods and services will stimulate the economy, but state and local spending are rising more slowly, and, besides, the government sector by itself simply is not big enough to accomplish all that much.

Decisive action to cut the federal budget deficit is the nearly universal prescription for what ails the economy. At least for now, everyone in Washington is saying that the federal budget deficit should be reduced by cuts in spending of $50 billion or more this year. That target, worthy as it may be, probably will not be hit. Modest cuts in spending may be the best that we can achieve.

Given the political difficulty of big reductions in defense and entitlement spending and the political unpopularity of big tax increases, the effort to cut the federal budget deficit could end in stalemate. This prospect leads me to think that we will make the necessary cuts only if a crisis develops—a dramatic rise in interest rates, for example. I continue to believe that doing nothing, or very little, is the most perilous course of all.

There is an urgent need in Washington today for extraordinary leadership—leadership that can address problems now before a crisis arises.●

JOB CREATION FOR THE LONG-TERM UNEMPLOYED

HON. AUGUSTUS F. HAWKINS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, January 24, 1985

● Mr. HAWKINS. Mr. Speaker, today, I am introducing, the Community Renewal Employment Act which will provide employment opportunities to long-term unemployed individuals in high unemployment areas. This bill is essentially the same as the one which passed the House on September 21, 1983. Unfortunately, this measure did not become law because the Senate failed to act on it during the 98th Congress. However, I am hopeful that action will be taken by both Houses of Congress this year.

Although the official rate of unemployment has dropped significantly from its peak of 10.8 percent, unemployment remains at intolerably high levels. Moreover, the official rate does not accurately reflect the total number of unemployed, underemployed, or discouraged workers. Almost 8.19 million people were out of work in December 1984 and another 1.3 million were discouraged workers who had given up hope of finding a job. On the average, people who were unemployed in December had been out of work for more than 19 weeks. Almost 1.4 million had been jobless for 27 weeks or longer.

Last July, the National League of Cities conducted a survey of city officials about the kinds of employment problems the cities are facing, what is being done to alleviate these problems and what else needs to be done. The results of this survey were published in August in a report entitled "Employment Problems and America's Cities." The majority of official responding to the survey said that employment is among their highest priorities and would remain so for the foreseeable future. More than half the city officials said one of their most severe employment-related problems is just not enough jobs. Three out of four officials surveyed said that their cities need a program of direct job creation. "City officials clearly do not see the unemployment problem going away soon," the report stated. Not only must public officials help prepare people for employment, but, "at the same time, they must increase the number of available jobs."

Another study, conducted by the U.S. Conference of Mayors in August and September 1984, found that economic recovery has not reached low-income people in more than half the cities responding. When asked what the Federal Government could do to improve the conditions in their cities, local officials most frequently pointed to job-creation programs. These officials were concerned about the increased dependence on public assistance among former workers who have exhausted unemployment insurance and have joined the ranks of the chronic poor. Declining unemployment rates mask the increase in long-term unemployed people who dropout of the labor force, yet local officials report a growing demand among these new poor for human services. At least half the cities said they are unable to meet this demand.

"The most urgent priority for U.S. domestic economic policy is the creation of new jobs," concluded the recent statement of the American Roman Catholic Bishops. "Society has a moral obligation to * * * ensure that no one among us is hungry, homeless, unemployed or otherwise denied what is necessary to live with dignity," the draft pastoral letter stated.

The Community Renewal Employment Act is a small but essential component of an overall economic strategy. This legislation would not create jobs for all of the almost 2.4 million people who have been unemployed at least 15 weeks, but it would provide some of them with an opportunity to perform needed community services in return for a wage. To allow critical public services to go undone, while millions of workers are idle, is a waste of our most valuable national asset. This legislation would create meaningful jobs for people with demonstrated inability to secure unsubsidized employment and who are in greatest need. Funding would be targeted to areas with higher than average unemployment rates and jobs would be coordinated with longer term economic development strategies. The bill also ensures that rural areas receive a fair share of the jobs provided. Moreover, this bill addresses the employment needs of women by creating jobs not only in programs to repair public facilities, but also in social service activities.

The Community Renewal Employment Act would supplement the existing training programs currently operated under the Job Training Partnership Act. While effective, JTPA provides no actual employment and, at current funding levels, is only serving about 3 percent of the eligible population. The declining, but still high, unemployment rate should not be used to justify inaction on behalf of the millions of jobless workers who have not yet shared in any economic recovery.

The following is a summary of the major provisions of the Community Renewal Employment Act.

SUMMARY OF THE COMMUNITY RENEWAL EMPLOYMENT ACT

GENERAL PROVISIONS

Purpose: To provide employment opportunities to long-term unemployed individuals, especially in high unemployment areas, through grants to State and local governments for labor costs associated with the repair, maintenance or rehabilitation of essential pubic facilities; for essential public safety, health and social service activities; and for conservation and improvement of public lands.

Eligible Participants: Individuals 16 years of age or older who have been unemployed 15 out of 20 weeks with priority for those who have exhausted or who are otherwise ineligible for unemployment insurance, particularly those who have been unemployed the longest and those in families in which no other member is employed on a full-time basis. Individuals must be certified as meeting these requirements by the appropriate State employment service.

Youth Employment: 20% of the community improvement project funds must be spent on unemployed youth aged 16-19 for part-time work combined with training. Priority is given to economically disadvantaged youth.

Eligible Activities: Community improvement projects include repair, rehabilitation and maintenance of public facilities such as road repair, water systems, mass transportation systems and education facilities; rehabilitation and conservation of public lands and resources such as erosion, flood, drought and storm damage control, and services such as health care emergency food and shelter, child care, and dependent care activities, domestic violence programs, services to the elderly, handicapped and veterans.

Educational Facilities Repair: Funds are to be used for detecting or removing asbestos, energy efficiency remodeling, conformity with environmental protection and health and safety programs, and conversion of unused structures into adult training centers.

Use of Funds: Not less than 75% of the funds available to any recipient under Titles II and III of this Act from funds appropriated for any fiscal year shall be used to provide for wages and related employment benefits to eligible participants. Not more than 15% may be used for the cost of administration. The remainder of the funds may be used for acquisition of supplies, tools, equipment and other materials.

Wages: Eligible participants shall be paid prevailing wages but at least the minimum wage. Participants may be paid up to $230 weekly ($11,960 annually) and the maximum wage shall be adjusted annually based on increases in the national average wage. Wages may be supplemented up to 50% from sources other than the Act. Individuals may not be employed in excess of 52 weeks in any two year period.

Authorization: $3.5 billion is authorized to be appropriated for fiscal year 1986. For each succeeding fiscal year the authorization level is tied to 20% of the long-term unemployed.

Anti-Substitution Provisions: These provisions prevent the displacement of regular public workers with workers subsidized under this Act, provide for an automatic review where reductions and subsidized jobs occur in the same department, and establish a complaint process for any allegation of substitution.●

TIME FOR ACTION: SAVE THE UNBORN

HON. THOMAS A. LUKEN

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, January 24, 1985

● Mr. LUKEN. Mr. Speaker, 12 years ago this week, the Supreme Court handed down a landmark decision that allows the almost unrestricted right to an abortion. Today I am introducing an amendment to the Constitution that will guarantee a right to life for all persons, regardless of age, health, function, or condition of dependency, including unborn children.

The protection and sanctity of innocent human life ranks in the highest level of moral culture. Our Nation was founded with this principal among others. Yet in 1973, the Supreme Court rules that a human fetus is not a "person" in the constitutional definition of the word, because nowhere in the Constitution does the word "person" have "pre-natal application."

But abortion has been an issue that won't fade away. One of the reasons is the continuing medical research that is providing insight into fetal life. With regular frequency we see new information on the advances in prenatal surgery or the publication of an important study of life before birth. Several forms of fetal distress and some genetic problems can now be detected and treated by prenatal medicine. A fetus likely to be born prematurely can receive drugs that accelerate the maturation of the lungs, and drugs are available to correct irregular heart rhythms of the unborn. Blood transfusions have been given to unborn children and physicians have been able to detect and treat the inability of a fetus to assimilate necessary vitamins.

Despite the insight and cures this marvelous medical science provides, we live in a nation where abortion is one of the most frequently performed operations, and our Supreme Court rules that a fetus is not a "person" under the protection of the 14th amendment. In the case of abortion, our moral sense is running opposite of our advancement in prenatal medical science.

My amendment will recognize the unborn child as a person under the laws of our Constitution. If this amendment is adopted as part of the Constitution, laws would permit medical intervention to save a woman's life, but would require that a reasonable effort be made to save the life of the unborn as well.●

A TRIBUTE TO THE WORLD'S MOST SOPHISTICATED DIVING COLLEGE

HON. GLENN M. ANDERSON

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, January 24, 1985

● Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, with the growth of Outer Continental Shelf drilling activities and worldwide expansion of underwater construction and exploration projects, the need for professionally trained underwater divers has greatly increased.

Filling this demand for professional divers has been the College of Oceaneering, headquartered in the Los Angeles Harbor at Wilmington, CA. Founded in 1969, as the Commercial Diving Center, the school has grown to be the largest, most sophisticated commercial diving college in the world. In 1971, Oceaneering International, the world's largest diving contractor, purchased the school as its official diving training division.

Since that acquisition, more than 3,000 divers have been successfully trained for the rigors of the offshore oil industry in three major categories: exploration, construction and repair, and maintenance.

The College of Oceaneering, under the direction of President Jim Joiner, offers students more than 5 acres of campus (8,000 square feet of classroom space), facilities containing double lock hyperbaric chamber and training tanks and a fully equipped shop building and rigging yard. It is the only school in the United States that offers a completely operational bell/saturation system in open water and utilizes such state-of-the-art atmospheric diving systems as the JIM and the WASP.

In recognition of its accomplishments, the Western Association of Schools and Colleges accredited the facility as a community college, allowing the institution to award associate in applied science degrees. The college receives more than 13,000 worldwide inquiries yearly and accepts approximately 350 applications annually.

I join with my wife, Lee, in celebrating the success of the College of Oceaneering. May the international reputation of the school and its faculty continue to grow.●

67th ANNIVERSARY OF THE PROCLAMATION OF INDEPENDENCE IN UKRAINE

HON. THOMAS J. MANTON

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, January 24, 1985

● Mr. MANTON. Mr. Speaker, on January 22, 1918, a free and sovereign nation was declared in Kiev and the long cherished dream of the Ukrainian people was realized. I am honored to join in today's celebration which marks the 67th anniversary of the proclamation of independence in Ukraine.

Although today we celebrate Ukrainian independence, Mr. Speaker, we must remember that this independence was shortlived. Within 3 short years after their sovereignty was established, the Ukrainian National Republic was overpowered by the Bolsheviks and more than 40 million Ukrainians lost their freedom. Therefore, today is not only a day of remembrance, but also one of hope and determination that soon Ukraine will be free again.

For the past 67 years, the leaders of the Soviet Union have sought to eradicate the Ukrainian national identity. Under Soviet occupation, the Ukrainian people have suffered persecution and repression. The leaders of the Soviet Union have waged a war of Russification against the Ukrainians which has endangered their culture and heritage. Ukrainians are prohibited from using their language in their schools. The Ukrainian Catholic and Eastern Orthodox religions are outlawed.

The Ukrainian people and their families around the world have never forgotten their fight for a free Ukraine. They have not allowed their spirit, or their determination and optimism that the Ukraine will one day again be free, to diminish. Their dedication is an inspiration to people around the world who are struggling for freedom.

We all share the Ukrainians' struggle because their fight is ours as well. The plight of the Ukrainians is a reminder to all free people to cherish and protect their liberty. And there is no better way to protect our freedom than by supporting the struggles of those who have been denied their basic human rights.

Mr. Speaker, I again pledge my support for the Ukrainian people. It is my hope that one day soon the Ukraine will again be a free and sovereign nation. Today many of us in the Congress commemorate the 67th anniversary of the proclamation of independence in Ukraine. However, this must not be a 1-day event. We must continue the vigil year around until Ukraine is free once again.●

INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION TO PROVIDE TAX CREDITS FOR ELDERLY HEALTH CARE EXPENSES

HON. SILVIO O. CONTE

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, January 24, 1985

● Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I stand before my colleagues today to introduce legislation of tremendous importance to the elderly members of our country.

The legislation I am introducing provides a nonrefundable, sliding-scale tax credit for expenses incurred in the care of elderly family members living at home. Under the language of this bill, a qualifying family member is any individual other than the taxpayer's spouse who is: (1) Related by blood or marriage, and (2) at least 70 years of age, or (3) diagnosed by a physician as having Alzheimer's disease, or (4) disabled within the meaning of the Social Security Act.

Qualified elderly care expenses are community-based in nature. They include, but are not limited to, payments by the taxpayer for home health agency services, health care equipment and supplies not compensated for by insurance, and adult day care.

The purpose of this legislation is twofold. First, cost considerations and how best to control public program costs for home health care. The tax credit equals 30 percent of the qualified elderly care expenses during the taxable year. This 30 percent figure would be reduced by 1 percent for each $2,000 of the taxpayer's income that exceeds $25,000. In no event, however, would the credit be reduced more than 20 percent. If an individual's adjusted gross income exceeds $75,000, the credit is reduced by $1 for each dollar over $75,000.

The community-based long-term care services emphasized in this legislation are greatly needed. Yet, the magnitude of spending for institutional care continues to dominate. According to a 1984 analysis by the Education and Public Welfare Division of the Library of Congress, expenditures for nursing home care have experienced annual increases averaging 16.3 percent since 1965. In 1982, total nursing home costs amounted to $27.3 billion. Such costs are expected to reach $67.1 billion by 1990. Sizable amounts of public dollars are at stake. The legislation which I propose offers a cost-effective approach to reduce health care costs at the public level.

The second issue this bill addresses is the need for a legislative approach that suits the health care preferences of a growing elderly population. Home health care is on the rise. It has been estimated that 60 to 80 percent of disabled or impaired persons receive home care services from family or friends. Once an elderly person has been placed in an institutional setting for a significant period of time, a pattern of dependency often evolves making residence elsewhere difficult. Institutionalization can virtually deplete the elderly person's life savings and other private resources, making independent living financially impossible. In addition to fearing a loss of independence, many elderly resist nursing home placement because it often means they must give up their lifelong possessions and sever community ties. The administration has shown its support for home health care by their SSI-deeming waiver regulations which allow individuals being cared for at home to retain Medicaid and SSI eligibility even if family income places them over the SSI income guidelines. The only requirements are that home health care costs less than institutionalized health care, and that home health care be as good as, or better than, institutionalized care.

Mr. Speaker, we have a serious issue before us. I feel strongly that this legislation is a positive step to help lower health care costs and promote a closeness within the family. I invite my colleagues to join me in my effort to alleviate the health care burdens placed upon so many families. As our cosponsor list grows, I urge the Ways and Means Committee to hold a hearing to address this legislation.●

OPPOSITION TO SOCIAL SECURITY COLA FREEZE ESCALATING

HON. EDWARD R. ROYBAL

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, January 24, 1985

● Mr. ROYBAL. Mr. Speaker, once again the elderly are being threatened with cuts in Social Security benefits to help reduce the deficit. Despite the fact that we cut the cost-of-living adjustment [COLA] in the last Congress as part of the Social Security rescue plan and despite the President's campaign promise not to reduce Social Security benefits, the leadership in the other body wants to deny Social Security beneficiaries the cost-of-living adjustment altogether next year.

I believe Social Security beneficaries have already borne a disproportionate share of the burden for saving Social Security. I also believe that all of us who campaigned last fall with promises of no more cuts in Social Security should not be allowed to break those promises. I cannot believe that such proposals are being seriously considered so soon after the votes have been counted. Therefore, I am joined by 42 of my colleagues in introducing a resolution that no changes be enacted in current law which would reduce or freeze the COLA for beneficiaries under the Social Security Act.

The declines in the elderly poverty rate from 35 to 15 percent over the last 25 years, which can in large part be credited to the improvement in Social Security benefits, is beginning to be reversed by dramatic cuts in Social Security over the last decade. The 1977 changes in the benefit formula created a "notch" which reduces the value of Social Security benefits for age 65 retirees in the remainder of the 1980's by up to 21 percent as compared with persons retiring at age 65 in 1981. In addition, our Nation's retirees will bear 69 percent of the long-run costs of the Social Security Amendments of 1983 which were designed to solve the Social Security system's financial problems. The most obvious reduction was the permanent provision to delay cost-of-living adjustments from July to January every year. Last year the Office of Management and Budget estimated that this 6-month delay will cost the average retired couple $1,698 in benefits by the end of the decade. This reduction and annual delay in the COLA, coupled with the taxation of benefits and the increase in the retirement age, have put Social Security on a sound footing by taking money out of the pocket of beneficiaries. It would be a terrible injustice to ask these beneficiaries to take more cuts to solve the budget problems in the rest of Government.

The Social Security System is in good financial condition. The Social Security and Medicare Programs will actually save 3 cents out of every dollar taken in this year while the rest of Government spends $1.40 for every dollar received. We should not solve the budget deficit by intensifying the hardship of the elderly. A COLA freeze will only reduce the overall budget deficit on paper and would increase Social Security surpluses even more than currently forecast.

I wish to commend my colleagues from Ohio and North Dakota, Ms. OAKAR and Mr. DORGAN, who introduced legislation to remove Social Security from the unified budget in fiscal year 1986, rather than in fiscal year 1992. I agree with Mr. DORGAN and Ms. OAKAR that the Old Age Survivor's and Disability Trust Funds should be removed from the unified budget. Such a move, along with enactment of legislation which I expect to join with the leadership of the Ways and Means Committee in offering next week, establishing a board governed agency, will remove Social Security from the political pressure we have seen over the last few years.

I urge my colleagues to join me in opposing any COLA freeze for beneficiaries under the Social Security Act. According to 1983 Census Bureau data almost half—43 percent—of families with heads of households age 65 and over have incomes below $15,000, and one quarter—23 percent—have incomes below $10,000. According to the estimates of Data Resources Inc., a Social Security COLA freeze would force more than one-half million older Americans below the poverty line in 1986, and more than 2.3 million by 1990. A proposal which reduces the major source of income to the elderly is unconscionable.●

HON. JOSEPH P. ADDABBO

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, January 24, 1985

● Mr. ADDABBO. Mr. Speaker, today I proudly joined a bi-partisan group of my colleagues in cosponsoring the Civil Rights Restoration Act of 1985.

It is most fitting that the authors have inserted the work "restoration" in the bill's title this year. Although the measure will overturn the Supreme Court's decision in Grove City against Bell, it is actually only a restatement of what we had all considered to be the law of the land. The Supreme Court's narrow interpretation of title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 threatens to undo much of what we have accomplished toward eliminating discrimination on the basis of sex.

And if allowed to stand, this ruling could further threaten our enforcement of all other civil rights legislation. My colleagues may remember that in drafting the language for title IX, title VI of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, section 504 of the Rehabilitation Act of 1973, and the Age Discrimination Act of 1975 were used as models. Application of Grove City to the interpretation of any one of these statutes will widen the reach of this bad law and strip many of our citizens of basic protections they have every right to expect. We are heading down a dark tunnel and only swift, effective action will keep us from nightmares.

The legislation now before us is clearer and simpler than the version which passed the House during the 98th Congress. Strong bipartisan support is necessary to insure prompt action, and I am pleased that we are already well on our way toward speedy passage. I urge my colleagues who have not already done so to join this effort to restore the full force and effect of some of the most important laws we have ever enacted.

We know from past experience that passage of a civil rights law is a fine tuned procedure, not possible without an active and persistent coalition. But we have fought these battles already.

We fought them in 1964, in 1968, in 1972, in 1973, in 1975, and at various other times in our Nation's history. Indeed, four administrations have fought along with us. Our civil rights initiatives began with the stroke of a pen. Let's not stand by and watch them disappear the same way. I call on the House to take the lead and see that passage of the Civil Rights Restoration Act is an early first session priority. I call on the House to see that discrimination is not allowed to rear its ugly head once again.●

PREFERRED PROVIDER HEALTH CARE ACT OF 1985

HON. RON WYDEN

OF OREGON

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, January 24, 1985

● Mr. WYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to reintroduce the Preferred Provider Health Care Act. It's no secret that even through the rate of inflation in health care has slowed somewhat in more recent days, health care costs are still rising far too quickly.

Some elements of regulation, like the prospective payment system, have had very real success in slowing the rate of inflation in the health care system. And increased competition in the health care community can help us do the same. Competition can help us bring down costs and keep quality high, without causing the problems that regulation can create.

There is not one quick, easy solution to what is ailing our health care system. The effort to control health care costs will require major doses of innovation, compromise, and cooperation. And I firmly believe that competition and regulation must exist side by side in the health care market if we are to achieve a balanced approach to the very severe and complicated problems we face.

One competitive approach that is gaining acceptance around the country is the preferred provider organization. Preferred provider organization [PPO's] have sparked fresh hope that Americans can have high quality health care at reasonable prices.

PPO's are alternative health care financing arrangements in which services of some specified list of providers—hospitals, doctors, and so forth—are offered to employers, union trust plans, insurers, and others at predetermined rates, usually at a discount.

Consumers, providers, employers, and insurers can all gain from participating in a PPO. Patients who participate in a PPO not only receive rate breaks, they also retain the right to choose their own physician. Most PPO's also tell providers, prior to treatment, how much they will pay, and in most instances, if a patient sees a preferred provider, this amount is accepted as payment in full.

Health care provider who participate in PPO's are guaranteed a significant volume of new patients and reimbursement on the traditonal fee for service basis.

Employers who participate in PPO's get cost savings and an improved benefit package to offer to their employees.

Insurers who participate in PPO's get a competitive product that can be attached to existing benefit plans.

There are a number of reasons why I am attracted to the PPO concept. First, I believe PPO's have the potental to help us rein in health care costs without Congress setting up a new, massive regulatory labyrinth.

Second, PPO's give communities around the country the flexibility to tailor health care financing arrangements to meet the needs of the local community. This is particularly important because one thing we have learned over the years is that what works for consumers and providers in Portland doesn't necessarily work in Des Moines, and what works in Des Moines doesn't necessarily work in the Bronx.

The third reason I am attracted to PPO's is because they seem to be one of the few approaches for controlling health care costs that many doctors seem ready, willing, and able to participate in.

Finally, I am attracted to PPO's because I believe they can help us forge a new set of relationships between purchasers and providers which emphasize cooperation and consensus. Specifically, they seem to have the potential to bring American businesses, doctors, and hospitals together to work for more cost-effective arrangements for delivering health care services.

In fact, this is where PPO's can make the greatest contribution. PPO's will allow purchaser, such as private-sector employers and unions, which bargain for health care services, to obtain discounts, not by cutting corners on quality, but by ensuring the delivery of services in the most efficient manner possible.

Despite the benefits of these financing arrangements, however, there are obstacles that prevent the use of PPO's nationwide. For example, some PPO's have felt the chilling effects of legal contraints, such as State insurance laws which bar insurers from varying the amount of reimbursement among health care providers.

Other States have laws which prohibit insurers from influencing a covered patients choice of health care provider. Under these statutes, insurers can do absolutely nothing to discourage patients from seeing doctors who overcharge.

The purpose of my bill, the Preferred Provider Health Care Act of 1985 is to remove these legal obstacles to PPO development. Specifically, this legislation would strike down State laws that limit a patient's choice of provider, restrict insurers from negotiating contracts for lower rates of payment, or prohibit the lawful negotiation of contracts among one or more health plan payors.

I would also like to make clear that this legislation is in no way intended to interfere with procompetitive State laws that relate to provider groups' ability to practice. State laws that promote choice in the delivery of health care services have the same basic thrust as this bill. I want to make it clear that there is nothing in this bill that should be read to overturn those portions of State laws dealing with providers' ability to practice.

In short, my PPO bill does nothing but strike the barriers to PPO development so that we can expand the galaxy of health care choices for American consumers.

This bill would not cost anything and it would not lay out a prescriptive set of ground rules for PPO development.

It would not take away any benefits or cut any needed services for Medicare or Medicaid beneficiaries.

And it would not limit patients' freedom of choice or lock any consumer into a rigid health care delivery system.

Mr. Speaker, no piece of legislation will remedy all of the problems of the health care system, because there is not one, and only one, simple solution. But I think the Preferred Provider Health Care Act can make an important contribution, as we labor to find the right set of approaches for controlling health care costs in this country.●

AMUSEMENT PARKS SAFETY ACT

HON. FRANK J. GUARINI

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, January 24, 1985

● Mr. GUARINI. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing legislation which will strengthen the authority of the Consumer Product Safety Commission over amusement parks. I am pleased to be joined in this effort by my colleague, Mr. ECKART of Ohio.

At present, the Consumer Product Safety Commission has authority only over mobile amusement rides which are dismantled and reassembled by traveling carnivals. In 1981, Congress rescinded the Commission's jurisdiction over similar rides at over 650 fixed sites throughout the country.

My bill will restore the Commission's authority over fixed site rides and will expand it to include amusement buildings or facilities on the same premises which charge an entry fee or its equivalent.

Each year, millions of Americans visit amusement parks around the country. They are a prime attraction for children and teenagers, and are a popular favorite for many family outings. The thrill of the rides and the terror of the spook houses lend excitement to the illusion of danger such visitors seek.

Unfortunately, that illusion can be transformed without warning into a frightening reality. Thousands of serious accidents and occasional deaths occur annually as a result of amusement park mishaps. Yet the Consumer Product Safety Commission is unable to limit the risks families take when they pass through the theme park gates.

In 1983, the Consumer Product Safety Commission estimated that nearly 10,000 injuries sustained on amusement park rides required hospital emergency room treatment. The severity of amusement park injuries ranges from fractures, contusions, abrasions, and dislocations to horrendous fatalities. In the past 10 years, nearly 100 people have died.

Just last year, eight teenagers died in my home State of New Jersey when a fire raged through an amusement park haunted house. In North Dakota, a young child was killed in a fall when a roller coaster restraining bar failed to lock in place. Other tragic deaths have occurred when ride cars have derailed, chains have snapped, and protective devices have failed.

Ordinances governing the safety of amusement rides and facilities vary from State to State. At present, only one-half of the States have any kind of regulations requiring inspection of amusement rides. The patchwork varies from strict guidelines and enforcement procedures to lax and inadequate regulations. And as long as the Consumer Product Safety Commission is unable to set nationwide safety standards for these rides and attractions, American families will play amusement ride roulette every time they make an outing to a theme park.

My bill will address these very real concerns by authorizing the Consumer Product Safety Commission to treat all amusement rides and amusement attractions the same way they treat other consumer products which may cause harm or injury to an unsuspecting public.

Under my bill, the Consumer Product Safety Commission will be able to require amusement park owners to report information which indicates that a particular ride or attraction poses a substantial hazard to the safety of consumers. Commission experts will be authorized to investigate serious accidents in order to identify design or structural failures which could present threats on other rides. The Commission will be able to act as a national clearinghouse for such information, disseminating warnings to other amusement parks throughout the country. Finally, it will be able to use its authority to require a corrective action plan with the goal of averting further accidents or fatalities.

It is urgent that we take steps to protect the rights of visitors to amusement parks more fully. As consumers, they are entitled to assurances that the thrills they seek at amusement parks are illusory and that their safety on amusement rides and attractions is protected.

I encourage my colleagues to support this legislation, which will enhance and promote safety at amusement parks throughout the country, and will restore the American public's confidence in amusement rides and attractions.●

HON. G.V. (SONNY) MONTGOMERY

OF MISSISSIPPI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, January 24, 1985

● Mr. MONTGOMERY. Mr. Speaker, on December 21, 1984, this Nation lost to retirement one of its most dedicated and most successful public servants, Dorothy L. Starbuck, the Chief Benefits Director of the Veterans Administration. Hers has been a lifetime of good will, great works, high standards and unwavering professionalism.

Dorothy Starbuck distinguished herself as a member of the U.S. Army from 1942 to 1946, serving overseas for 2 years in France and Germany and being separated as a captain.

In 1946, working as a clerk in the Chicago branch office, she began what would become a 39-year career with the Veterans Administration, one that would have her serve during the tenure of 11 administrators.

Dorothy gained national attention as the first woman to be appointed to a number of VA managerial positions. In 1962, she was appointed assistant director of the Baltimore regional office and, in 1963 she was named director of the Denver regional office.

In 1967, Dorothy became one of four area field directors in the VA's central office in Washington, heading the benefits program in 13 Western States. For 3 years, 1972-75, she directed the Washington regional office before returning to central office to direct the benefits program in nine Northeastern States and the District of Columbia.

In 1977, Dorothy became the 10th person and the first woman to head the Department of Veterans Benefits, assuming the responsibilities of an annual budget of $15 billion, a network of 58 regional offices from Manila, Philippine Islands, to San Juan, and one of the most comprehensive benefits programs administered by the Federal Government.

Dorothy Starbuck has served America's veterans and their families with concern and compassion. Her decisive and firm leadership has set standards of achievement throughout the Veterans Administration and the Federal service. Through her drive for excellence and through the development of innovative and efficient management processes, she has gained for the benefits program, as well as the Agency, international attention.

Dorothy's work is greatly appreciated and admired, as evidenced by the numerous awards and honors recognizing her tremendous accomplishments, among them: The President's award for distinguished Federal Civilian Service, presented by President Jimmy Carter; being named by President Ronald Reagan as a distinguished executive for her "extraordinary accomplishment"; the Civil Service Commission's Federal Woman's Award in 1969; AMVETS' Civil Servant of the Year Silver Helmet Award in 1978; the National Civil Service League's Career Service Award in 1978; and VA Employee of the Year, awarded by the Air Force Association in 1980.

Mr. Speaker, the Committee on Veterans' Affairs and the Congress have depended heavily upon the knowledge, wisdom and advice of Dorothy Starbuck in its numerous legislative considerations regarding veterans' benefits and services over the years.

I know that this great body will want to join with me in commending Dorothy for her dedication to the Nation's veterans and for her remarkable achievements in upholding the principles of freedom through that dedication. We also extend our best wishes to Dorothy as she begins her retirement.●

THE TIME HAS COME FOR A FAIR AND SIMPLE FLAT RATE TAX

HON. DON YOUNG

OF ALASKA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, January 24, 1985

● Mr. YOUNG of Alaska. Mr. Speaker, for several years I have been working for tax reforms which would help to resolve the two most serious problems facing taxpayers—the complexity of the Tax Code and fear of the IRS.

Because these two problems have become more serious over the past few years, I believe the time has come to seriously consider repealing most of the Tax Code and substituting a simple, flat rate personal income tax. A fair and simple flat income tax with taxpayer protection standards would eliminate the abuses which have been built into the tax system over the years. For this reason, I have reintroduced legislation, H.R. 623, which would substitute a flat rate of tax for the current progressive tax rate system.

The last 2 years, I joined with several colleagues to form a coalition to seek passage of a legislative package establishing a flat rate tax combined with taxpayer protection standards. The proposed legislation would provide for a simple, flat rate tax on personal income with few deductions. Deductions would be allowed for charitable contributions, mortgage interest paid on the taxpayer's principle residence, and trade or business expenses.

Also, there would be an exemption for the first $10,000 of income. Income above $10,000 would be taxed at a rate of 15 percent. Most economists estimate that a rate of 15 percent would yield the same amount of personal income tax revenue as the current complicated progressive tax system. These estimates generally do not take into account the amount of revenue which has been lost as more and more otherwise law-abiding taxpayers are being driven to the underground economy by complex tax laws and a growing fear of the IRS. Estimates of revenue lost to the underground economy now total as high as $91 billion a year.

The income based that is taxed has been so eroded by exceptions and preferences that the rates on what is left to tax must be kept unusually high. Thus, the tax on an extra dollar of income for a typical family earning $20,000 is 28 percent and become progressively higher.

Another important part of the tax reform legislation would be the enactment of laws protecting taxpayers when dealing with the IRS. These reforms would include protections I have worked for including the requirement of a court order before the IRS could seize property, the requirement that the IRS must follow the written advice of its agents, and the establishment of legal rights for taxpayers during audit examinations.

Passage of this legislative package would go a long way toward providing a fair and simple tax system in which all taxpayers paid their fair share of taxes. Many abuses have been built into a tax system which now covers 2,000 pages of laws and 6,000 regulations and most abuses are difficult to eliminate individually. Instead of piecemeal changes which only increase the complexity of the code, it is time to enact a comprehensive reform which provides a fair tax system for all taxpayers.

Mr. Speaker, the present system creates mistrust and invites abuse by both sides. Some may consider a wholesale change of the tax system a radical step but we in Congress have been trying the piecemeal approach for decades, and look where we are now.●

COMBATING YOUTH UNEMPLOYMENT

HON. AUGUSTUS F. HAWKINS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, January 24, 1985

● Mr. HAWKINS. Mr. Speaker, today, I am introducing the Youth Incentive Employment Act which will provide employment opportunities to economically disadvantaged youth, who agree to resume or maintain their education in pursuit of a high school diploma or its equivalent. The bill is essentially the same as that which I introduced in the 98th Congress.

This legislation is designed to combat one of our Nation's most distressing and persisting problems: the problem of high youth unemployment. Despite a modest upturn in overall economic activity, youth in this country continue to face devastating rates of unemployment. The 1984 jobless rate for youth averaged 18.8 percent, more than 2½ times the rate of the total civilian labor force. For minority youth, the problem is much worse; in December of last year, black teenagers experienced a 42.1 percent unemployment rate, nearly six times the national average.

In order to understand the full dimensions of this problem, the Education and Labor Committee's Subcommittee on Employment Opportunities held hearings in May and August of last year on the youth unemployment problem. Testimony confirmed the urgent need for Congress to adopt measures to confront this national tragedy of youth joblessness. I am hopeful that my colleagues will see the merit of taking action on this legislation.

We can no longer afford to ignore this problem and its effects. The high rate of youth unemployment not only creates economic difficulties for our youth today, but also, it creates grave long-term economic and social consequences for the Nation as a whole. The hundreds of thousands of unemployed youth in today's labor market will carry over to higher rates of adult unemployment. Therefore, in order to secure economic well-being for all Americans, it is necessary that we develop methods to employ these disadvantaged youth.

Existing training programs do not offer the necessary resources to cope with the full proportions of youth unemployment. Under the Job Training Partnership Act, work experience is limited and does not provide the sufficient experience needed to succeed in the labor market. Another obstacle confronted by disadvantaged youth seeking employment lies in their deficiency of basic educational skills. In the May 3, 1984, hearing on youth unemployment, Andrew Hahn of Brandeis University noted that "13 percent of all 17-year-olds are classified as functionally illiterate."

Last year, the Reagan administration proposed a subminimum wage for youth as a means to reduce youth unemployment. Rather than propose an effective initiative to deal with youth unemployment, the administration may submit the proposal to the Congress once again. The subminimum wage is not a viable solution because it ignores those factors which really cause youth unemployment. The subminimum wage would create higher unemployment among older workers, because it would result in the displacement of older workers, while forcing younger workers to choose between a cut in pay or loss of work. The proposal would not open up new employment opportunities, nor would it address the lack of training and basic education faced by America's disadvantaged youth.

Unlike the subminimum wage proposal, the Youth Incentive Employment Act incorporates the needed components of a comprehensive attack on youth joblessness. Under this legislation, employment opportunities work in tandem with the encouragement of educational attainment.

Since the lack of a high school diploma is associated with labor market adjustment problems for youth, it is important that educational achievement accompany employment opportunities as envisioned in my bill. It is estimated that over 1 million youth annually either drop our of school or rarely attend classes. The dropout problem is particularly drastic for young Hispanics. A recent report issued by the Hispanic Development Policy Project based in Washington, DC, places the Hispanic dropout rate in the United States at 45 percent, the highest rate of any group in the Nation. Through the Youth Incentive Employment Act, we have designed a program to discourage this extremely high dropout rate.

The Youth Incentive Employment Act is based on the successful implementation of a Department of Labor 30-month demonstration project mandated by Congress as part of the Youth Employment Act of 1977. The results of this project demonstrate a significant increase in post-program wage earnings which occurred as a result of a job guarantee program. Evaluators of this program found that the low rate of minority youth employment is not voluntary. When offered minimum wage jobs under this demonstration, minority youth came forward in large numbers. Evaluators concluded, "We now have evidence that the employment deficit is not of the youth's making. The shortage is jobs, not motivation."

Today's youth want to work and want to be of service to their Nation. It is our responsibility as policy makers to guarantee them employment opportunities to enable them to make meaningful contributions to society. The Youth Incentive Employment Act would encourage the completion of school, provide training opportunities and help youth develop a responsible, productive attitude toward work. This legislation is an investment in the youth of our country who are without an education or a job, an investment which will bring us as a nation to return in the form of a healthier economy.

The following is a summary of the major provisions of the Youth Incentive Employment Act:

YOUTH INCENTIVE EMPLOYMENT ACT

Purpose: To provide employment opportunities for unemployed, economically disadvantaged youth as an incentive for such youth to remain in or return to school to improve their long-term employment prospects.

Eligibility: Youth may participate in the Youth Incentive Employment Program if they are: One, not employed; two, age 16-19; three, economically disadvantaged (family income of 70% of the Bureau of Labor Statistics lower living standard).

Participating youths must agree to maintain minimum attendance and performance standards in an educational program leading to a high school diploma or its equivalent or in a remedial education program or approved training program.

Type of employment: Eligible youth may be placed on worksites operated by public agencies, private non-profit organizations or private for-profit employers. Eligible employment may be part-time employment not to exceed 80 hours per month during the school year, part-time employment combined with remediation or training during the summer months, or full-time summer employment of not more than 40 hours per week for at least eight (8) weeks.

Education services: Not less than 15% of the funds provided shall be used for basic, remedial, and alternative education for youth enrolled in the program. Of that sum no more than 15% can be used to provide youth counseling, performance standard enforcement, and coordination between the worksites, the schools and the administrative entities.

Wage subsidy: Eligible employment may be subsidized up to 100% for the first six months of any eligible youth's employment with an employer; the subsidy declines to 75% for any employment with the same employer for more than six months.

Full-time employment during the summer may not be subsidized with a private for-profit employer unless such employment is a continuation of employment for an eligible youth during the school year.

Wages: No less than 70% of the funds from the Act will be allotted for the purposes of wages, benefits, and supportive services for the employed youth and for worksite supervision and supplies. Wages paid to an eligible youth must be at least minimum wage or the rate of pay for similar employment by the same employer.

Administration: Funds will be provided by the Secretary of Labor to service delivery areas under the Job Training Partnership Act (local political jurisdiction or combinations of jurisdiction designated by the governor to administer employment and training services) whose youth incentive plan has been reviewed and approved by the Private Industry Council and local elected official(s) for the service delivery area and has been submitted for review and comment to the governor for a period of 30 days.

Fund allocation: Funds will be allocated among eligible jurisdictions on the basis of a formula taking into account unemployment and the number of economically disadvantaged youth.

Authorization: The Act authorizes the appropriation of $2 billion for FY 1986 and such sums as may be necessary thereafter. At this level of funding, approximately 750,000 eligible youth could be served.●

REPEAL OF CONTEMPERANEOUS RECORDS PROVISION OF 1984 TAX LAW

HON. TIM VALENTINE

OF NORTH CAROLINA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, January 24, 1985

● Mr. VALENTINE. Mr. Speaker, the Tax Reform Act of 1984 contains many restrictive provisions including limitations on investment credits and deductions for automobiles and other related assets.

One provision of the new law which has now gone into effect, received less attention than other provisions during the debate of the bill, and will probably be one of the most difficult provisions of the law to enforce. I refer specificially to the new recordkeeping requirements of amended Code section 274. The amendment to the Code has given the Internal Revenue Service agents more authority in disallowing expenses and credits by removing the taxpayers' ability to prove their expenses by evidence other than logs, diaries, and other forms of recordkeeping.

As a result of this, my office, and I am sure many other congressional offices, has been inundated with letters, telephone calls, and personal visits from constituents who are quite concerned about the effects of this onerous provision.

This public outcry reminds me of the beginning of the 98th Congress when a similar situation existed with the enactment of the 10 percent withholding provision on savings and dividends. We are now faced with a very similar situation and I believe the taxpayers are sending a strong message to us to change the provision of the Tax Reform Act relating to recordkeeping.

Prior to the enactment of the Tax Reform Act of 1984, there were no specific recordkeeping requirements except for travel away from home overnight, entertainment expenses including country club dues, and gifts. The new law adds to the list for which records must be kept: local travel which had been previously exempted from rules by the courts; other transportation property including automobiles, trucks, vans, airplanes, and boats; property used for amusement, recreation or entertainment; computers and related equipment unless used exclusively at the employers' place of business, and other property as listed in the Internal Revenue Service regulations.

Accordingly to the Ways and Means conference report that accompanied the bill, the law means that logs must be kept for automobiles to document business use of the auto; that similar documentation must be kept to prove business use of other listed assets; and that if adequate documentation is not kept for listed property, then no deduction or credit will be allowed with respect to that item.

Thus, the Internal Revenue Service has promulgated regulations to disallow deductions for expenses where "adequate contemporaneous documentation" is not kept.

This is both a change in statute and in Internal Revenue Service policy. Previously, taxpayers had been able to reconstruct documentation when an Internal Revenue Service agent requested proof of deductions. As of now, the reconstruction of records may occur only where they have been destroyed by fire, earthquake, flood or similar disaster. In all other cases, if a taxpayer does not have "adequate contemporaneous documentation," the taxpayer get no credit or deduction for the business expenditures.

Further, all tax return preparers are required to explain the documentation requirement to taxpayers. Then the taxpayer is required to sign a certified statement that the required records exist or the preparer cannot sign the return. Additionally, the taxpayer must indicate on the return, by checking a box, that the required records exist.

As if the above rules are not enough, the statute says that in the absence of clear and convincing evidence to the contrary, a taxpayer claiming deductions without the required documentation will be subject to the negligence penalty. Again, the conference report states that claiming a deduction or credit without the support of the required records is also potentially a fraud.

Because of the harshness of these new rules, many taxpayers will lose deductions this year. I understand that some Internal Revenue Service agents are even arguing that taxpayers should have logs, diaries, et cetera for previous years. They also argue that the old section 274 statute and regulation are broad enough to require the record.

Because of the severity of the new rules, I introduced legislation on January 22, 1985, H.R. 614, to repeal the provisions of the Tax Reform Act of 1984 relating to the maintenance of contemporaneous records with respect to the business use of certain property. The bill simply repeals section 179(B) of the Tax Reform Act of 1984 and reinstates the provisions of the law that were in effect prior to the enactment of the Tax Reform Act of 1984.

I do not believe that a proliferation of abuses will occur with the repeal of the new regulations. Our intent should be to simplify the tax codes without adding enormously to the burdens of the taxpayers. But yet, this provision does just the opposite. Repealing this provision would not excuse taxpayers of their obligation to prove, upon request, their business expenses. It would simply revert back to the law prior to enactment of section 179(B) of the Tax Reform Act.

I urge my colleagues of the House Ways and Means Committee to give this matter their prompt and immediate attention.

Mr. Speaker, thank you.●

JAPANESE AUTO QUOTAS

HON. BOB TRAXLER

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, January 24, 1985

● Mr. TRAXLER. Mr. Speaker, recently, our colleague, JOHN DINGELL, distinguished chairman of the Energy and Commerce Committee, wrote an article discussing the voluntary restraints on the importation of Japanese motor vehicles into the United States. This article appeared in the January 17, 1985, edition of the Detroit Free Press.

As cochairman of the Congressional Automotive Caucus, and as a Member who represents a substantial number of people employed either directly or indirectly by the automobile industry, I believe that the points raised by Mr. DINGELL merit the attention of all our colleagues who believe that the Japanese are interested in free trade.

QUOTAS HELP KEEP US COMPETITIVE

(By John D. Dingell)

Trade policies developed during the rest of this decade can relegate the United States to a fragile and inferior corner of the world market-place or, alternatively, can result in this nation becoming a strong leader in the international trade arena.

We now face a federal budget deficit threatening to exceed $225 billion for fiscal year 1986. The federal deficit receives more news media attention, but there is also a trade deficit that may well surpass $130 billion. If we do nothing about it, or industries, particularly our auto industry and its suppliers, will assuredly be condemned to mediocrity.

Since 1981, the U.S. auto trade deficit has more than doubled—from $11 billion to $27 billion. Automobile imports have expanded from $19 billion to $32 billion while U.S. automobile exports have declined from $8 billion to $5 billion. The $19 billion automobile trade deficit with Japan alone accounts for more than half of our overall $36 billion deficit with Japan. This deficit will be greater if Japan fails to renew its voluntary export restraints beyond March.

Japanese tax and currency policies give that nation's automakers a big competitive advantage. The yen is undervalued reportedly by as much as 15 percent, which results in a $900 per-car advantage. Forgiveness by Japan's government of its commodity tax on exported vehicles saves Japanese automakers an additional $600 to $700 per vehicle. Thus, where our automakers compete head-to-head with Japanese automakers, they are at a severe economic disadvantage of over $1,500 per car.

While the health of the domestic auto-industry has improved over the past year, there are far fewer auto production workers employed today than in 1978, and many once-thriving production facilities are closed forever. High federal deficits are still keeping interest rates high, and modernization of domestic facilities is not yet complete and continues to be a costly burden. Further, Japanese competition has expanded from a small car market, with their automakers now targeting the larger car and sports car markets of the United States, markets once enjoyed almost exclusively by U.S. firms.

Earlier this month Japanese Prime Minister Yasuhiro Nakasone, met in Los Angeles with President Reagan. Trade relations were the main focus of discussion. After the meeting, the president said: "We agreed to work strenuously in the months ahead to open our markets fully and to resist protectionist pressures in both countries."

No one can reasonably fault this statement. However, it is important to recognize the effects of uneven implementation of "free trade" policies and that free trade with the Japanese in the auto industry does not exist and probably never will. The United States opens its doors wide; Japan opens its doors a mere crack or not at all.

Further, workers in the auto industry living in Michigan, Indiana, Missouri, Ohio and other auto-producing states are still unemployed, or at least remember well the heavy toll unemployment has had on their savings and families over the past decade.

Similarly, auto industry suppliers, such as those manufacturing glass, rubber, textiles, machine tools, steel and semi-conductors, are also adversely affected by uneven free trade and reductions in U.S. auto production.

Despite the gravity of the problem in the auto industry, two very significant facts came to light during the Los Angeles talks.

First, our top trade negotiators, U.S. Trade Representative William E. Brock and Commerce Secretary Malcolm Baldrige, were not in Los Angeles. Their only information came from secondhand briefings.

Second and most important, the president and the Japanese prime minister never discussed the question of continuing the voluntary restraints on the importation of Japanese motor vehicles to the United States adopted in 1981. These restraints limit the number of new cars and trucks that can enter the United States from Japan; unless extended, they will expire in March.

Even with the restraints, large numbers of Japanese vehicles enter our ports each year, while only a trickle of U.S.-made cars crosses the Pacific to Japan. Though the restraints are voluntary on Japan's part—adopted only after considerable pressure from our own country—they have resulted in Japan's curbing its appetite to export more vehicles to the United States. Some predict that without the restraints Japan, with its $1,500 yen-tax advantage, would quickly capture 40 to 50 percent of the U.S. market, making the United States, in effect, a Japanese colony.

In addition, expiration of the restraints would remove a significant incentive for the Japanese to build auto production facilities in the United States. Nissan and Honda now operate facilities here, largely because of the voluntary restraints. Plans to locate a Mazda facility in Michigan also result in large part from the restraints. But more such investments in the United States are needed, and they should involve more than just assembling vehicles with more than 50 percent of the parts produced in Japan.

No one assumes that the restraints will last forever, but the Reagan administration must pressure for their continuation until there is a real gain by the United States in exchange and our auto industry has fully recoverd from the recent recession. That gain should include a requirement that Japan resolve the yen-dollar problem, eliminate its tax advantage, and build more cars in the United States. Opening its markets to U.S. cars would be an added, but limited, bonus.

Until there is real action on these matters, the restraints should be extended in March and thereafter.●

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, January 24, 1985

● Mr. JACOBS. Mr. Speaker, I place in the RECORD, the Indianapolis Star story of January 11, 1985, announcing the retirement of Columnist Tom Keating, as well as his final column.

These items belong in the permanent RECORD because Tom Keating is simply and superlatively a chronicler of the human heart.

So far as I know, nobody doesn't like Tom Keating.

TOM KEATING LEAVES READERS OF THE STAR AFTER 3,500 COLUMNS

The last of approximately 3,500 daily columns by Tom Keating appears today on Page 19.

Keating, a member of The Indianapolis Star staff since 1966 and a columnist since 1971, is leaving the newspaper business to become director of communications at Lilly Endowment Inc.

Though his talent for mining drama, humor and inspiration out of everyday life has made him an Indianapolis institution, Keating refused to portray his career change as a newsworthy event.

"I just wanted to do something different," he said Thursday afternoon. "I've enjoyed the hell out of this, but you feel after a while you could write the history of the world in 700 words."

Others were less restrained.

"I don't believe anyone knows this city—and its people—like Tom Keating," said Lawrence S. Connor, managing editor of The Star.

"How does he expect us to start the day without his column? It's worse than being taken off coffee."

"But despite our disappointments, we wish him well in his new endeavor."

Marion County Sheriff James L. Wells, one of the countless sources of story tips developed by Keating over the years, praised the "compassion and human interest" shown in his work.

"It's going to be a loss to The Star, but not to the community, because Tom's going to be good wherever he goes," Wells said.

Except for a reception thrown by colleagues, Keating's final workday at The Star was typical—a column to write under deadline, a thick stack of mail to sort and a telephone that rarely was silent more than a minute at a stretch.

By his estimate, his phone has rung 50 to 100 times a day, bringing story ideas, pleas for help, words of thanks, compliments and curses.

The columns that have resulted from, and resulted in, those calls have dealt with the highest and lowest echelons of life in Indianapolis and far beyond, even to the Soviet Union.

Policemen and politicians, preachers and prisoners, ballplayers and bums, entrepreneurs and unlikely heroes have been grist for the 45-year-old journalist's vintage Royal Standard typewriter.

A "favorite" column or "favorite" subject would be impossible to single out, he said.

"I just try to write a feature story every day, rather than a gossip column or a political column. Some people call it 'human interest,' whatever that is. I try to find something interesting, something that I myself didn't know about. That's my criterion."

One of Keating's best-remembered columns was one of his earliest. Written in 1971, it concerned an obscure peddler named Herbie Wirth, who told the columnist he had paid for his own funeral in advance because he feared his death would go unnoticed.

The Star briefly reported Wirth's death months later, and more than 1,000 people went to Crown Hill Cemetery to pay their respects.

Keating's columns have won numerous first-place awards in state competitions, in sports as well as features categories. A book of selected columns, Indiana Faces And Other Places, was published in 1982.

Keating also has been in cited by many civic organizations for community service work.

No decision has been made about a replacement for his Monday-through-Friday column.

A FEW FINAL WORDS: THANKS FOR HELPING, THANKS FOR READING

Not long ago a journalism student asked me what I liked best about being a newspaperman.

At the time I gave him a quick answer, but this week I've been thinking about the question a lot because I'm leaving the newspaper business.

This will be my last column for The Indianapolis Star. I've accepted a job at Lilly Endowment Inc. and will start work there next week.

What I've enjoyed most about the last 18 years are the irreverent and unpredictable people who make up a newspaper staff, and simply being able to sit down and write every day.

The thrill of first seeing your name on a story is something that is hard to match.

Even more satisfying is realizing for the first time that you actually can string words together and sometimes make people laugh or cry or just be interested in what you have to say.

And, on those rare occasions when you get it just right, and know you have, it's better than anything.

It makes up for the days when you can't get a sentence on paper in intelligible form.

There also is the matter of access for a newspaperman.

Not only can you pick up a telephone and call a policeman or politician or coach and find out what really happened, but you can always find someone at a newspaper with a great curiosity and a lot of information about nearly every subject.

Everyone asks me what stories I remember best. Actually, I don't remember the stories as much as the excitement or humor or sadness surrounding them.

I have no idea why certain incidents come to mind today.

I remember Bobby Kennedy coming to declare his candidacy in the 1968 Indiana presidential primary. He arrived one night to sign his name at the secretary of state's office in the Indiana Statehouse.

When a huge crowd surged in behind him, aides whisked him inside the tall doors of the office and shut them tightly. By luck, I was watching the proceedings from inside the office, and all of a sudden I had Kennedy, his wife and a daughter all to myself for a quiet interview while about 5,000 people caused a commotion outside.

I introduced myself and was half-expecting some Olympian reply along the lines of "I dream dreams, etc." Instead, Kennedy cleared his throat and asked "Could you tell me if there's a restroom in here? I really have to go."

A few weeks later, I was at 17th Street and Broadway the night Martin Luther King Jr. was assassinated and I watched Kennedy calm an angry crowd with the sheer force of his words. It was the most supercharged moment I've ever witnessed. Part of what he said that night is inscribed on his tombstone.

The most insignificant I ever felt was at a reception for some 100 winners of the Medal of Honor at an out-of-the-way motel in Washington, D.C.

In the space of an hour I met Jimmy Doolittle, Pappy Boyington and many men with no arms and legs, and I realized I was about the only person in the room who had not performed an incredible act of heroism.

I can't forget the man who phoned me and said he was going to kill himself and that I was his last resort. That kind of call was not that unusual, and I took too long getting help for him. The man did kill himself.

Then there was the time I managed to get a private interview with President Gerald Ford in the Oval Office. I was armed with a hundred questions but spent almost the entire 25 minutes talking about how Indiana University had defeated Michigan, Ford's alma mater, in the NCAA basketball championship game a few weeks earlier.

Being able to scribble down stories has given me a chance to see places such as Russia and Israel and to talk to murderers and maniacs, stars and geniuses. But best of all, I've had the opportunity to ask questions and learn from all sorts of unsung people struggling with their particular lots in life.

I owe a great debt to Larry Connor, who hired me, taught me much, had confidence in what I could do and let me do it without interference. He remained someone I could look up to.

I also owe thanks to people, such as Bill Anderson, Bob Collins, Helen Connor, Mac Trusnik, the late Bob Mooney, Carolyn Pickering, Jerry Lyst, Fremont Power for showing me how to see what was going on and write it down.

My biggest thanks go to the people who have paid their money to read what I have written and who have responded in so many ways for so many years. I appreciate you more than you can imagine.●

BAPTIST MEDICAL CENTER

HON. ALAN WHEAT

OF MISSOURI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, January 24, 1985

● Mr. WHEAT. Mr. Speaker, Baptist Medical Center is celebrating its 25th year of outstanding service to the Kansas City community this month. The center's medical staff, employees, and administrators—both past and present—have earned the community's praise and congratulations on this momentous occasion.

In 25 years, Baptist Medical Center has continually upgraded its medical facilities to meet the needs of the community and increased its participation in community affairs.

Initial fundraising efforts began as early as 1938 when the board of trustees incorporated under the name of Baptist Memorial Hospital. Charles F. Curry was appointed general chairman of the building fund campaign. Construction on the hospital finally began in 1953 and on January 20, 1960, the first patients entered Baptist Memorial Hospital. Mr. Goldman Drury served as the hospital's first administrator from 1957 until 1960 and Mr. Hamilton Reid managed the hospital for the next 17 years.

In 1972, the hospital expanded to include a new lobby, emergency room and the relocation of several departments to two new lower levels. In the same year, the Charles F. Curry Center for Education was completed. The center provided enough room to begin education programs for the community as well as the hospital staff.

Baptist Memorial Hospital underwent corporate reorganization in 1982 forming a parent corporation, Baptist Health Systems. Under the reorganization, the hospital's name was changed to Baptist Medical Center. Today, the medical center is the largest of six subsidiary corporations of Baptist Health Systems. For the past 4 years, Dan H.

Anderson has served as president of Baptist Health Systems and Baptist Medical Center.

The medical center has expanded its services to include the Midwest Diabetes Center, the Eye Institute of Mid-America and the Cancer Institute of Mid-America. Most recently, the Eye Institute of Mid-America opened an outpatient surgery center. In 25 years, Baptist Medical Center has grown to a facility of 325 staffed beds, 1,200 employees and a medical staff of 508 physicians.

Community involvement has always been a growing priority at Baptist Medical Center. Two years ago, the medical center sponsored Kansas City's first triathalon and plans are underway for the third annual event. In the past 2 years, the medical center has invited the community to participate in the Colon Cancer Screening Program and a Wellness Program designed to promote better health in business and industry.

Mr. Speaker, congratulations to Mr. Anderson and the entire medical center staff for 25 years of service to Kansas City.●

PHYLLIS FRANK

HON. MICHAEL D. BARNES

OF MARYLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, January 24, 1985

● Mr. BARNES. Mr. Speaker, while the Congress was out, Montgomery County, MD, lost a very dear friend. Phyllis Frank did so much more in her life than seems, to most of us, humanly possible. Phyllis was a leader in the purest sense, providing to us in every moment that virtually nothing was impossible, no challenge too awesome, no principle too burdensome—no dream that could not, with dedication of purpose, be fulfilled. The world's misery and hardship never dissuaded her belief that each person can choose to live on the brighter side of life, and that, in doing so, makes life better for those around them. Hubert Humphrey once said that life is to be enjoyed, not endured. Phyllis Frank, in her remarkable way, showed us how beautifully it can be done.

I want to share a beautiful eulogy written by Phyllis' dear friend, Mary Ann Winter, and an editorial about Phyllis printed in the Washington Jewish Week:

WE MOURN PHYLLIS FRANK

My wonderful organization Pioneer Women/Na'amat and my wonderful friend Phyllis are so intertwined within my memories, within my heart that it is nearly impossible to separate them. I venture that for most of us here and by now throughout this country and in Israel that this is also true. And today it is so very painfully true for all of us and for the most recent new members and for our dear council president and national president and past national president and Phyllis' co-vice presidents because they loved her so.

For nearly 20 years almost daily and until most recently between the hours of 8:00 and 8:30 a.m., Phyllis and I began our day on the phone with what was happening and with what needed to be done. As the years went by and Phyllis became involved in more and still more issues, organizations, causes and concerns our topics pyramided and divided into the most complex and crucial issues facing the Jewish people and people everywhere.

And still each conversation began with Pioneer Women. Of course Pioneer Women is a major participant in the events of modern Jewish history, but deeper than this was that for us, Pioneer Women had been the starting point—the adventure that was to become the focus of our entire adult lives, our values, our friendships, the way we raised our children began in Pioneer Women. And we learned and grew and worked and laughed and cried but mostly laughed. Then before you knew it, Phyllis was the expert and along the way, Phyllis brought us all with her.

Her personal honor and integrity became Pioneer Women's honor and integrity. She brought us to new awareness and involvement. When Phyllis had a cause, there was no battle she wouldn't fight, no issue too big or too small. She would come with all of her energies and intellect, with a zeal we would all get caught up in. And by the next morning everyone had their job to do—and boy, were we doing it! You didn't realize for a moment that just yesterday you hadn't known anything much about French Djibouti or about that particular bill that was up before that particular committee. Phyllis brought her zeal and confidence for getting it done, and because her honor, which was by then our honor, was all wrapped up with the issue, we got it done. She had the ability to focus what seemed to be all of herself on each individual issue and on each individual person simultaneously.

She was the most giving, generous person, of herself and of her family, that I have ever known. Her entire home became a Hanukkah bazaar or a movie theater. Each friend and relative was taken to her heart and into her family. No hour of the day or night was ever inconvenient and nothing was too much to do. She would go to a Task Force meeting in the morning, give a major speech at noon, something that was never easy for her to do though she did it often, pick up Stuart and Wynne at school, make her 15th stop at the supermarket and cook dinner for the 20 people coming that evening. We used to joke that there was a sign at Ben Guiron airport that read: "When in Washington, stop at the Franks."

And she loved it. She so loved the life she led. The political intrigues, the behind the scenes maneuvering and the shtick—she understood it all. Her interests and abilities and leadership brought her into contact with every segment of the community, and all came to respect and admire her and more—to care for her. And within Pioneer Women, she cared about and knew about what was going on in every aspect of our daily functioning at every level—club, council, national and international—both personally and organizationally, and she loved it.

She was proud of her own accomplishments, of our accomplishments. Sometimes she was amazed. There were times that we would just hug each other and giggle for the joy and wonder of it all, of what we had done.

And we were so proud of her. She gave prestige to our organization. We were proud to be her associates. Proud to be able to almost keep up with her. Proud to be her friend. No, more than that—and we said it to each other. We felt so lucky that the fates had allowed us different women of different ages from different geographical locations to be together in the same time and in the same place.

All the positions she held, all the awards bestowed upon her were hers in our minds and hearts way before the official presentations. She and Morty and Stuart and Wynne were part of each of our personalities, and we all were warmly, genuinely taken into theirs. She was more than "Pioneer Woman of any one year." She was our "Pioneer Woman of two decades."

From all of us, Phyllis, from your friends and neighbors, from the community, Jewish Community Center, U.J.A. Federation, Habonim, Labor Zionist Alliance, National Jewish Community Relations Advisory Council, American-Israel Public Affairs Committee, the Israel Embassy, the political arena, from your loving haverot throughout the country and in Israel and all of us in the 14 clubs here and most especially from your fellow members at the lunch at the Big Boy Club—for being what you were for being part of us—our undying gratitude and love.

PHYLLIS FRANK

Only death could stop Phyllis Frank. When she fell and broke her hip in Israel at the end of the World Zionist Congress two years ago, she flew all the way to Washington before undergoing medical treatment.

Within days, she was mobile—on crutches or in a wheelchair—heading a search committee at the Jewish Community Council, attending meetings for Pioneer Women, travelling to New York for Zionist assemblies, making speeches, hosting receptions in her home, and performing the endless and often thankless tasks that made her a leader.

Phyllis Frank was indefatigable. She would hold a planning meeting at home in the morning, attend a luncheon, and an afternoon meeting, and host a reception for a visiting dignitary in the evening—day in and day out. All the while she enjoyed a rich personal life and worked closely with her husband and children.

She was passionately in love with Israel but not uncritically. A life-long Labor Zionist, she disagreed strongly and vocally with the policies of the Likud government. When she spoke of Israel, her face shone, and she talked softly.

She was a feminist and a pioneer. She was the first woman president in the 50-year history of our Jewish Community Council. Pioneer Women—a women's Zionist organization committed to helping working women—was her particular cause.

She was a fighter. She never walked away from a battle worth pursuing, but she never fought with ill will. She fought for her principles and she fought to win. She never quit.●

SALUTE TO THE FORTY-NINERS

HON. BARBARA BOXER

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, January 24, 1985

● Mrs. BOXER. Mr. Speaker, we live in extremely complicated and busy times, and at the moment, our national consciousness is wrestling with both domestic challenges and international dilemmas. But this past weekend many of us were treated to a healthy relapse into the world of recreation and sports and we watched and cheered an all-American phenomenon, the Super Bowl footfall game.

Of course, as a Representative from the great city of San Francisco, this was no ordinary Super Bowl for me. The Forty-Niners took their place in football history as the 1985 champions.

I congratulate each and every member of the team and I extend special thanks and congratulations to Coach Bill Walsh and owner Edward DeBartolo, Jr., for their outstanding achievement. We are so proud of you all and I know the people in the bay area are proud of their team.

I am taking this effort to underscore the Forty-Niners Super Bowl win because their triumph can be an example to all of us, even as we cope and maneuver off the football field. The team's strong sense of persistence, its skill, its ability to strategize, and its determination contributed to its win. Those attributes are laudable in all of us. But even without these comparisons, the Super Bowl was simply great entertainment and a wonderful break from a world of many complicated issues and pressures.●

FEDERAL INCOME TAX

HON. RICHARD C. SHELBY

OF ALABAMA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, January 24, 1985

● Mr. SHELBY. Mr. Speaker, in 1913, when Congress originally decided to permanently tax personal incomes, it predicted that "all good citizens will willingly and cheerfully support and sustain this, the fairest and cheapest of all taxes." Well, the Federal income tax is no longer either fair or cheap. Consequently, tax avoidance and delinquency are on the rise and show no sign of stopping.

Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, as we search for the enemy in this ultimate of compliance battles, it is increasingly apparent that we are the enemy—a Congress which continually passes onerous tax measures under the guise of "reform."

This was no more evident than in the Deficit Reduction Act of 1984. As you all know by now, section 179(b) imposes new recordkeeping requirements for deductions attributable to business use of passenger automobiles and small trucks. These requirements, incorporated into the House-Senate conference agreement, will undoubtedly lead to mountains of additional paperwork and years of lost productivity.

Our tax system can only function on the basis of trust between the taxpayer and the Government. Once that trust is questioned the credibility of the entire system is jeopardized. Provisions such as section 179(b) place an intolerable strain on the Tax Code's credibility. Consequently, I have today introduced legislation which would repeal these reporting requirements. I urge my colleagues to join me in this effort.●

HOUSING TAX CREDIT FOR THE ELDERLY

HON. WILLIAM LEHMAN

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, January 24, 1985

● Mr. LEHMAN of Florida. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing a bill which would allow a refundable tax credit for the amount of State and local real property taxes paid by persons over 65. This credit could be taken for taxes paid directly or indirectly through rent.

Elderly homeowners often have their homes paid for, and in such cases they probably would not itemize their deductions thereby taking advantage of the deduction currently allowed for State and local taxes. Because of their reduced incomes, a credit will be more beneficial to older taxpayers than a deduction. For many elderly homeowners, real estate taxes are a major expense which can often force them to sell their homes as inflation pushes property values higher.

Our present tax policies have a definite bias toward homeownership, but we must not forget the needs of our elderly renters. In an attempt to help these persons, my legislation will permit eligible persons to take a credit for the portion of their rent used to pay property taxes. As defined in the bill, rent constituting property taxes shall equal 25 percent of the rent paid during a taxable year.

In order to insure that the tax credit allowed by this legislation goes to those most in need, there is a limit to the credit based on the adjusted gross income of the eligible person. The credit will be reduced by the amount by which the taxpayer's adjusted gross income exceeds $15,000. In addition, there is an absolute limit of $300 on the credit itself.

Mr. Speaker, I believe this legislation merits the serious attention of the Congress as it considers changes in the Tax Code. It will provide important assistance to our elderly homeowners and renters alike.●

THE HARDER LINE ON FEDERAL CRIME

HON. ROMANO L. MAZZOLI

OF KENTUCKY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, January 24, 1985

● Mr. MAZZOLI. Mr. Speaker, I commend to the attention of my colleagues the following article, "The Harder Line on Federal Crime," which appeared in the December 28, 1984, Washington Post.

I regret that the omnibus crime bill had to be the subject of such parliamentary "maneuvering" in the House in order to be passed.

Be that as it may, this article describes that the firm and unflinching use of the provisions of the new crime bill can achieve the results sought by those of us who supported the omnibus approach: It is ridding the streets of dangerous, repeat offenders, and it is protecting innocent citizens from further victimization.

THE HARDER LINE ON FEDERAL CRIME

(By Loretta Tofani)

Donald Payden had served time for cocaine dealing, but he fully expected to be released on bail while awaiting trial on another cocaine charge in New York this fall.

To his surprise, U.S. District Court judge David Edelstein denied bail and ordered Payden held in preventive detention, calling him a danger to the community.

The legal basis for Edelstein's decision—and the decisions of judges in 154 other cases throughout the nation since October—was a provision in the Comprehensive Crime Control Act of 1984, a new federal law that strips away some rights and civil liberties of defendants and convicted persons—and in other cases simply makes life more difficult for them.

In addition to providing for preventive detention, the new law abolishes parole for federal crimes, establishes a commission to determine sentences, narrows the range of the insanity defense and gives federal law enforcement authorities more power to take the assets of persons convicted or narcotics violations or organized crime.

Lawyers in the Justice Department's Criminal Division have been seeking passage of such legislation for years to provide better balance between what Attorney General William French Smith calls "the forces of law" and "the forces of lawlessness."

"People are going to be safer in this country as a result of this law," said Asssitant Attorney General Stephen Trott, head of the Criminal Division.

The preventive detention provision—perhaps the most controversial—states that bail can be denied to defendants charged with federal crimes who are a danger to the community. Previously, judges could deny bail only if there was substantial risk that the defendant would not appear for trial.

Preventive detention will help prosecutors "lock up a small group of rabid maniacs who are terrorizing others," said Trott.

But some criminal defense lawyers and laywers for the American Civil Liberties Union are uncomfortable with the law—particularly with the provision allowing judges to deny bail on the basis of a defendant's potential danger to the community, which in turn is based largely on probable cause for arrest and the defendant's record.

"It's a reversal of the presumption of innocence," said David Landau of the ACLU. "Judges are saying, 'You are dangerous because you're charged with this, and you have to prove you're not dangerous to be released on bail.' "

Defense lawyers also question whether preventive detention will achieve its goal of decreasing violence. They say few defendants commit another serious crime while awaiting trial. They also note that the new law applies only to federal crimes, including bank robbery, terrorism, drug distribution, mail fraud, transporting guns and embezzlement. Defendants in some of the most violent crimes—murder, rape and armed robbery—would not be denied bail under the law.

The establishment of a sentencing commission and sentence guidelines will eliminate much of judges' discretion. Beginning in 1986, federal judges will consult the commission's guidelines to determine the sentence for each convicted person.

Judges will be required to explain in writing any departure from the sentencing guidelines. The law permits defendants and prosecutors to appeal sentences harsher or more lenient than the guideline sentence.

Once the sentence is final, the convict will serve it in full and will not be eligible for parole, although a sentence could be shortened 15 percent for good behavior.

The Justice Department's Trott supports the guidelines. Sentencing by judges today is a "fraud," he said. "The real sentencing was being done by parole officials."

The American Bar Association also supports the sentencing guidelines and reduced discretion of judges. "There has been a wide disparity in sentences [for the same crime]," said Tom Smith of the ABA. "The sentencing guidelines will narrow the disparity by providing to judges a measure by which they can compare the sentence they have in mind with other sentences."

But the ACLU's Landau noted that under the old system any disparity in sentences was corrected by the parole board.

Landau also said prosecutors will have increased power because they will be able to threaten to charge defendants with a specific crime carrying a specific sentence unless they plead guilty, Landau said.

Another provision would limit the insanity defense to those who are unable to comprehend the wrongfulness of their acts. A defendant with a serious mental disease who says he committed a crime because "voices" ordered him to do it could not use the insanity defense.

"It eliminates the present kind of battle of experts you see where we have a struggle over whether or not there was a lack of volition, where it's a question of whether or not there was irresistible impulse," said Associate Attorney General D. Lowell Jensen.

The law also would give federal law enforcement authorities broader powers to seize property, goods and money in narcotics cases and organized crime activities. Previously federal authorities could keep only the contraband seized during an arrest.

Under the new law, however, authorities can keep or sell all assets—including homes—of a defendant convicted in a drug or organized-crime case. The convicted person can keep only assets that he or she can prove did not result from the illegal activity.

To ensure that the defendant does not dispose of assets between arrest and trial, the government has new powers to freeze assets.

Prosecutors say the new provisions will strip away some remaining "benefits" of crime—because convicted persons will no longer return to illegally accumulated wealth when they leave prison.

Some defense attorneys say it could result in inadequate legal defense for clients because they would not have access to their money and other assets.

The defense attorneys' fear is not without basis. Neal R. Sonnet, a Miami defense attorney and former federal prosecutor, this month received a letter from Assistant U.S. Attorney Brian Leighton regarding Sonnet's defense of two men charged with operating a continuing drug enterprise in California.

Leighton wrote, "The government hereby puts you on notice that any and all assets belonging to the defendants are forfeitable to the United States, including any attorneys fees or other valuable consideration received by you, or to be received by you for your representation of the defendant."

Said Sonnet: "People have a right to be represented by the lawyer of their choice. If the Justice Department wants to say that any lawyer who represents a person like this does so at his own peril, then I think this needs to be straightened out in the courts or in Congress."

But the Justice Department sees the matter differently. "If you have drug money, you're not allowed to buy a plane with it, a house with it, or more drugs with it," said Trott. "Why should there be a different rule for lawyers' fees? That money is blood money."●

A VERY SPECIAL RESCUE-TEAM

HON. JOHN P. MURTHA

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, January 24, 1985

● Mr. MURTHA. Mr. Speaker, during the recent tragic disaster at the Wilberg Mine in Orangeville, UT, a very special rescue team from the area I represent worked at the scene.

Based in Latrobe, PA, this team of a doctor and six paramedics is believed to be the only medical team in the Nation trained for such mine rescues.

I spoke by telephone recently with Dr. Richard Kunkle who heads the special medical response team, and he will be sending me a report on their work which I will share with the appropriate committee.

For the information of the members, I want to insert at this point an article from the Greensburg Tribune-Review outlining the efforts of the special medical response team.

The article follows:

[From the Greensburg Tribune-Review, Dec. 24, 1984]

TEAM'S WORK WASN'T IN VAIN

(By Dave Lester)

Weary and disappointed, seven members of a Latrobe-based medical team sent to the scene of the Utah mine disaster returned home Sunday after it became clear that there were no more survivors.

"We're obviously upset because our goal was to go down there and save those lives," said Dr. Richard Kunkle, who headed the Special Medical Response Team dispatched to the Wilberg Mine near Orangeville.

Four former Pennsylvanians were among the 27 trapped in the burning mine. Nanette Wheeler, 34, formerly of Johnston, and Lester Walls Jr., 23, formerly of Commodore, in Indiana County were confirmed dead Saturday. Two other former area residents—Barry Jacobs, 27, formerly of Colver in Cambria County and James M. Bertuzzi, 37, formerly of Clymer in Indiana County—are presumed dead.

Working in shifts, the seven-member medical team stayed for hours in 50-degree temperatures while the mine fire raged behind them. They got no more than five hours of sleep during the three-day ordeal, but looked remarkably refreshed as they were greeted by wives and children last night at Greater Pittsburgh International Airport.

"We knew going in it was going to be a big challenge," said Daniel Sacco, the team's chief paramedic.

As it was, the team treated numerous mine rescue personnel suffering from hypothermia, smoke inhalation and extreme exhaustion. They also spent much of their time coordinating operations with other medical personnel in Utah, setting up plans for evacuation by military helicopter.

But Sacco said he felt the team played another important role.

"I think one of the biggest advantages of us being there was the psychological lift we gave," said Sacco. "The rescuers felt very comfortable with us being there and knowing that if something would happen to them we were very close by."

The medical response team—believed to be the only one of its kind—also was able to demonstrate the potential life-saving role of such a unit.

"Without a doubt we proved the validity of the concept," said Kunkle, who is director of emergency medicine at Latrobe Area Hospital.

The team was formed after organizers analyzed a two-year history of mine accidents and found that in at least eight cases a medical rescue team could have made the difference in saving a life.

The team, which includes two other members who were not able to join them, has participated in two other underground rescue efforts in which no one was killed.

The effort also provided them with valuable experience. "It was a great opportunity for the team to see how it could perform under stress," said Paul Culligan, a paramedic from Greensburg. "We knew that we were going into an uncontrolled situation."

They spent much of their time underground in a fresh air base some 3,000 feet inside the mine, according to Kunkle. The fire was burning in an area adjacent to the entryway used for access and ventilation, and they were forced to evacuate the mine twice when the air became dangerous. When they first entered the mine, the fire was still out of control, with rescue crews unable to get to the location where the trapped miners were believed to be.

It was 3 a.m. Sunday before rescue teams finished exploring the corridors in hopes of finding someone alive. It was at that point that the medical team's job ended.

Sacco said he was struck by the number of miners who were killed. "It's just a horrible, traumatic thing for that many families to go through," he said.●

GLENS FALLS SALUTES DR. C. RICHARD BARBER

HON. GERALD B.H. SOLOMON

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, January 24, 1985

● Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Speaker, last year, Dr. C. Richard Barber of Glens Falls Hospital in Glens Falls, NY, was honored by the hospital staff and members of the community on the occasion of his 70th birthday. I want to take this occasion, as the 99th Congress begins, to join them in paying homage to him for his years of service promoting quality health care for the people of the Glens Falls area.

Dr. Barber is a graduate of St. Mary's Academy and the University of Vermont Medical School. After his internship, he opened a private country practice in Comstock, NY, as well as serving as the doctor of the local State prison. In early 1942, Dr. Barber served our country in the U.S. Army 98th Infantry Division as a commander of the 323d Medical Battalion-Pacific Theater in World War II. He was decorated with the Bronze Star and achieved the rank of lieutenant colonel. Upon returning home to Glens Falls in December 1945, Dr. Barber opened a private general medical practice.

But Dr. Barber had not finished serving his country. In September 1968, he received a certificate of appreciation from the results of Vietnam Ministry of Health in recognition of his invaluable cooperation and assistance in the field of general surgery at Bac Lieu Hospital. He devoted 3 months of his time to help the sick and wounded as a result of the Vietnam conflict at a difficult time in our history. Three of his sons also served our country during Vietnam.

Throughout his long association with Glens Falls Hospital, Dr. Barber has worked with others to improve significantly the quality of health care in our region. He was active in the establishment of cobalt and chemotherapies, the intensive care unit, the burn unit, the recovery room, and the amnionic membrane bank at the hospital. Dr. Barber was also instrumental in the introduction of hyperalimentation, radioisotope use, tube feeding, and other modern medical procedures. Throughout his long service as chief of surgery, Dr. C. Richard Barber has fulfilled the canons of his profession with such a degree of excellence and dedication that he remains an inspiration to his patients, the hospital, the staff, and the entire community. We salute him.●

CHILD RESTRAINTS SAVE LIVES

HON. SAM GEJDENSON

OF CONNECTICUT

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, January 24, 1985

● Mr. GEJDENSON. Mr. Speaker, over the years significant steps have been taken to expand the use of a product that has been proven to save children's lives, child restraints in motor vehicles. Forty-nine States and the District of Columbia have enacted some type of law requiring children to be placed in a safety seat while in a car. Congress has passed laws to provide monetary incentives for States in this regard and to establish a "National Child Passenger Safety Awareness Day" to increase public awareness regarding the lifesaving value of child restraints. These positive actions have been successful in expanding the use of safety seats and promoting the widely accepted and statistically proven fact that safety restraint devices reduce child fatalities and crippling injuries from motor vehicle accidents.

There is, however, an important area that has not yet been addressed. State laws do not require car rental companies to provide their customers with safety seats and in some States temporary vehicles are exempt from child restraint laws. While some of the larger agencies do furnish a limited number of seats at certain locations, not all companies do, and a driver is not always guaranteed this service. I feel that if virtually every State in the country has recognized the value of establishing child restraint laws, it seems both logical and consistent that these devices should be used in rented cars and thus, readily available from rental agencies.

Mr. Speaker, in an effort to close the gap in present law I am today reintroducing a bill to require motor vehicle rental companies to provide child restraint systems in rented motor vehicles to all travelers who need this service. This measure is important if we are to provide across-the-board protection for our young people while traveling in automobiles. My bill has been endorsed by Physicians for Automotive Safety, the American Academy of Pediatrics, Independent Insurance Agents, and the Consumer's Union.

As the parent of two small children, I have become increasingly sensitive to the statistics that demonstrate the need to protect my youngsters by using safety seats whenever they travel with me and feel that a rented car should be no exception. The statistics are staggering and point out that automobile accidents are the No. 1 cause of child mortality. For instance, more children under the age of 5 are killed or crippled in automobile accidents than by the seven common childhood diseases; automobile accidents are the major cause of epilepsy; and between the years 1978-82 3,400 children were killed and 250,000 were injured in automobile accidents. The truly tragic fact is that studies show that 90 percent of these injuries and deaths are preventable by the simple and correct use of child safety seats.

The bill I am reintroducing today is consistent with laws already in place that are intended to achieve universal usage of child safety seats in order to protect children—our most precious resource—from unnecessary harm. I urge my colleagues to join with me to in this truly worthwhile and lifesaving effort to further advance the use of child safety seats.●

BREAKING THE CHAIN OF POVERTY

HON. GEORGE MILLER

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, January 24, 1985

● Mr. MILLER of California. Mr. Speaker, the Chicago Tribune recently ran a series of editorials entitled "Breaking the Chain." These editorials represent journalism at its best, because they do more than just condemn poverty among children and the enormous costs society pays in the long run. They also describe some proven and very positive alternatives.

"Breaking the Chain" draws attention to many of the same research findings described to the Select Committee on Children, Youth, and Families. In its first 2 years, the committee conducted a number of broad-ranging hearings on children's early development, as well as an intensive series of hearings on child care. What we learned, from some of our Nation's leading scholars and practitioners, is that preschool learning programs are very effective in preventing early school failure and the tragic decline into dependency and poverty that often follows. These programs have also proved to benefit society greatly through lower welfare costs, higher tax revenues, and greater worker productivity.

Early learning intervention on a massive scale, beginning in the very first years of life, could have a far reaching, almost unimaginable impact on poverty if, as noted in the final editorial, we have the foresight and patience to invest now in programs that will yield results only in the years and decades to come. If we have that patience, the contention in "Breaking the Chain"—that a "strong national commitment to early education is the surest way to break the chain of poverty"—could not be more accurate.

What follows are highlights from the six Tribune editorials. I commend them to my colleagues.

[Dec. 23, 1984]

THE COST OF CHRONIC POVERTY

* * * Neither party is talking about the ways chronic poverty saps this nation's strength, and how this affects every American. * * * In this fiscal year, federal aid to the poor will total more than $44 billion, despite the Reagan cuts. The entire nation pays, too, through the failure of American industry to keep pace with productivity gains of its foreign competitors. If you live in a state like Illinois whose 5.1 million workers help support more than 1.1 million public aid recipients, the burden on your pocketbook is even greater. * * *

Eventually, [politicians'] constituents must realize that doing nothing carries an enormous cost in lost tax dollars, crippled cities and frayed nerves. For some, it may even mean a knife in the gut or a bullet in the brain.

But there is a reason for mounting a national effort against chronic poverty that goes beyond dollars and fear. There has always been a strong sense in this country, among conservatives as well as liberals, that every American deserves a chance to build a decent life. Conservatives, in particular, know that it should not come in the form of a handout, but as an opportunity a person can seize and develop. * * *

[Dec. 24, 1984]

A KEY TO CRIME AND SCHOOLS

* * * Here in Chicago, violent youth gangs have come to symbolize the way chronic poverty, educational failure and criminal behavior are inextricably linked. * * *

When [youth] turn to crime, their direct victims are usually each other. But they have also managed to drive businesses from Lawndale, middle-class blacks from Woodlawn, a stable ethnic mix from Humboldt Park and good teachers from the Chicago school system. Their problems force up the cost of state and city government at the same time those costs send taxpaying homeowners and businesses fleeing to safer sites. * * *

The old hope was that the classroom would break the chain of poverty and dependency. That hasn't happened. In fact, inferior schools are often blamed for perpetuating the underclass. In survey after survey, poor schools and poor public safety outrank high taxes and congestion as the prime reasons for business flight. Companies want a work force that can read and write, and their employees want neighborhood schools where the dominant atmosphere is learning, not terror. * * *

The Chicago Board of Education fuzzes statistics on dropouts, but counts by neighborhood and civic groups indicate that more than half the students leave before graduation in many high schools. That leads to another figure, perhaps the most revealing of any single statistic on urban life today: About 85 percent of prisoners in the Illinois correctional system have not finished high school. * * *

THE PAYOFFS FOR PRESCHOOLING

A strong national commitment to early childhood education is the surest way to break the chain of chronic poverty. * * *

That isn't just theory. It has been convincingly demonstrated, for example, in a long-term study conducted by the High/Scope Educational Research Foundation of Ypsilanti, Michigan. The findings should appeal as much to taxpayers and government budget-cutters as to humanitarians.

In the mid-1960s, researchers in Ypsilanti began to study 123 young children considered to be at high risk of failing once they started school. All came from poor black families. They scored low on IQ tests. Few of their parents had finished high school. Half of the families were on welfare. Almost half were headed by single parents.

Half of these youngsters were enrolled in high-quality preschool programs five mornings a week, either for one year when they were 4 years old or for two years at ages 3 and 4. A visiting teacher also spent 90 minutes a week in each child's home helping a parent provide more learning opportunities. The other youngsters got no preschool education.

Ever since, researchers have followed the progress of both groups. The first reports confirmed that those with the early learning opportunities got better grades and fewer failing marks. They were absent less from school. They needed less special education. And they had a better attitude toward school than a group of similar youngsters who did not get the preschooling.

A second payoff has just been documented, now that the groups have reached age 19. The long-range data show that those who had the preschool education were much more likely than the others to have finished high school and to score average or above on competency tests. More of them had jobs or were involved in higher education. And they were less likely to have been arrested, to be on welfare or to be pregnant.

Because they needed less remedial and special education, it actually cost less to educate the children who got the preschooling than those who didn't, even when the expense of the early classes was included. Researchers report preschool cut the cost per student of each succeeding year in school by about 20 percent—about $800 per child every year in savings.

In terms of reduced crime alone, taxpayers will save $3,100 for every one of the young people who got the preschool training, researchers estimate. These are the direct costs of the criminal justice system and don't count the anguish, fear and physical suffering that criminals can inflict on victims. Nor does it attempt to measure the psychological benefits of a reduction in crime rate in a community or any subsequent cutback in private security systems.

Taxpayers have already saved seven times the cost of one year of preschool education in the Ypsilanti project and 3½ times the tab for two years. And the savings resulting from reduced needs for welfare, from less crime and from greater ability to earn will continue for the rest of the lives of these young people—and even reach into the lives of the following generation. * * *

HOW TO BUILD SMARTER BRAINS

* * * Scientific findings and abundant case histories leave no doubt that appropriate opportunities to learn are essential to optimal brain development in early childhood. Some researchers estimate that providing an enriched learning environment can raise the level of a child's IQ (only a rough measure of some mental abilities, of course) by 20 to 30 points. This, however, can mean the difference between a child who can function well in a normal classroom and one who is considered educably mentally handicapped, or between a child with average abilities and one with a superior mind. * * *

Linguists know that young children accomplish the most difficult and challenging mental task of their lives—learning language with its complex syntax and symbolic meanings—largely before the age when schooling normally begins. Even proud parents and doting grandparents seldom realize the magnitude of this intellectual achievement. * * *

Psychologists have also documented how difficult it can be for children ever to catch up if their brains are not adequately nourished by mental stimulation during these critical early years. * * * Without abundant, appropriate verbal responses from a loving adult and without great opportunity to learn through every sensory channel, the brain will remain malnourished and its great potential stunted. * * *

Excitement about early learning is fast becoming an accepted part of child-rearing. * * * But many children lack adequate mental nourishment; their parents are too young, too uninformed, too troubled by their own problems to provide well for the needs of their offspring's growing brains. These youngsters will already be behind when they start 1st grade. And their failures to keep up in school will make them more vulnerable to drug abuse, delinquency, premature pregnancy, unemployment—and inability to escape from poverty.* * *

[Dec. 27, 1984]

HEAD START IS ONLY A START

For complex biological and psychological reasons, children who are mentally malnourished during the first few years of life have enormous difficulty catching up in the classroom. Most never do.* * *

When this fact first became evident in research done in the early 1960s, it quickly became the basis for one of the most successful of the War on Poverty programs—Head Start. But even Head Start is essentially too little and too late to prevent some mental malnourishment in disadvantaged children. And it has reached only a small percentage of the poor youngsters who qualify for its help.

Even so, Head Start has succeeded. Several dozen scientifically sound, long-term studies have followed Head Start youngsters for many years. Almost all of them show that even this small amount of mental stimulation makes a difference in school achievement, even years later.* * *

But Head Start programs are only one way early learning programs can be used to help avoid the devastating effects of mental malnutrition among children who are at risk because of poverty, broken homes and other family circumstances.

Home Start programs are considerably more successful in raising IQ and reducing school failure because they reach disadvantaged children earlier—sometimes beginning during the first months of life—and because they involve parents in increasing the amount of mental stimulation in the home. In Home Start plans, a visiting teacher comes regularly to a home to play learning games with a young child, to lend toys and learning materials and, in a low-key way, to show the baby's mother how happily her offspring responds to mental stimulation and why it is crucial.* * *

If this nation really wants to help children escape from the underclass and to equip them to succeed in school and after, the most effective way would be to provide them a coordinated package of early learning programs.* * *

[Dec. 30, 1984]

WHAT REAGAN SHOULD DO

* * * An enormous amount of public attention has been focused on the problems created by [the] underclass, but there has been scant attention to the failure of anti-poverty programs to stop its growth. The reason is as simple, and as complicated, as the human life cycle itself. The chain of chronic dependency was not broken because the right resources were not concentrated at the right point: in the preschool years, when a human being can be most easily influenced.

A network of early learning centers serving America's urban ghettoes would do more to solve city problems and give a long-range lift to the economy of the entire country than any other domestic initiative hatching in any think-tank or in any politician's position papers or in any socio-economic journal. * * *

The federal government must help. It must begin with a strong commitment, followed by some tough choices. The deficit problem rules out the multibillion-dollar additions to the budget that Lyndon Johnson rammed through in his guns-and-butter days. New federal money for early education will have to be accompanied by cuts in other areas, and that will set off a storm of opposition from recipients, contractors, special-interest lobbyists and the rest of the beneficiaries of government spending. Some people will be hurt. There's no way to avoid it.

But there's also no question that early learning will do what other spending programs have not done, and that is break the chains that lock the underclass out of any real possibility of achievement. The big difficulty lies in gearing the American political process to do the job. It's programmed for quick results, with a notoriously short attention span. Can it acquire the patience and consistency needed to reap the full benefits of educating 3-year-olds? Savings in remedial education will come first, but even those will be several years down the road. The payoff in reduced dependency, crime and neighborhood deterioration, with a resulting boost in productivity, won't be realized for a decade or two.

Only a determined, forceful administration that has the confidence of the bulk of the American people can initiate such a long-term commitment. Ronald Reagan is uniquely positioned to lead that initiative. * * *

Political leaders in a number of states have been impressed with this growing body of evidence and are starting to use it. The leader is California, which will spend $260 million this school year to educate 150,000 prekindergartners. Much smaller programs are getting underway in New York and New Jersey. South Carolina has a new law reimbursing local school districts for half the cost of educating 4-year-olds considered "at risk." And next year Texas will begin an early childhood education effort expected to cost about $50 million annually. Eight other states—all in New England or the South—are about to start early-learning projects for disadvantaged children or are seriously considering them.

These initiatives are promising, but for the most part they don't touch the urban areas hit hardest by the interlocking burdens of poverty, dependency, poor schools, crime, neighborhood decay and business flight. * * *

President Reagan should devote these next four years to leading a national drive to break the bonds of the underclass through early childhood education. Federal money will be needed, but states and cities should divert some of their resources to the effort, too, for the sake of their own fiscal futures. For the same reason, private agencies and businesses should pitch in.

Some presidents earned greatness by winning wars. For Ronald Reagan, there's a better way. He can end the wars raging in the souls of America's cities.●

DES REGISTRY AND SCREENING ASSISTANCE

HON. FRANK J. GUARINI

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, January 24, 1985

● Mr. GUARINI. Mr. Speaker, on January 7 I introduced legislation which will provide Federal grants to States for programs to identify and aid women and their children who have been exposed to the cancer-causing drug diethylstilbestrol, commonly called DES. I was pleased to be joined in this effort by Mr. WAXMAN of California, Ms. MIKULSKI of Maryland, Mr. WEISS of New York, and Ms. SNOWE of Maine.

My bill, H.R. 508, will assist States which establish programs to identify women who took DES during pregnancy and their children who were exposed to DES before birth. The bill will also aid efforts to disseminate information about the health risks associated with DES, and will support screening and diagnostic services for exposed individuals.

Created in 1938, DES is a synthetic hormone which was frequently prescribed to women who had histories of complications during pregnancy. It was most heavily prescribed from 1940 to 1960. Studies as early as 1953 proved that DES was ineffective in preventing miscarriage, but its use continued until 1971. That year, the Food and Drug Administration (FDA) banned its use during pregnancy. By then, an estimated 4 to 6 million women and their children had been exposed to the drug.

In 1971, a clear link was established between exposure to DES before birth and an increased risk of a rare form of cancer in young women. By 1980, a surprising number of cases of clear-cell adenocarcinoma had been reported. Further studies indicate that up to 90 percent of DES daughters experience adenosis, abnormal growths or structural changes in their reproductive tracts. While these abnormal cell growths may be the basis for the development of clear-cell adenocarcinoma, increasing evidence indicates that the abnormalities may disappear over time.

Early detection and treatment are vital to efforts to contain this cancer and preserve the reproductive capacities of its victims. My bill will assist DES daughters in obtaining the regular medical examinations and proper diagnostic screening which are such an important part of the follow-up care they require.

Additional studies show that DES daughters experience more difficulties than average women during their own pregnancies. Such women have a higher rate of premature deliveries, miscarriages and associated complications. It is suspected that these difficulties are related to reproductive damage resulting from their exposure to DES before birth. These findings were outlined in a January 25, 1980 article in the Washington Post:

[From the Washington Post, Jan. 25, 1980]

MISCARRIAGES, EARLY BIRTHS HIGHER IN DES DAUGHTERS

(By Susan Okie)

The daughters of women who took the drug DES during pregnancy face an increased risk of miscarriage or premature delivery when they themselves become pregnant.

The new finding of researchers at the University of California at San Diego, the University of Chicago and other medical centers is an ironic twist in the history of DES (diethylstilbestrol), a synthetic hormone taken during pregnancy by so many as 1.5 million American women because doctors mistakenly believed it prevented miscarriages.

Dr. Larry Cousins and co-workers at UC-San Diego studied 71 women who had been exposed to the drug because their mothers took it while pregnant.

Comparing these "DES daughters" to a group of unexposed women, Cousins found that 40 percent of the DES group had premature babies and 25 percent of their babies died. The unexposed group had no premature births or infant deaths. Thirty-five DES-exposed women had visible abnormalities of the vagina and cervix. Among them the figures were even higher: 71 percent delivered prematurely, and 43 percent of their babies died.

While the San Diego researchers' results may be artificially high because of the way they chose patients—most women were referred to the medical school by their doctors—other DES experts are also finding that DES daughters have a higher risk of terminated pregnancies or delivering premature babies.

Dr. Arthur Herbst, the gynecologist who discovered in 1971 that DES had triggered cases of a previously rare vaginal cancer in young women exposed to it before birth, now believes the drug has caused an increase in premature deliveries, pregnancy loss and possibly infertility among other DES daughters.

In a study at the University of Chicago, Herbst has found, according to sources who have seen his data, that only 47 percent of DES-exposed women delivered full-term, live babies in their first pregnancy, compared to 85 percent of women not exposed to the drug. Twenty-two percent of the DES-exposed women delivered prematurely compared to 7 percent of unexposed women and 31 percent of the DES daughters miscarried during their first pregnancy or lost their babies, compared to only 8 percent of unexposed women.

Herbst said the reason why DES daughters may have problem pregnancies is unknown, but recommended that a woman whose mother took DES "should have increased medical surveillance" during her own pregnancy.

She should see her doctor more often than once a month, and the cervix—the opening of the uterus—should be watched carefully for premature dilation.

Because DES exposure before birth may have weakened the cervix, a DES daughter who has lost a pregnancy or shows abnormal dilation may need the cervix tied close during the pregnancy. But he said such treatment is not routinely necessary for DES-exposed women, since most can have live babies without it.

DES, a synthetic form of the hormone estrogen, was prescribed to prevent miscarriages from the 1940s until the early 1970s, despite a controlled study at the University of Chicago in 1951-52 which showed it did not work. It is the daughters of those Chicago women—half exposed to the drug, the other half not—who participated in Herbst's most recent research.

DES, along with other estrogens, is still approved by the Food and Drug Administration for symptoms in older women related to menopause, as a treatment for breast and prostate cancer, and for a few other conditions, although the drug label contains a warning about its ability to cause cancer of the uterus and forbids its use during pregnancy.

Until an FDA ban went into effect last year, it was fed to chickens and cattle as a fattening agent, and was therefore present in meat.

It is still prescribed by some doctors to women just after delivery to stop milk formation by the breast and as a "morning after pill" to prevent pregnancy. Neither of these uses is approved by the FDA.

It is essential that DES daughters and their doctors are familiar with the potential complications DES daughters face if they become pregnant. H.R. 508 will facilitate education efforts aimed at physicians and other health care professionals so that appropriate medical care can be provided to women at risk.

In recent years, evidence has accumulated that shows an increased rate of reproductive and urinary tract abnormalities in the sons of women who took DES during pregnancy. To date, studies have not confirmed a suspected link between exposure to DES and increased rates of genital cancer or infertility in young men. Another Washington Post article, dated October 12, 1980, reported the disturbing preliminary findings:

FERTILITY PROBLEMS LINKED TO DES-EXPOSED SONS

NEW YORK, October 11.—The sons of women who used the controversial drug DES in hopes of preventing miscarriage may have a higher incidence of sterility than other men, a pilot study suggests. The drug is already linked to vaginal cancer among DES daughters.

The study, based on a new technique for determining male fertility, found an infertility rate of nearly 80 percent among a small group of men who were exposed to DES in the womb and have reached adulthood.

"It's a pretty small pilot study but the numbers are quite significant and somewhat disturbing," said Dr. Morton Stenchever, head of the study and chairman of obstetrics and gynecology at the University of Washington School of Medicine in Seattle.

Stenchever presented the data Thursday at the annual meeting of the Pacific Coast Obstetrical and Gynecological Society in Monterey, Calif.

DES, or diethylstilbestrol, was prescribed to an estimated 4 million women in the 1950s and early 1960s in hopes of preventing miscarrages. It has been linked to a rare form of vaginal cancer in daughters of women who took it, and to genital malformations in their sons. But the fertility of DES-exposed men has never before been reliably tested, Stenchever said, partly because no accurate test of male fertility existed.

The new study used at test called "sperm penetration as say," in which hamster eggs that have been stripped of an outer shell which would block human sperm are exposed to samples of semen. If more than 15 percent of the eggs are penetrated by sperm within two hours, the donor is fudged fertile, although actual fertilization cannot occur.

Among a group of men who had never tried to have children, 10 of 13 DES-exposed men were judged infertile by the test compared to only one of 11 of a control group of men not exposed to the drug.

None of the men, who ranged in age from 17 to 30, had an abnormal semen analysis, the only method by which male fertility could previously be tested, Stenchever said.

Continued medical investigation of the effects of DES on men is indeed warranted, and is currently underway. My bill will help keep these young men informed of new developments related to DES by aiding the establishment of voluntary registries of exposed individuals.

Finally, newly completed research indicates that the mothers who took DES during pregnancy are at a much higher risk for contracting breast cancer. On December 12, 1984, the Washington Post reported the most recent findings:

[From the Washington Post, Dec. 4, 1984]

U.S. URGED TO WARN WOMEN WHO TOOK DES—STUDY LINKS DRUG TO BREAST-CANCER RISK

Women who took the drug DES to prevent miscarriage 20 or more years ago are 40 percent to 50 percent more likely than other women their age to develop breast cancer, a Dartmouth University medical study has found.

Dr. Sidney M. Wolfe, director of the Health Research Group, a branch of Ralph Nader's Public Citizen, said yesterday the figures show that the use of DES has led to about 25,000 more cases of breast cancer than would have resulted without DES.

Wolfe urged Health and Human Services Secretary Margaret M. Heckler to begin an effort to notify the estimated 2 million women who received DES of the increased risk.

Until the early 1970s, diethylstilbesterol (DES) was given to pregnant women in the belief that it prevented miscarriages; it later was shown to be completely ineffective. It also was established that daughters of women who took DES have an increased risk of developing cancer of the cervix or vagina. Several hundred such cases have been documented.

The medical study, published in last week's New England Journal of Medicine, compared a group of nearly 2,700 women who had taken DES between 1940 and 1960 with a group of otherwise similar women who were pregnant during that time.

Of the DES women, 4.40 percent had breast cancer, compared with 3.12 percent of the control group. When the figures were adjusted to eliminate potentially confounding factors, the researchers said, the DES group's breast-cancer rate was 47 percent higher.

"DES thus becomes the major environmentally identified cause of breast cancer," Wolfe said. "All doctors who have ever administered DES to women should search their files to identify all such women and immediately notify them."

The study was conducted by Dr. E. R. Greenberg of Dartmouth University medical school and included women from New Hampshire, Massachusetts and Minnesota.

Scientists suspect that DES mothers may also be especially vulnerable to other forms of cancer of the reproductive organs as they enter middle and old age, when such cancers appear most frequently. It is vitally important that DES mothers are alerted to the risks they face and are provided with opportunities to obtain the thorough examinations they need. My bill will contribute to both these goals.

Clearly, women and their children who have been exposed to DES face increased health risks. The oldest DES daughters and sons are barely 40, so the long-term effects of DES are still unknown. It will be necessary for DES mothers and their children to be examined at regular intervals for the rest of their lives. Yet many DES-exposed individuals are unaware that they are at risk and that they require special screening for cancer and other health problems.

Despite a well-coordinated public education program implemented by the National Cancer Institute in the late 1970's, efforts to publicize the health risks associated with DES have not reached many women and their children requiring special medical attention. In many cases, doctors have been unable to locate women for whom they prescribed DES. In other cases, exposed individuals remain unfamiliar with the drugs their doctors prescribed and have not sought access to their medical records. Still others remain unaware that both their daughters and sons face health risks from their exposure to DES.

Programs to identify DES exposed individuals, advise them of the health risks they face, inform them of the need for appropriate medical care, and provide minimal diagnostic services have been initiated by only a few States. My bill will encourage and assist these efforts by providing grants to States which establish identification, registration, public education, and screening programs for DES victims. Six million dollars will be available to States or public or private organizations within the States for these programs. The Federal share of funds for such efforts will be available for 5 years, and will decrease from 75 percent in the first year to 35 percent in the final year.

I urge my colleagues to join me in supporting this measure. It is too late to prevent the damage caused by exposure to DES, but we can and should make a commitment to providing health information and medical assistance to those who face an increased risk of cancer or other complications because of their exposure to this drug.●

A TRIBUTE TO REV. EDWARD SURGES

HON. WILLIAM O. LIPINSKI

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, January 24, 1985

● Mr. LIPINSKI. Mr. Speaker, it is with great pride that I call attention to a respected citizen from Illinois' Fifth Congressional District, which I am privileged to represent, and he is Rev. Edward Surges. Reverend Surges has consistently devoted his time and efforts on behalf of the community, with a particular commitment to our youth.

Reverend Surges grew up on the southwest side of Chicago and, except for time away to study for the priesthood and to study church law in Rome, has lived and worked in the Chicago area. Reverend Surges has worked at St. Dionysius Parish in Cicero and is currently the pastor of St. Rene Goupil Church on the southwest side of Chicago.

Through the efforts of Reverend Surges, St. Rene's has become one of the most active parishes in the community. His work has brought about numerous physical improvements to the church, retirement of the church debt and a strong commitment to the Christian education of our youth in establishing a parish school board.

In addition to his work for the church and the community, Reverend Surges returned to school to obtain a law degree for Loyola University in 1974. He has also undertaken a position with Catholic charities, to assist people in their efforts to obtain Social Security disability benefits.

I join with the residents of the Fifth Congressional District in paying tribute to Rev. Edward Surges for his work in our behalf, and I would like to introduce into today's CONGRESSIONAL RECORD a newspaper article honoring Reverend Surges upon his receipt of the Ray McDonald Community Achievement Award.

[From Midway Sentinel, October 1984]

MCDONALD AWARD TO SURGES

The Midway Sentinel proudly salutes Reverend Edward Surges as October's recipient of the Ray McDonald Community Achievement Award.

Rev. Surges, the present pastor of St. Rene Goupil Church, grew up on the Southwest Side of Chicago. Following his four year tenure at Leo High School he entered the seminary and was ordained a priest in 1954.

After completing his first assignment at St. Catherine's, Rev. Surges left for Rome where he studied and researched Church law for three years. Upon his return to Chicago he worked in the Archdiocese on the Matrimonial Tribunal for 11 years, assisting people who sought a church annulment of their marriage. During this 11 year period he resided at St. Dionysius parish in Cicero where he served as moderator of their teen club. In 1974 he graduated from Loyola University School of Law and was admitted to the bar the same year. His admission to the legal profession was followed by an assignment to St. Rene's parish as associate pastor and culminated in 1980 when he was appointed pastor of the parish.

Under Rev. Surges guidance and leadership St. Rene's has become one of the most active parishes in the community. He recently instituted a debt retirement program which resulted in the liquidation of the church debt. Through his perseverance and hard work many improvements have been realized, including updated lighting and renovation of the landscaping around the church grounds.

Reverend Surges has also developed a deep commitment to the Christian Education of our youth and played an integral role in instituting a parish school board. His involvement at the church extends far beyond the normal duties imposed upon one individual. Along with a number of adults from the congregation he co-ordinates and oversees the operations of the Mothers Club, Altar Rosary Society, Holy Name Society, Athletic Club, and is currently organizing St. Rene's 25th anniversary celebration. His enthusiastic approach and spiritual guidance was instrumental in forming a true family unit at the parish which is exemplified by the number of worthwhile community activities sponsored by the group.

Besides his many other duties and responsibilities, Cardinal Bernadin recently assigned Rev. Surges to work two days a week at Catholic Charities, assisting people in their efforts to obtain Social Security disability benefits.

The Staff of Midway Sentinel expresses its thanks to Rev. Surges and honors him for the unselfish dedication of time and concern he has shown for the community of the 23rd Ward and the Southwest Side.●

DON'T BE BAMBOOZLED

HON. THOMAS N. KINDNESS

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, January 24, 1985

● Mr. KINDNESS. Mr. Speaker, let's not let them bamboozle us. Sure, there's a lot of talk about belt tightening and bullet biting; but balancing the budget is easy. The following questions illustrate just how easy it is to develop realistic economic assumptions, simplify the tax structure, increase revenues, and limit Federal spending. (You can choose more than one answer for each question.)

(1) Which of the following do not have an impact on the Federal deficit?
(a) The level of unemployment.
(b) The level of taxation.
(c) The level of spending.

(2) Increasing taxes would make the deficit
(a) Smaller.
(b) Larger.
(c) Easier to live with.

(3) The Congress can increase Federal revenues by
(a) Refusing to touch the deduction for charitable contributions.
(b) Refusing to touch the deduction for interest on home mortgages.
(c) Refusing to tax fringe benefits.

(4) Revenues can also be increased by repealing
(a) The cigarette tax.
(b) Taxes on distilled spirits.
(c) The gasoline tax.
(d) The diesel fuel tax.
(e) The capital gains tax.

(5) There can be no sacred cows when it comes to a spending freeze, but we can't freeze spending for
(a) Defense.
(b) Welfare services.
(c) Veterans benefits.
(d) Social Security.
(e) Medicare.

(6) The Federal Government should stop subsidizing the railroads, except for
(a) Conrail.
(b) Amtrak.
(c) All of the above.

(7) Public works projects should not be funded, except in states
(a) That are round on the end and high in the middle.
(b) Whose capital is Columbus.
(c) Whose official song is "Beautiful Ohio."

(8) Federal spending on agriculture programs should be reduced, except for
(a) The dairy price support program.
(b) Target prices for wheat and feed grains.
(c) The food stamp program.
(d) Farmers Home Administration loan programs.
(e) Rural Electrification Administration.
(f) Soil conservation.

(9) Which of the following do not constitute "corporate welfare" and should be spared the budget ax?
(a) Urban Development Action Grants.
(b) Industrial Development Bonds.
(c) Accelerated depreciation.
(d) Synthetic Fuels Corporation.
(e) Export-Import Bank.

(10) Federal funding for education should be reduced, except for
(a) Head Start.
(b) Elementary and secondary education.
(c) Post-secondary education.
(d) Vocational education.
(e) Student loans.
(11) Waste, fraud and abuse can be eliminated in every area of Federal spending, except for
(a) Defense spending.
(b) Non-defense spending.
(12) The Office of Management and Budget can forecast a budget surplus by
(a) Assuming all Americans will work two jobs, thereby paying higher taxes.
(b) Asking each person in the Federal workforce to work one year without pay.
(c) Selling Alaska back to the Russians.

If you've answered each of these questions correctly, it may be advisable to ignore most of the sound and fury of the budget cycle that is about to begin. Excessive exposure to the budget process may be hazardous to your health.●

ETHIOPIAN FOOD CRISES PROMPTS RESPONSE IN FALL RIVER, MA

HON. BARNEY FRANK

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, January 24, 1985

● Mr. FRANK. Mr. Speaker, my staff and I have recently been given a chance to participate in a very encouraging effort by a group of citizens in and around Fall River, MA, to show their concern for people in need.

Fall River City Councilor Daryl Gonyon has organized a creative effort to provide volunteer assistance to the desperately hungry people of Ethiopia. Dorothy Reichard and Bill Whitty of my congressional staff have been privileged to work closely with Daryl Gonyon in trying to mobilize resources to provide a means for talented and dedicated American citizens to go to Ethiopia to help in this time of crisis. I have been extremely impressed with the diligence and energy and compassion that Councilor Gonyon has shown, and I have been equally impressed with the number of talented citizens who have responded to his call for assistance.

I hope that this kind of effort can be duplicated elsewhere, and I would like to share with the Members a description of this activity which was prepared by those who are participating in it.

The material follows:

IN ETHIOPIAN CRISIS: AID OFFERED

A major grass roots effort to recruit Fall Riverites and transport them to drought-stricken Ethiopia to render medical assistance and distribute foodstuffs is being conducted by Fall River City Councilor Daryl Gonyon. Volunteers, now numbering seventy-five, come from five states: Connecticut, Massachusetts, Maine, New Hampshire and Rhode Island. These volunteers have many different skills to offer.

Councilor Gonyon is seeking donations and has promised strict accountability for any funds received, using funds for transportation of volunteers to work in famine relief only not one penny of any funds received from this appeal will be used for administrative or overhead costs of any kind. "If I had $50,000 I could send a team of 25 volunteers for one full month!", says Gonyon. One hundred fifty thousand dollars would have to be raised to send all 75 volunteers.

Travel assistance and co-ordination has been offered free from Fall River Travel Bureau, Inc., 154 No. Main St., Fall River, MA.

Volunteers are helping out in many ways. One such volunteer is Sr. Rosemarie Higgins, F.M.M., a Catholic nun residing in No. Province, R.I. with the Franciscan Missionaries of Mary, a congregation of women established exclusively for world-wide mission. Her help has been invaluable. She has co-ordinated information amongst most New England agencies and groups concerning the so-called "Fall River effort", and has furnished leads to possible sponsors along with valuable printed materials concerning Ethiopia and other African nations.

Rev. Lee Ferry, an Episcopalian chaplain at Southeastern Massachusetts University, has been promoting the Fall River effort on that campus, and has been directly responsible for the recruitment of ten volunteers.

Claire Boulay, a resident of Assonet, MA is the primary administrative helper for the Fall River effort. She has volunteered many many hours on the phone to other volunteers. Her most recent effort was to gather volunteers at Councilor Gonyon's home in Fall River to meet one another and U.S. Representative Barney Frank. Kate Boylan, a staff writer for the Sunday Standard-Times, New Bedford, MA wrote substantially the following: When City Councilor Daryl Gonyon met his guests at the door, he asked them to fill out a "hello, my name is" tag and write on it how they can help Ethiopia's starving people. Medical student, registered nurse, carpenter and helper were among the skills they listed. One woman simply wrote, "Save lives." More than 40 people crowded into Gonyon's home to share their concerns. Some spoke of taking a semester's break from medical school. Bob Souza of Tiverton, RI, wondered aloud how people would react to working with dying people. Could they handle it or would they want to turn around and go home? Dan O'Leary from Connecticut told other volunteers how to get involved in fund-raising. A florist, O'Leary has raised thousands of dollars, mostly through students' sales of carnations. Asked about what one could do in Ethiopia, O'Leary said: "I think the needs are very fundamental, very basic. I think we can use our hands for just about anything. When people are dying and they're too weak to feed themselves, it seems like there's quite a bit you could do. At the very least," O'Leary said, "I could wipe the flies off some dying little kid's eyes."

Typical of letters Councilor Gonyon has received from volunteers is one from Janice Clifford, RN from Coventry RI: "I would like to be added to the list of volunteers for Ethiopia. I am a 42 year old mother of three grown children. When I see the heart breaking pictures of suffering people I feel most fortunate my children and I are able to live comfortably without sickness and hunger. I am a registered nurse and director of nursing for a 300 bed health care facility. It would be possible for me to volunteer two weeks of my time. This letter is written to you with the encouragement of my children. It is our way of repaying God for all our blessings."

James N. Dunbar, Staff Reporter for the Fall River Herald News, Fall River, MA has written two articles concerning the Fall River effort. Councilor Gonyon gives Dunbar the credit for getting the Fall River effort off the ground. "I was discussing my recruitment idea with Mr. Dunbar. The next day this was front page news. The first volunteer, Steve Scanlon from Tiverton, R.I., called me when the story in the Herald News had barely hit the street. My home was deluged with calls from people who wanted to help. My wife Lauretta, by far my strongest helper in this relief effort, has been a very busy phone receptionist, co-ordinator and host to the volunteers."

Linda Borg, Staff Writer for the Providence Journal, Massachusetts Edition, Fall River, MA has written an article with comments substantially as follows: "When Ken Ford's newborn son recovered from a serious illness seven years ago, he promised to do whatever he could to help other suffering children. After reading City Councilor Gonyon's plea for volunteers to go to Ethiopia, he knew what he had to do. "It's the children," he said, when asked why he wanted to volunteer. "You see their faces. You see the look of anguish on a mother's face. If I can leave there and see a couple of smiling faces, that's fine. I'll wash dishes or do whatever's needed." Paul Rodrigues, a data processing supervisor from Fall River said, "I thought about sending money, but you wonder how much filters down to the people? By going myself, I know where the help is going. It's one man doing whatever he can to help. What's one year out of a possible 80?" For Ron Travis, a former truck driver in Vietnam, it's a matter of "payback." "I've always had plenty to eat and a roof over my head," said Travis, 38, of Fall River. "That's the reason, if anything." For sister Maria Ceballos, it's a vocation. A native of Colombia, she has never forgotten the lessons she learned in childhood when hunger was an everyday reality in the sprawling tent cities that encircled the city she lived in.

How did all this begin? "I heard people on talk shows complaining, 'Where is God in a crisis like this?'" Gonyon said. "I suspect God might be wondering, 'Where is man?'" Gonyon decided that manpower—not money and food—was the most important aspect of the international relief effort. Gonyon contacted Congressman Barney Frank's office in Newton which agreed to act as a go-between.

Kate Boylan, in her most recent article concerning the Fall River effort carried in the Sunday Standard-Times, New Bedford, MA wrote substantially as follows: "Louis Bouchard figures he can pay off a debt. The Navy gave him an education so he could make a life for himself and his family. A dental technician and former Navy corpsman, Bouchard volunteered to go to Ethiopia to help the famine-stricken population. Bouchard said, "There was famine in the days of the Bible. But there was no way of helping the people then as we can today. I feel that now, today, with the means of transportation we have, people should get together and do what they can to help these poor unfortunate people." "Dorothy Reichard in Congressman Frank's Newton office has been a tremendous help to me and my effort to get volunteers to Ethiopia," says Councilor Gonyon. Dorothy has been in contact with the U.S. State Department for co-ordination purposes. She has also written letters for Congressman Frank which have gone to international agencies and airlines seeking sponsorship.

"Catholic Relief Services and Save the Children seem to be our best hopes for sponsorship," says Gonyon. "After having talked with almost all international agencies involved with relief for African nations, I have learned that the Fall River effort is the largest such effort of its kind in the United States. I am praying and working now for benefactors to sponsor transportation for the volunteers. God asked the question that we are responding to, the question "Where is man in this crisis? We provide the effort, and leave the results up to Him."●

COMMON SECURITY RESOLUTION

HON. GEORGE E. BROWN, JR.

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, January 24, 1985

● Mr. BROWN of California. Mr. Speaker, this summer will mark the 40th anniversary of the atomic bombing of Hiroshima and Nagasaki. About 65 percent of the present American population was not even born in 1945. Throughout their lives they have lived under the sway of not merely death, but human extinction. Gradually, and with a growing insidious terror until the only sane option for many is to ignore its reality, this postwar generation has watched two superpowers compete to make the most accurate, most deadly of weapons. If recent reports are accurate, our youth expect a nuclear holocaust before the end of their natural lives, and this expectation engenders hopelessness, despair, and pessimism.

A few years ago, there was a resurgence of interest in halting nuclear proliferation; an awareness that Americans, as individuals, have the power to influence the politicians who make the policy decisions to proceed with the continued acquisition of nuclear weapons. This movement resulted in the passage by the House of a nuclear freeze resolution, and the education of millions of Americans, including politicians.

Contributing to the nuclear debate was a series of articles by Jonathan Schell entitled "The Fate of the Earth." American consciences, indeed world consciences, were moved to action by his compelling portrayal of the horrors of nuclear annihilation and its consequences. But most reactions, regrettably, were rhetorical and failed to understand Schell's ultimate conclusion and challenge. To quote:

It is often said that nuclear arms have made war obsolete, but this is a misunderstanding. Obsolescence occurs when a means to some end is superceded by a new and presumably better means. But war has not been superceded by some better means to its end, which is to serve as the final arbitrator of disputes among sovereign states. On the contrary, war has gone out of existence without leaving behind any means at all—whether superior or inferior—to that end. There is no need to "abolish war" among the nuclear powers; it is already gone. The choices don't include war any longer. They consist now of peace, on the one hand, and annihilation, on the other. And annihilation—or "assured destruction"—is as far from being war as peace is and the sooner we recognize this, the sooner we will be able to save our species from self-extermination.

An immediate political and social revolution, he concluded, is necessary in order to save mankind from itself. Peace is not a technical or military problem; nuclear capability is now embedded in mankind's history. We can no more turn the clock back on this knowledge, than we can the knowledge of the lever or wheel. Therefore, we must go beyond the concept of war and its inevitable consequences and toward the concept of peace for all nations based on a collective commitment to solving the problems which create wars. We must invent the political means by which the world can peacefully settle the issues that throughout history it has settled by war.

In order to do this, we must address our common interests, our common security as a global community. Today I will be reintroducing the common security resolution. Its objective is to find the political means for the establishment of peace. Based on the 1961 joint statement of agreed principles for disarmament negotiations, also known as the McCloy-Zorin agreement, which was approved unanimously by the United Nations, this resolution calls for a multilateral, comprehensive approach to nuclear and conventional disarmament. More importantly, it would require verification of disarmament, promote institutions dedicated to peaceful resolutions of disputes, and require the peaceful development of space.

I incorporated into this generation-old proposal concepts from a more recent May 1982 report by the Independent Commission on Disarmament and Security Issues, entitled "Common Security—A Blueprint for Survival." This report looks beyond superpower confrontations to the need to hold multilateral negotiations on nuclear arms reductions, the need to limit nonnuclear weapons of mass destruction, and the need to be concerned about the international build-up of conventional weapons. This report proposes concrete, constructive remedies, and I recommend it. Significant contributions—including the title of my resolution—made by the Commission should be a starting point in the process of achieving true international security and genuine disarmament. The Chairman of the Commission, Olaf Palme, former Prime Minister of Sweden, deserves much credit.

Even without the advent of high technology weapons of mass destruction, the great philosopher, as well as politician and inventor, Thomas Jefferson, realized the importance of our political development. "Laws and institutions," he said, "must go hand in hand with the progress of the human mind. As that becomes more developed, more enlightened, as new discoveries are made * * * institutions must advance also to keep pace with the times." As each day passes and we forgo the opportunity to reduce tensions, we increase the probability that the annihilation of mankind will not come from a calculated plan of attack, but rather through miscalculation, miscommunication, or technological error.

The common security resolution is but one step toward our objective. Peace—true, lasting peace—is a treacherous endeavor. We work hard to continue the struggle with very little evidence of success. Today's introduction is not the world's salvation, but it provides the political and social avenue for each individual, acting according to their conscience, to take the responsibility to change their lives, their nation, and their world. As the famed author, Norman Cousins, has proclaimed, "Nothing is more powerful than an individual acting out of his conscience, thus helping to bring the collective conscience to life."

I welcome the cosponsorship of my colleagues on this resolution. Let us not wait for the political and military tensions to mount beyond our grasp. Let us begin to develop the new social technologies we will need for not only our children's very survial—but for the survival of their hope, their optimism, their idealism. With these, anything is possible—including peace.

H. CON. RES. 36

Whereas the United States was founded upon the principle that all people are created equal and are endowed by their Creator with the inalienable right to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness;

Whereas these inalienable rights are being jeopardized today by the unprecedented destructive power of modern weapons and the unchecked growth of national armaments;

Whereas the Secretary General of the United Nations in his 1982 report called urgently for rededication to the charter principle of collective action for peace and security;

Whereas President Reagan in his March 1983 address to the Los Angeles World Affairs Council noted, "that nations should turn their best energies to moving away from the nuclear nightmare";

Whereas the House of Representatives has passed H.J. Res. 13 (Ninety-eighth Congress), calling for the pursuit of an immediate, mutual, and verifiable freeze as an objective to the strategic arms reduction talks (START);

Whereas H.J. Res. 13 referred to the fact that the United States and the Soviet Union have previously signed a "Joint Statement of Agreed Principles for Disarmament Negotiations", known as the McCloy-Zorin agreement, which the General Assembly of the United Nations endorsed unanimously on September 20, 1961;

Whereas the United States has, as its ultimate goal, a world which is free from the scourge of war and the dangers and burdens of armaments, a world in which the use of force has been subordinated to the rule of law, and a world in which international adjustments to changing circumstances are achieved peacefully;

Whereas the fears and suspicions of, and misunderstandings among, nations make progress toward this goal difficult at the very time the increasing dangers and burdens of armaments make progress imperative; and

Whereas a decent respect for the opinion of humankind makes it incumbent on this great free Nation to set forth its vision of the world at peace and declare its willingness to move with all deliberate speed in concert with others to negotiate the agreements, conditions, and institutions for world peace and the rule of law: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That it is the sense of the Congress that the President should be encouraged in his efforts to achieve deep cuts in the amounts of nuclear weapons held by each nation and to establish a peace which will endure.

SEC. 2. The Congress would welcome an international agreement which would provide for the common security of all nations through (A) the staged, proportional disarmament of all nations until nonthreatening force levels are reached under effective international inspection and control, and (B) concurrent agreements providing methods and instrumentalities for the peaceful settlement of international disputes, for effective compliance during the staged disarmament process, and for effective enforcement as nonthreatening force levels are approached, in accordance with the following principles of the McCloy-Zorin agreement:

(1) The international agreement should specify the sequence for disarming all nations, by stages, and the time limits for each stage.

(2) The international agreement, with the understanding of all parties that the nature and extent of control will depend on the verification required for each stage, should provide such strict and effective international control at all stages that all parties could be assured that all other parties are complying with the agreement.

(3) An international security and disarmament authority should be established with its own voting procedures within the framework of the United Nations, to implement control over the inspection of disarmament.

(4) The international security and disarmament authority should have its own inspectors who should have unrestricted access without veto to all necessary places for verification at each stage of the disarmament process and its own international peacekeeping surveillance system, using the best available satellite surveillance technology.

(5) The disarmament process should proceed in such a manner that at no point could any nation or group of nations gain military advantage, and equal security is insured for all.

(6) There should be agreement among all parties before each subsequent stage in the disarmament process is begun that the preceding stage has been implemented and verified in a satisfactory manner and that any additional verification arrangements required for the next stage are ready.

(7) Progress in disarmament should be accompanied by measures to create new institutions, and to strengthen existing ones, for maintaining the peace and resolving all international disputes by peaceful means.

(8) The nations participating in the negotiations for an international agreement should strive to achieve and implement the widest possible agreement at the earliest possible date and should continue their efforts without interruption until agreement upon the total program has been achieved.

(9) Nuclear-free zones and existing treaties and agreements should be preserved and expanded as part of the negotiating process and efforts on other arms control and disarmament measures should continue in a manner designed to facilitate negotiations on the international agreement.

SEC. 3. The Congress, therefore, calls upon the President to initiate renewed serious consideration of the "Joint Statement of Agreed Principles for Disarmament Negotiations" by the appropriate agencies of the Government and to initiate joint reconsideration of the "Joint Statement of Agreed Principles for Disarmament Negotiations" with the Soviet Union for the purpose of assessing the relevance and validity of these principles today as the basis for an alternative to war. The Congress further encourages private organizations, foundations, and private citizens to assess the relevance and validity of these principles today and to determine a practical approach to achieve these goals.

SEC. 4. The President is requested to transmit copies of this resolution to the heads of government of all nations of the world and to invite their participation in establishing the common security of all nations and peace in the world.

SEC. 5. (a) The President is requested to report to the Congress by January 15, 1986 on the steps he has taken respecting this resolution and the responses received.

(b) The President is requested to submit a final report to the Congress by June 15, 1986 on the United States Government's reassessment of the "Joint Statement of Agreed Principles for Disarmament Negotiations" and the comments received from other governments.●

HOMER L. KOLIBA, SR.—CITIZEN OF THE YEAR

HON. MARTIN FROST

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, January 24, 1985

● Mr. FROST. Mr. Speaker, on January 16, former State representative Homer L. Koliba, Sr. of Columbus, TX, was honored as Citizen of the Year in the county seat of Colorado County, TX.

The membership of the Columbus Chamber of Commerce named Homer Koliba as their Citizen of the Year for his continuing lifelong effort to improve life in Columbus and the State of Texas.

Homer L. Koliba, Sr., at 81 years of age, has resided in Columbus since 1923. He had formerly lived in Yoakum.

He has served as a peace officer for many years, and he was successfully engaged in the oil and gas business prior to trying his hand at politics.

The Colorado County Citizen stated, on January 10, 1985:

As he recalls it, he lost a close race by "about 16 votes" and figured on ending his political career right there, but "when I went up to congratulate the man who beat me, he wouldn't even shake my hand. He told me to get away from him. It made me so mad I announced right there that I would run again in 1954 and I did. I beat him by about 750 votes."

Mrs. Koliba, the former Bernice Townsend, was a big part in Homer's success. She wore out three pairs of shoes in their effort.

Homer Koliba served five terms in the Texas House of Representatives, where he compiled a proud record, including a bill to provide teachers with 3-year contracts rather than year-to-year contracts.

When he left the legislature in 1963, he returned to Columbus where he and Mrs. Koliba opened the Koliba Home Museum, which is opened to the general public. Southern Living magazine will be showing the Koliba Home Museum in a future edition.

In 1979, Koliba was appointed a State parole officer by the Governor of Texas, and his record in that position stands envied by other parole officers of the State—none of the parolees he has supervised has ever had his parole revoked.

Again quoting from the Colorado County Citizen:

He (Koliba) said he tries to help them steer their lives in a productive way and proudly showed a Christmas letter he received from one former parolee who now is a minister in this area. The letter praised Mr. Koliba for his interest and gave him credit for turning the young man's life around.

No doubt, Mr. Speaker, this type of praise will continue for the deeds of Homer L. Koliba, Sr., for many years to come.

The Columbus Chamber of Commerce has chosen well.●

A BILL TO HELP THE UNITED STATES COUNTER STATE-SUPPORTED TERRORISM

HON. FORTNEY H. (PETE) STARK

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, January 24, 1985

● Mr. STARK. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing a bill that is intended to correct a grave deficiency in our ability to combat state-supported terrorism; that deficiency is the enormous difficulty the President experiences in attempting to prohibit imports from a nation that aids or abets act of terrorism. This bill gives the President clear legal authority to prohibit importation of products from any nation that provides financial or logistical support to, assists in the recruitment and training of, or provides de facto sanctuary from prosecution, to any group that commits a terrorist act against a U.S. citizen.

For example, this measure could be applied to Iran if its government takes no significant action against the terrorists who murdered two American officials aboard a hijacked Kuwaiti airliner in Teheran in December 1984. There is substantial evidence that Iran acted in collusion with the hijackers in this incident, by providing selective media access and weapons and by staging a sham rescue of the hostages. Available evidence also suggests that without Iranian assistance, the Beirut truck bombings, which cost over 300 American lives, would not have occurred. Despite its sponsorship of anti-American terrorism, there has been no limitation on Iranian exports to this country.

Presently, it is far easier for the President to prohibit or limit exports to a particular nation, and thus to hurt domestic industry, than it is for him to control the level of imports from a foreign country. In these years of weakened American commercial competitiveness, it is both ironic and unfortunate that the most energetic use of the economic sanctions available to the President that are intended to encourage change in another nation's behavior will often hurt both domestic industries and our overall international trade posture, without seriously affecting the economy of the targeted nation.

I feel this bill strengthens our commitment to combat international terrorism in several ways. It will make the threat of economic sanctions by the United States, the world's largest importer, far more serious; for our policymakers in times of crisis, it will create more options between inaction and the last resort of force.●

CONGRESSIONAL COMMEMORATIVE SALUTE TO THE UKRAINIAN PEOPLE OF THE 67TH ANNIVERSARY OF UKRAINIAN INDEPENDENCE DAY

HON. ROBERT A. ROE

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, January 24, 1985

● Mr. ROE. Mr. Speaker, I take great honor in rising today to salute the brave Ukrainian people on the occasion of the 67th anniversary of the Ukrainian Independence Day.

Mr. Speaker, January 22, 1918, was a true day of glory for the Ukrainians when their free democratic Parliament, the Rada, declared the nation's independence. But the Communist forces that had taken over Imperialist Russia during the Revolution of 1917 saw the Ukrainian National Republic as a serious threat to itself and its heinous goals.

Finally in 1922, the Russian Communists forcibly took control of the Ukraine and began a brutal repressive campaign that continues today. It is no underestimation that millions of Ukrainians have been systematically slaughtered by a series of Russian Communist regimes over the past 59 years. The Russian slavemasters have forced the proud Ukrainian people to leave their homeland and serve on factories and farms throughout the Soviet Union.

But despite all the turmoil and tragedy, the Ukrainians living in the Soviet Union have somehow managed to maintain both their dignity and their ethnic identity. There is no question that while Russian control over the Ukraine is brutal and complete, the spirit of the Ukrainian people has never been diminished.

The Soviet ruling elite should take note that while it maintains political control over its nation, it will never be able to obliterate the strong national traditions held by millions of people living in the Ukraine, the Baltic States, Byelorussia and the Transcausus.

Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the people of the Eighth Congressional District of New Jersey and the people of New Jersey, I join in saluting the heroic Ukrainian people on the anniversary of this important day in their lives. May it serve as a hope for all Ukrainians to maintain in their hearts, that with God's help, their self-destiny as a nation may once again become a reality.●

THE 67TH ANNIVERSARY OF UKRAINIAN INDEPENDENCE DAY

HON. BERNARD J. DWYER

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, January 24, 1985

● Mr. DWYER of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I wish to join my colleagues in commemorating the 67th anniversary of Ukrainian Day.

As the Ukrainian people commemorate the anniversary of their declaration of independance, they continue to face serious threats to their language, culture, and their very existence. Indeed, we know that those who speak out against oppression will receive long terms of imprisonment for espousing the principles of democracy and freedom.

I wish to take this opportunity to reaffirm my commitment with those in the Ukraine who suffer from the oppression of totalitarianism. Let us remember their brave struggle for freedom and national identity after decades of Soviet occupation. The daily indignities to which the Ukrainians are subjected to should serve as a constant reminder to us in the Free World.

These statements are now an essential ingredient in the worldwide effort to aid the Ukrainian people. So today, we the people of the United States, in conjunction with other nations of the world rededicate ourselves to the cause of human rights, democratic self-rule and freedom. The desire for liberty and independence for the brave people of the Ukraine must be kept alive. As representatives in the Free World, we shall continue to share with their aspirations for freedom and independence.●

A PROUD LITTLE TOWN

HON. DOUGLAS APPLEGATE

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, January 24, 1985

● Mr. APPLEGATE. Mr. Speaker, the Ohio Valley and, in particular, eastern Ohio, have always taken the avocation of sports very seriously. This could never be better demonstrated than by relating to you and the Members of the House of Representatives the story of a small community in my congressional district.

The village of Lansing, with a population of 600 people, is a very proud little town and with every reason to be so. It was here where four of this country's outstanding athletes were born and raised.

John Havlicek enjoyed a brilliant 16-year career with the Boston Celtics of the National Basketball Association which earned him selection to the National Basketball Hall of Fame. He is also a member of the Ohio State University Sports Hall of Fame and the Upper Ohio Valley Dapper Dan Hall of Fame. John is now a businessman who resides in the Boston area.

Phil Niekro has enjoyed 21 seasons in the National and American Baseball Leagues. After 20 years of pitching with the Atlanta and formerly Milwaukee Braves, Phil was traded to the New York Yankees where he will again play this year for the second year. He enters this campaign with 284 career victories.

Joe Niekro, who is Phil's brother, will be playing his 19th season this year as a member of the Houston Astros. He enters 1985 with 193 career victories including earlier stints with the Chicago Cubs, San Diego Padres, Detroit Tigers, and Atlanta Braves. Before turning pro, Joe was an NAIA All-American pitcher for a national championship West Liberty State College team.

The Niekro brothers combined career victories total 477 and stand as the second highest ever for brothers in the major leagues.

And fourth from this community is Bill Jobko, a seventh round draft pick of the Los Angeles Rams of the National Football League. After four seasons with the Rams, Bill was traded to the Minnesota Vikings and played there for another 4 years before being traded to the Atlanta Falcons in the teams initial year, 1966; 1 year later, Bill joined the Falcons' scouting staff and has remained with the club ever since, including his current position as pro player personnel director.

With these stellar athletes all being from this community, it is easy to see why there is the pride that exists in Lansing. The town is to be congratulated for its contribution to the world of sports, and these fine men for the thrills, excitement, and entertainment they have provided over the years.●

FRED W. MANNING

HON. PAUL E. KANJORSKI

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, January 24, 1985

● Mr. KANJORSKI. Mr. Speaker, recently a distinguished gentleman, and friend of mine from Carbon County, PA, was honored by his neighbors.

The Mauch Chunk Historical Society in the very historic town of Jim Thorpe named Fred W. Manning as their 1984 Citizen of the Year.

His selection for this award reminds us all how America depends on people like him—who through their civic involvement and community commitment—keep our country strong. Fred Manning's values, his selflessness and his devotion as a husband, father and a grandfather are vital to our Nation.

Day in and day out, people like Fred Manning make contributions to the fabric of this Nation which are not recognized nationally, but nonetheless—their role is important to our national betterment.

I'm proud to represent Jim Thorpe, the Mauch Chunk Historical Society, and its members. I'm proud Fred Manning and his family are constitutents of mine. And I'm especially pleased to be able to share with my colleagues the inscription on Mr. Manning's plaque, and his remarks upon accepting the award:

CITIZEN OF THE YEAR AWARD—1984: FRED W. MANNING

In Recognition for Outstanding Service to Jim Thorpe, PA;

Sterling Citizen, Humanitarian, Advocate of Historical Restoration, Responsible Industrialist and Beloved for His Fine Qualities by Family and Friends;

By the Mauch Chunk Historical Society, December 29, 1984.

REMARKS BY FRED W. MANNING

In history it is said that we study and look to the past so that we may preserve the good of the past and be inspired to meet the changes and challenges of the future.

I am sure that is the objective of the Mauch Chunk Historical Society: To preserve the history of richness, and of the beauty, and in every sense of the word—the uniqueness of Jim Thorpe.

Your society and other agencies under the direction of our progressive county commissioners may well be considered a catalyst of the changes that are taking place in our county to make many Pennsylvanians aware of us.

The natural beauty of the area and of the historically-renowned structures of a bygone era are again being recognized. This is good for our economy because it promotes tourism. But it is also good for history. Efforts such as yours show that preservation need not be only an academic or aesthetic endeavor.

Our county's historic sites are being revitalized and brought to new life for the enjoyment and edification of people from far and wide. One of those sites which my family is pleased to have renewed is the Hooven Building.

As owners of the Hooven Building, we are happy to be part of that effort that takes historic sites, renovates them and preserves them for future generations of Pennsylvanians—and indeed, Americans. I hope by your honoring me tonight that others will hear and see the value of such efforts and in years to come many other individuals will be honored for having taken the same type of action.●

A CONGRESSIONAL SALUTE TO THE SACRAMENTO SHERIFF'S POSSE

HON. ROBERT T. MATSUI

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, January 24, 1985

● Mr. MATSUI. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor a group of fine Americans, the Sacramento Sheriff's Posse. I take great pleasure in commending this outstanding group of lawmen for their selection to participate in the 50th Presidential Inauguration.

The Sacramento Sheriff's Posse, under the leadership of Sacramento Sheriff Robbie Waters, represents the culmination of dedication to the ideals of horsemanship and law enforcement. The Posse exemplifies the spirit of California and has represented Sacramento County throughout the Nation with pride and dignity. The Third Congressional District of California has been duly represented by this remarkable organization.

Mr. Speaker, it is not surprising that the Sacramento Sheriff's Posse has twice been selected to honor the President of the United States on the occasion of his inauguration. In the over 30 years that the Posse has been organized as a drill team, they have been awarded over 20 California State drill team championships. This consistently demonstrated level of excellence, coupled with other numerous awards and honors that have been bestowed upon the posse, is indeed commendable. I ask my colleagues to join me in saluting this talented organization.●

TRIBUTE TO PAUL GONZALEZ

HON. ESTEBAN EDWARD TORRES

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, January 24, 1985

● Mr. TORRES. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take the opportunity to commend the accomplishments of one of our dedicated athletes in the east Los Angeles community, Paul Gonzalez. Paul Gonzalez was awarded a gold medal in the 1984 summer Olympics held in Los Angeles.

The 23d summer Olympiad brought excitement and splendor to many amateur athletes participating in this sport spectacular. Paul received his gold medal in the lightweight boxing competition.

Paul Gonzalez story is unique and deserves mention. Paul came out of the barrio of east Los Angeles and his prior involvement in street gangs could have steered him toward a troublesome future. However, through the support and encouragement of Al Stankiweicz, a Los Angeles police officer, Paul's energies were geared toward the boxing ring. Mr. Stankiweicz has also been responsible for coaching Paul in the boxing arena for the past 10 years. Paul has earned the privilege of serving as an exemplary model for many young Mexican Americans in the barrios of east Los Angeles.

Mr. Speaker, this story serves as a vision of hope which should be viewed with optimism. At a time when many of our teenagers are victims of violence and involved in criminal activity in our communities, it is encouraging to see young men like Paul Gonzalez shattering the negative influences of their environment and fulfilling a dream. I know that Paul is proud of his Olympic accomplishment. He should also be proud that he can help others to fulfill their dreams and aspirations. I would like to thank him for his perseverance and stamina. Paul Gonzalez is truly a leader.●

ST. CHARLES BORROMEO PARISH CELEBRATES 50TH ANNIVERSARY

HON. STAN LUNDINE

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, January 24, 1985

● Mr. LUNDINE. Mr. Speaker, today I should like to offer a few words of praise for the St. Charles Borromeo Parish of Elmira Heights, NY.

This is a special year for the parish. This January St. Charles Borromeo is celebrating its 50th year as an independent parish. The month of May will mark 25 years that it has been located at its present site. It is, therefore, fitting that we take a few moments to recognize the parish's record of service to the people of Elmira Heights.

St. Charles Borromeo, archbishop of Milan, helped lead the efforts to reform the Catholic Church from within during the 16th century. The archbishop not only set an example by his conduct, but also worked to improve the religious education of children. He founded the Confraternity of Christian Doctrine, which established the first Sunday schools and educated over 40,000 youths.

The St. Charles Borromeo Parish has followed in this august tradition. It provides religious instruction to the young, at both the grammar and high school levels. Over the past 50 years, the parish has set an example by its outstanding conduct, in providing spiritual leadership and guidance to its parishioners. It has also sponsored innumerable activities, such as outings and dinners, and offered a variety of services, including the distribution of Christmas food baskets, that have nurtured and aided the community.

I am certain that my colleagues join with me today in congratulating the St. Charles Borromeo Parish on its 50th anniversary and wishing it the best for the years to come.●

ARLINGTON COUNTY POLICE DEPARTMENT AWARDED ACCREDITATION

HON. FRANK R. WOLF

OF VIRGINIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, January 24, 1985

● Mr. WOLF. Mr. Speaker, I am extremely pleased to share with my colleagues news of a distinct honor recently received by the Arlington County Police Department located in the 10th Congressional District of Virginia which I represent.

On November 17, 1984, the Arlington County Police Department became the first law enforcement agency in the Commonwealth of Virginia and the second agency—the first nonpilot agency—in the Nation to be granted nationwide accreditation by the Commission on Accreditation for Law Enforcement Agencies. The Commission was founded in 1979 to promote excellence, efficiency, and professionalism throughout our Nation's law enforcement agencies, approving law enforement standards and administering a voluntary accreditation program.

Through accreditation, law enforcement agencies at the State, county, municipal, or local level gain objective testimony that they meet professional criteria. The accreditation process for law enforcement agencies was completed in 1983 with the publication of 944 standards which deal with almost every aspect of law enforcement. In accomplishing the objective of accreditation, the Arlington County Police Department complied with all of the mandatory and over 90 percent of the nonmandatory standards.

Chief of Police William K. Stover is to be commended for his excellent leadership of the men and women of the Arlington County Police Department. All the members of the department and the citizens of Arlington County can take great pride in the achievement of accreditation status for the Arlington Police Department and the recognition of the department as one of the finest law enforcement agencies in the United States.●

RIATA RANCH COWBOY-GIRLS

HON. CHARLES PASHAYAN, JR.

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, January 24, 1985

● Mr. PASHAYAN. Mr. Speaker, in March Equitana '85, an event billed as the "World's Fair of Horses," will be held in Essen, West Germany. One of the featured performances at Equitana once again will be five young women from Exeter, CA, known as the Riata Ranch Cowboy-girls.

The Riata Ranch Cowboy-girls of 1985 are the result of some 28 years of patient training and guidance by Tom Maier of Exeter during which over 2,100 young women have learned the fine points of the difficult and sometimes painful sport of trick riding. The riders begin with the basics, which include the unglamorous tasks of cleaning stables, horses, and tack, feeding their mounts, and all the other work involved with their four-legged performing partners.

During the 28 years he has served as coach, teacher, and on-the-road father to the riders, Tom Maier has also worked to overcome personal tragedies, including auto and riding accident injuries, and a bout with cancer.

Not all the 59 girls who signed up to become a Riata Ranch rider this season will become members of one of the three performing teams. Many students drop out during the years of arduous training required to qualify for team membership.

But acceptance as a member of the Riata Ranch red, white, or blue team can mean travel and the opportunity to perform at a variety of events. The blue team, composed of girls 13 years of age and under and headed by a 21-year-old Lillis Lancaster, performs at some 18 California rodeos each year. Twenty-one-year-old Jennifer Welch heads up the white team of high-school-age riders which performs at special events in the United States, including the Olympics.

The Riata Ranch varsity is the red team, headed by Maier. Jana and Kathy Copley, Julie Negard, and blue and white team leaders Lancaster and Welch make up the red team, which has appeared in Austria, Belgium, Canada, the United Kingdom, France, Germany, Holland, Italy, Japan, Switzerland, and all over the United States. Riata Ranch riders have also performed on many network and local television shows.

Mr. Speaker, the young women who are the Riata Ranch riders and their founder and mentor, Tom Maier, deserve our thanks and appreciation for their continuing efforts to serve as unofficial ambassadors-on-horseback as they travel around the world providing entertainment and an outstanding demonstration of American equestrian skills. Citizen's efforts such as theirs offer an excellent example of unofficial but personal diplomacy that can improve understanding between the peoples of this troubled world.●

INTRODUCTION OF HOUSE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION EXPRESSING OPPOSITION TO MEDICARE AND MEDICAID BENEFIT CUTS FOR ELDERLY AND POOR

HON. EDWARD R. ROYBAL

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, January 24, 1985

● Mr. ROYBAL. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to introduce a House concurrent resolution which states that Congress is opposed to any Medicare and Medicaid changes which reduce eligiblity and benefits or increase costs to our Nation's most vulnerable citizens—the elderly and poor.

Given that the elderly are already using a large portion of their income for health care, it is totally unreasonable to make that burden heavier. The administration's proposals for premium increases and benefit cuts will place an even greater burden on the elderly. If these proposals were enacted, the elderly would have to pay an average of about $2,300 for health care in 1988. This amounts to 18.3 percent of their limited incomes and is substantially higher than the 15 percent they were paying before Medicare and Medicaid began. Cutting Medicare payments to hospitals and doctors will also cause major problems if the cuts are too deep or if the elderly are not adequately protected from cost shifting and reductions in quality. I oppose any Medicare cut which increases the elderly's costs or threatens their access to good quality care.

The Medicaid Program has also been targeted for major cuts by the administration. Tragically, the poor and elderly already suffer from Medicaid's limited eligiblity and benefits. This administration again fails to address the problems faced by our most vulnerable citizens and intends to make these problems worse. Coupled with the cuts proposed for Medicare, the Medicaid cuts will be especially harmful to the poorest elderly. Faced with the proposed Federal cuts of averaging $346 per elderly recipient in 1988, the States will undoubtedly cut back on Medicaid. This is an injustice I cannot accept. No further cuts should be made to Medicaid's already restricted eligiblity and benefits. Instead, Congress and the States must take steps to deal positively with gaps in Medicaid eligibility and coverage.

Rather than creating more problems for the elderly and poor, it is high time that the administration focus its efforts on helping to make an intolerable situation tolerable. This concurent resolution provides the House, and hopefully the Senate, an opportunity to express its opposition to any cuts which harm this Nation's elderly and poor citizens.●

THE CIVIL RIGHTS RESTORATION ACT OF 1985

HON. CLAUDINE SCHNEIDER

OF RHODE ISLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, January 24, 1985

● Mrs. SCHNEIDER. Mr. Speaker, last June the House of Representatives reaffirmed its commitment to civil rights by overwhelmingly approving H.R. 5490, the Civil Rights Act of 1984. That vote expressed our intention to overturn the Supreme Court's decision in Grove City College versus Bell, and to ensure a return to comprehensive coverage of antidiscrimination statutes protecting women, minorities, the elderly and the disabled. Unfortunately, as we all know, that bill ran into road blocks in the other body and died at the close of the 98th Congress.

Today, the fight to overrule the Grove City decision begins in this Congress. I am pleased to join my distinguished colleagues on both sides of the aisle in introducing the Civil Rights Restoration Act of 1985. The bill we introduce today will clarify once and for all the coverage of title IX of the 1972 education amendments, title VI of the 1964 Civil Rights Act, section 504 of the Rehabilitation Act, and the Age Discrimination Act. By defining the meaning of the term, "program or activity," in each of these four statutes, we remove the ambiguity that misled the Court in Grove City, and make it clear that anywhere taxpayer money goes, taxpayer supported prohibitions on discrimination follow. This bill makes it clear that Federal money cannot be used to support discrimination on the basis of gender, age, race, national origin, or physical handicap.

The need for the Civil Rights Restoration Act of 1985 is clear, and the time for action is now. I urge my colleagues to join me in supporting this critical legislation.●

WORLD FREEDOM DAY

HON. PHILIP M. CRANE

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, January 24, 1985

● Mr. CRANE. Mr. Speaker, as the hostilities in Korea came to a close at the beginning of 1954, a very significant event took place. More than 22,000 of the North Korean and Chinese Communist troops that were being held in allied prison camps refused to be repatriated. In spite of intimidation and threats from other Communists, they marched out of the camps to freedom. This occurrence in a very real sense epitomizes what has been going on since the advent of communism as millions have fled Communist oppression for the freedom of democratic nations.

Other individuals have remained in Communist countries to wage the battle for freedom there. But in either case the struggle against Communist oppression that has been diligently and bravely carried on is indeed worthy of recognition and support. The example set by the many fearless martyrs who have given their lives in this struggle is an inspiration to all people everywhere, but expecially to those who live beneath the yoke of communism.

I am reminded of the words of the great patriot of this country, Thomas Jefferson. He must have understood very well the price of freedom, for he stated: "The tree of liberty must be refreshed from time to time with the blood of patriots * * *." Certainly those who have given their lives in the struggle against communism know all too well the meaning of Mr. Jefferson's words. I have no doubt that they considered it not only a necessity but an honor to give their lives for freedom.

Mr. Jefferson also made another statement that bears repeating as we honor those who have sought freedom from Communist repression. He once declared that: "I have sworn upon the altar of God, eternal hostility against every form of tyranny over the mind of man." The tyranny that the Communists have tried to exercise over the minds of the free peoples in this world must never be allowed to triumph. I know that it never will, for the spirt of liberty is strong and will remain strong. It is our duty, indeed our privilege, to support this ongoing struggle to restore the lost principles of political and cultural self-determination that have been wrested from those living under Communist tyranny.●

COMMEMORATING THE 67TH ANNIVERSARY OF UKRAINIAN INDEPENDENCE

HON. FERNAND J. ST GERMAIN

OF RHODE ISLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, January 24, 1985

● Mr. ST GERMAIN. Mr. Speaker, as an American of Ukrainian descent, I am proud to commemorate January 22, 1985, as the 67th anniversary of the proclamation of independence in Ukraine. Although the independent republic lasted only 3 years, the Ukrainian people remember and continue to seek their freedom despite years of harsh Communist rule. We, too, remember and take the opportunity of this anniversary both to celebrate the spirit and determination of the Ukrainian people and to condemn Soviet action to oppress this spirit and punish that determination to be free.

The people of Ukraine are fighting an ongoing Soviet campaign to eradicate Ukrainian culture and national identity, and they face persecution and violations of their human rights for these efforts. In places like St. Michael's Ukrainian Orthodox Church of Woonsocket, RI, parishioners work to keep the Ukrainian heritage alive, and I am pleased to be a part of the annual recognition of the anniversary of Ukrainian independence.●

IN TRIBUTE TO THE HONORABLE SHELDON H. GROSSFELD

HON. ROBERT T. MATSUI

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, January 24, 1985

● Mr. MATSUI. Mr. Speaker, one of my most respected and civic-minded constituents, the Honorable Sheldon H. Grossfeld, a faithful public servant to the State of California and long time superior court judge, has announced his retirement.

Sheldon Grossfeld's first introduction to the legal process was as an assistant counsel for the California Department of Finance in 1960. What followed was a meteoric rise through the judicial ranks of California, culminating with a 7-year stint as a judge of the Sacramento Superior Court. Judge Grossfeld is noted for his expertise in matters of criminal procedure and evidence. At the time of his retirement, he was recognized as this country's leading authority on capital murder cases. He shared this knowledge with other judges by teaching a course on death penalty trials, while serving as a member of the faculty of the California Continuing Judicial Studies Program. His farsightedness in this area has frequently anticipated changes in the law, thus enabling Sacramento County to avoid costly reversals and retrials of serious cases.

Mr. Speaker, Judge Grossfeld will also leave behind a superlative record as a civil court judge. His skills at settling cases enabled the Sacramento County Superior Court to maintain its fine record of keeping down the backlog of untried cases. He knew from experience how cases would be resolved by the trier of fact. He shared this experience with his litigants, and they soon developed a sense of confidence in his opinion and his judgment. His expertise and devotion to his job will be sorely missed by both his colleagues and by the people of California.

Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the citizens of Sacramento, I extend my thanks and best wishes to the Honorable Sheldon H. Grossfeld. We can rest assured that his new pursuits in the private sector will be as creative and fulfilling as those he has devoted to public service.●

ANATOLY SHCHARANSKY—YET ANOTHER BIRTHDAY IN PRISON

HON. BENJAMIN A. GILMAN

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, January 24, 1985

● Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, this past Sunday, January 20, Anatoly Shcharansky celebrated his 37th birthday in a Siberian labor camp in the infamous Soviet gulag. This birthday is his eighth in captivity, since he was arrested and given a 13-year sentence for the false charge of treason, as an agent of the United States.

Although those of us in the United States may be particularly thankful that 1984—George Orwell's year of Big Brother—has come and gone, with our personal freedoms in this country maintained intact, the grim implications of that novel continue to manifest themselves in the Soviet Union's treatment of Anatoly and all other outspoken Soviet Jews. For those imprisoned and refused Jews of the Soviet Union, every year is 1984, and what we refer to as the Iron Curtain has become an iron wall. The doors of emigration have been slammed shut, where only 896 Soviet Jews were granted emigration visas to freedom during 1984.

But none of those now imprisoned have come to symbolize the Soviet Jewry movement more than Anatoly Shcharansky. Though over the years he has been deprived, denied and maltreated, his spirit has remained strong. The crux of Anatoly's situation rests with our ability to continue to monitor Soviet activities, and to speak out at every opportunity. Now, as we enter 1985 and U.S.-U.S.S.R. arms control talks, Congress and the President must absolutely make Anatoly's well being and release our No. 1 human rights priority. In the past the Soviets have denied Anatoly medical treatment when it was requested. Yet we do know that Anatoly was recently transferred to a hospital for an undisclosed illness. If the Soviets have assented to hospitalization, his situation must have been grave indeed.

Having recently returned from a trip to the Soviet Union, I can assure my colleagues of the gravity of the situation facing Anatoly Shcharansky and other Soviet Jews. Their only crime is the desire to practice their Judaism openly, and to live a life of religious freedom in Israel.

As we join Anatoly Shcharansky in commemorating his 37th birthday, let us greet this new year with renewed commitment to our brethren in the Soviet Union. If not for our efforts, Soviet authorities would be more than pleased to allow Anatoly to languish or even disappear in the vast expense of the Soviet gulag. Let us remind the Soviets that we will continue to protest and to speak out and act on behalf of Anatoly Shcharansky, until the day he is released and allowed to reunite with his wife, Avital, in Israel.

Avital, in recognition of Anatoly's 37th birthday, said:

I hope and pray that we can celebrate Anatoly's 38th birthday in Israel . . . in peace and in freedom."●

UKRAINIAN INDEPENDENCE

HON. JOE MOAKLEY

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, January 24, 1985

● Mr. MOAKLEY. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to commemorate the 67th anniversary of the proclamation of independence in Ukraine.

The years that the Ukrainian people have been forced to live under Soviet control have been hard and harsh. Through deportations, executions, starvation, and collectivization, millions of men, women, and children have been victims as their Communist overlords have attempted to tighten their grip on the country.

Most admirable and encouraging, however, is the fact that despite deliberate attempts to destroy the Ukrainian culture and people, their spirit of freedom, lust for liberty and sense of national pride is as strong as it was 67 years ago when they declared their independence. Such fervent desires and aspirations express for us today the emotions and hopes our Founding Fathers had over 200 years ago.

Mr. Speaker, I consider myself most fortunate to live in a country that entitles me to freedom and independence. I cherish these privileges more than anything. I volunteered for the service during World War II because I believed so strongly that these essential rights should and must be protected. My heart goes out to the people of the Ukraine. I realize the agony that these freedom loving people must be experiencing. Therefore, I urge my fellow Members of Congress to join in not only condemning the oppression that still plagues the people of the Ukraine—but to also support and encourage their struggle to regain their freedom.●

BIG BROTHER/BIG SISTER APPRECIATION WEEK

HON. GEORGE W. GEKAS

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, January 24, 1985

● Mr. GEKAS. Mr. Speaker, many times adults forget that the most important and sometimes the most trying times in a person's life are those years when we are growing up and experiencing many of life's adventures for the first time. Big Brothers and Big Sisters is a group that has been formed to provide to many underprivileged kids an experienced ear with whom they can discuss problems and ask questions so that they will understand and appreciate each step of the process of growing up.

February 17, 1985, marks the beginning of Big Brother/Big Sister Appreciation Week. This commemoration was designated by the President and Congress so that all Americans can show their support and appreciation for the time and effort put forth by this small but dedicated group of volunteers. These men and women use their free time to develop a 1-on-1 relationship with underprivileged children, giving those children opportunities they may not otherwise experience and allowing the boys and girls to spend more constructive time with a concerned adult.

Today, when so many people are in such a hurry to get from one place to another and many disregard the small pleasures in life, it is nice to know that some still take the time to spend a few hours each week making the children of America feel appreciated, needed, and loved. May the work of the Big Brothers and Big Sisters continue for years to come and may the stream of volunteers continue to flourish as they have in the past with such dedicated and respected individuals.●

TAXING THE ELDERLY

HON. DENNY SMITH

OF OREGON

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, January 24, 1985

● Mr. DENNY SMITH. Mr. Speaker, I have long been concerned about the massive budget deficits that threaten to destroy our economy. For several years now I have been pushing for a 1-year freeze on all Government spending. Such a freeze would save the Government $35 billion in 1986 alone, and would give us an opportunity to identify what long-term structural changes can be made to reduce Government spending and cut the deficit.

Deficit reduction should not be achieved, however, by filling the Treasury's coffers with taxes from senior citizens on fixed incomes. I have always been opposed to the taxation of Social Security benefits. Therefore, I am introducing two bills today concerning taxes recently imposed on certain benefits.

The first bill is an outright repeal of the provisions of the 1983 Social Security amendments that instituted taxation on up to one-half of the benefits received by individuals earning over $25,000 or couples earning over $32,000.

This new tax penalizes individuals for past, unalterable, decisions concerning savings and investments. Hardworking individuals who were able to set-aside funds for their "Golden Years" are now being hit with an unanticipated tax by the Federal Government. The Government should be encouraging self-sufficiency in retirement years, not discouraging it.

Unlike other taxes, Social Security withholding has never been a deduction for the computation of Federal tax liabilities. Therefore, benefits currently paid out are based on contributions that have already been taxed, resulting in double taxation on these funds.

The budget will never be balanced by simply raising taxes. Tax increases have only fueled further spending increases. How many times has this body approved tax increases on the promise of further spending cuts? Yet we never see the spending cuts.

While I favor an outright repeal of the taxation on benefits—and will push for such legislation—something must be done to ensure that while such legislation is still on the books, it is not applied to lower income social security recipients.

Under current law, the income thresholds for taxation of Social Security benefits aren't indexed for inflation. In 1984, 9 percent of Social Security recipients faced an increased tax liability because of the new law. The Social Security Administration estimates that by 1990, 17 percent of all recipients will be affected by these tax provisions. I am, therefore, introducing a bill to index the income thresholds.

There is much talk on the floor of this Chamber about compassion for the elderly in our great Nation. I ask my colleagues to join me in turning talk into action by eliminating the taxes on benefits that the elderly earned throughout their working years.●

OUTSTANDING YOUNG ATHLETES

HON. GENE CHAPPIE

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, January 24, 1985

● Mr. CHAPPIE. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to recognize the outstanding achievement of the Pleasant Valley High School girls' basketball team of Chico, CA. Recently USA Today ranked the Pleasant Valley girls as the ninth best team in the whole country.

These fine young athletes have amassed an overall record of 15–0 and are most certainly bound for postseason play. I speak for all of the people of the Second District of California in expressing our pride. These young ladies and their coach have demonstrated a high level of skill and commitment.

Mr. Speaker, this team has earned a mark of distinction with their fine play, and they have the best wishes of all the people of the Second District of California. We are tremendously proud and wish them the best of luck.●

A BILL TO PROVIDE EQUITABLE TAX TREATMENT FOR FISHERMEN

HON. JOHN R. McKERNAN, JR.

OF MAINE

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, January 24, 1985

● Mr. McKERNAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to introduce a bill which, although negligible in cost, would provide significant benefits to many fishermen in Maine and elsewhere in this country. This legislation would amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 to provide that certain fishermen, who are treated as self-employed for Social Security and Federal withholding purposes, are treated as self-employed for pension plan purposes as well.

Mr. Speaker, much of the Tax Code recognizes the self-employed status of most fishermen. As self-employed individuals, they incur the same tax burdens as any normal business. In general, self-employed individuals are entitled to take advantage of tax-leveraged retirement funding mechanisms, such as Keogh plans. Because group retirement funds are not practical in the fishing industry due to frequent crew turnover, Keogh-type plans offer an ideal means for individual fishermen to provide themselves with a more secure future. But, in that portion of the Tax Code which deals with pension plans, fishermen are not considered self-employed, and are thus not eligible to establish their own Keogh plans.

I do not believe that it was the intent of Congress to establish a tax disparity of this nature. In fact, Congress has already acted to rectify similar situations affecting other groups of taxpayers, including traveling salesmen, pieceworkers, and ministers.

The bill I am introducing simply includes fishermen, who work aboard boats with fewer than 10 crewmen operating on a share basis, I believe that this measure represents sound public policy and I urge my colleagues to support this effort.●

A TRIBUTE TO ROBERT F. BARRETT

HON. RICHARD C. SHELBY

OF ALABAMA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, January 24, 1985

● Mr. SHELBY. Mr. Speaker, on Friday, February 1, the Alabama Power Co. will honor a man who has given the major part of his professional life in service to the company.

After 43½ years of service, Mr. Robert T. Barrett will retire, and his friends and neighbors, including myself, feel that his exemplary career should be brought to public attention as a model for those who are inspired by dedication to duty.

Bob started as a groundman in the construction department in 1941 when he was 19 years of age. From 1945 to 1968 he was a lineman working in Carbon Hill, Winfield, Haleyville, Dora, and Columbiana. Bob was made local manager of the Centreville office in 1968. He returned to Columbiana in 1973 as local manager of the Columbiana office.

Not only has Bob worked hard in the company, but he has been active in various civic affairs and organizations. He has served on the Columbiana Library Board, been a long time member and served as its chief of the Columbiana Fire Department. He is also a member of the Columbiana Kiwanis Club and is immediate past president of the organization.

During World War II, Bob served with Patton's 3d Army, 80th Division from 1942 to 1945. He was a German prisoner of war the last 6 months of the war.

Bob is married to Mary Wicker and they have two daughters, and five grandchildren.

Mr. Speaker, Bob Barrett is the kind of man who makes America work. The qualities of a good employee—dedication, trustworthiness, diligence, and loyalty, are all abundant in Bob's character.

All of us should take a moment and reflect on this attitude toward life. We need more men like Robert F. Barrett who have given so much of themselves in helping others. He is a fine father, husband, conscientious businessman, and leader in the community.

Not many people achieve the measure of admiration and respect that Bob has enjoyed. He earned that respect because he has always truly cared about the people he served and about the welfare of his community. There is no doubt in my mind that this tribute is well deserved by this outstanding individual.

I am honored to be able to share this exceptional story with my colleagues in in the House of Representatives, and certainly wish Bob well in his future endeavors.●

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES—Monday, January 28, 1985

The House met at 12 noon and was called to order by the Speaker pro tempore [Mr. WRIGHT].

DESIGNATION OF SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following communication from the Speaker:

WASHINGTON, DC,
January 23, 1985.

I hereby designate the Honorable JIM WRIGHT to act as Speaker pro tempore on Monday, January 28, 1985.

THOMAS P. O'NEILL, Jr.,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

PRAYER

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Our prayer for today will be offered by an old friend, the former Chaplain of the House of Representatives, Dr. Edward G. Latch.

The Reverend Edward G. Latch, D.D., former Chaplain of the House of Representatives, offered the following prayer:

They that wait upon the Lord shall renew their strength.—Isaiah 40:31.

Eternal God, our Father, unto Thee do we lift up our hearts in prayer. Always art Thou with us and now we pray that Thou wilt help us to be aware of Thy presence that by clear thinking, clean living, and a creative faith we may find Thy Spirit arising with new life within us. We pray for strength to resist evil, strength to overcome temptation, strength to do what we ought to do, and to live as we ought to live. O God, come into our hearts and help us to do for ourselves what we cannot by ourselves—win the struggle over our own weaknesses.

Bless our President, our Speaker, all Members of this body, and those who work for them and with them that together we may make and keep our Nation good and sound and wise: For the glory of Thy name and the good of all our people. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has examined the Journal of the last day's proceedings and announces to the House his approval thereof.

Pursuant to clause 1, rule I, the Journal stands approved.

COMMUNICATION FROM HON. HENRY J. HYDE, MEMBER OF CONGRESS

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following communication from Hon. HENRY J. HYDE, Member of Congress:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, DC, January 23, 1985.

Hon. THOMAS P. O'NEILL, Jr.,
Speaker, House of Representatives, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. SPEAKER: This is to notify you, pursuant to rule L(50) of the Rules of the House of Representatives, that I have received a deposition subpoena issued by the U.S. District Court for the District of Columbia.

I will, in consultation with the general counsel to the House, make the determinations required by the rule and will promptly notify you of those determinations.

Sincerely,

HENRY J. HYDE.

MAJORITY LEADER CLARIFIES ISSUES CONCERNING THE FEDERAL DEFICIT

(Mr. ALEXANDER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks and include extraneous matter.)

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I report to my colleagues and to those persons interested the statement of the majority leader in the news conference this morning. It is an important step in trying to come to grips with the most preeminent issue facing our Nation—the Federal deficit.

The majority leader points out that if we as a nation are to come to grips with this wrenching problem, it is necessary for both the White House and Congress to first agree on the facts. He referred to a comment of the President on his inauguration which clearly misstated the facts. He said that Congress is the problem in that it had appropriated more funds than requested by the President over the last 50 years.

I will submit today an exact reproduction of a chart which shows that on last year the President submitted a budget request for appropriations of $568 billion. The Congress acted upon that request by reducing it to $551 billion for a reduction in amount of $17.3 billion. In fact, the record will show that only four times in the past 40 years has Congress appropriated more than the President requested.

Mr. Speaker, I urge all persons of concern to refer to the record.

Mr. Speaker, the material to which I referred earlier is as follows:

SPEAKER'S PRESS CONFERENCE, MAJORITY LEADER WRIGHT PRESIDING, JANUARY 28, 1985

Mr. Wright made a short statement on the "three myths" of the Reagan Administration.

"The first myth was contained in the statement made by the President during his Inaugural Address. The President said that 50 years of deficit financing had finally caught up with us. He was seeking, obviously, to spread the blame among all the Administrations of the past 50 years. This was grossly inaccurate. The budget crisis that we face today was brought about by the policies of the past four years. Approximately four years ago today, we reached a national debt of $1 trillion. Before this year is out, the debt will be $2 trillion. We will have added more to the national debt in five years of this Administration than was added in the preceding 192 years of our nation's Constitutional history. The Administrations of Washington to Jimmy Carter, inclusive, did not add as much to the debt as these five years of Mr. Reagan. It is just a myth to say that it has been over the last 50 years.

"The second myth is contained in a report in yesterday's Washington Post. It was quoting some comments made by the President in an interview with radio broadcasters in which he is quoted as saying that Congress is to blame for the huge deficits of his first term. That is just a falsehood. This is in quotes—'Every budget that we have submitted since I have been here (left a smaller deficit) than what Congress finally agreed to.' This is an inaccuracy and a misstatement. Last year the House budget would have reduced by $181 billion the deficit projected by the President in his budget request for three years. After the Senate refused to go along with some of our reductions, we still passed a budget for the next three years that is approximately $130 billion less than Mr. Reagan's. Now, if he (Reagan) wants to talk only in terms of spending—if he really meant appropriations—last year, for fiscal '85, he asked for $568 billion in appropriations. Congress appropriated $551 billion. That is $17.3 billion less for the current fiscal year than the President requested. So it is grossly inaccurate for him to say that Congress is to blame. He is misstating facts.

"The third of the myths, which we will touch on very lightly because it should be self-evident that it's not true, is what Mr. Weinberger said—that defense spending does not contribute to the deficit. That is outrageous and ridiculous. Spending a dollar on a bomb adds as much to the deficit as spending a dollar on a school book. Defense spending has increased dramatically during the last four years. In 1980, Congress appropriated $146 billion. For the current fiscal year, we appropriated $292 billion. Mr. Weinberger is asking for $313 billion for the current budget. It is, of course, preposterous to suggest that military spending is not spending.

"So that is it. I hope that we can work together with the White House. We want to, and I would like very much to see things such as they were when Eisenhower was President and Johnson was in the Senate and Rayburn was in the House. The Speaker will bend over backward to try to be conciliatory and helpful, but these misstatements are not helpful."

CONGRESS SPENDS LESS THAN PRESIDENT REQUESTED

Information from the House Appropriations Committee shows that Congress appropriated about $17 billion less than the President requested for fiscal 1985. The following table gives details. Figures from the Senate Appropriations Committee are in agreement.

AUTHORIZING ACQUISITION OF SHUTTLE FOR DOD

(Mr. KRAMER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. KRAMER. Mr. Speaker, as the controversy surrounding the just completed secret military mission of the space shuttle Discovery clearly demonstrates, neither NASA nor the Defense Department benefits when their two vital missions in space are closely intertwined.

Therefore, I will soon introduce legislation that will authorize acquisition of a fifth space shuttle—to be owned and operated by the Department of Defense.

NASA's job of free and open research and development of new civilian space systems—such as the manned space station—is not consistent with secrecy. The Defense Department's job of national security space missions requires it.

The bill I will introduce—which is similar to a provision of my People Protection Act, introduced in the last Congress—will bring our shuttle fleet up to the full strength originally planned for: Free NASA of the burden of secrecy it now must bear and give Defense the flexibility and security it needs to accomplish its necessarily secret shuttle missions.

It will also have the added benefit of freeing funds now spent by NASA for shuttle operations to be used for new R&D work—the job NASA was created to do in the first place.

LET'S NOT ELECTROCUTE OUR FARMERS

(Mr. GLICKMAN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. GLICKMAN. Mr. Speaker, John Block, in describing the current farm situation, is quoted in yesterday's Washington Post as saying that "the circuits are overloaded and this is the time to tough it out." It sounds to me like he is saying the only answer to our farm problem is to let our farmers be electrocuted. I, for one, don't accept that solution, and I trust the Congress will not be party to signing this kind of death warrant for this Nation's farmers.

We do have to hold the line of farm program spending, just as we have to hold the line on spending across the board. That does not mean telling farmers who have made many of their management decisions based on directives from the Federal Government that they are going to have to go cold turkey and make it on their own. It means, instead, that we are going to have to target farm support payments to those small and midsized farm operations which have been the backbone of the agricultural productivity which has been so important to this Nation's strength. It means trimming back and holding the line on Federal farm spending, not pulling the plug on farm programs carelessly.

Times are tough in farm country, but the Federal Government should be looking for ways to help out, not telling farmers to tough it out.

INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION TO REPEAL IRS LOGBOOK REQUIREMENTS

(Mr. MARLENEE asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. MARLENEE. Mr. Speaker, there is a revolution brewing. Just one more little shove by the IRS; one more little abuse by the tax collectors; one more push by Congress which should be responsible for regulations, and we will lose the voluntary tax system.

A few more regulations and we will surely turn our monetary system into an uncontrolled, underground, and barter system.

Hundreds of Montanans join me in protesting the so-called IRS logbook requirements, and today I'm introducing legislation repealing this section of law.

Businessmen, farmers, and ranchers are revolting against efforts to turn them into paper pushers.

These regulations are a repulsive intrusion into everyday life, and a total mockery of the Paperwork Reduction Act.

Mr. Speaker, the following letter is typical of those I received:

DEAR RON: I made the following five entries in my truck log this morning before 9 a.m. and they total only 4 miles!

Barn to heifer pen—picked up calf and back to barn.

Barn to east pasture to put out salt and mineral blocks, then to shop.

Shop to corral to fix broken gate, then to house to call bank about loan.

House to stock pond to bust up ice so cattle can drink, back to shop for parts.

Shop to tractor with new brake parts.

Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to join me in totally repealing this provision of last year's tax law.

UPDATE ON H.R. 600, THE TAXPAYERS' RELIEF ACT

(Mr. ROEMER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. ROEMER. Mr. Speaker, as the first Member of Congress to warn you about the proposed changes in deducting legitimate business expenses, I want to give you an update on our progress.

I introduced H.R. 600, the Taxpayers' Relief Act, weeks ago on behalf of several Members of Congress. We have received overwhelming bipartisan support totaling almost 100 Members of Congress, with more cosponsoring each day. In response to our efforts and other efforts, the IRS has now revised their proposals, throwing even more uncertainty into the marketplace. That is not good enough. The cure is still worse than the disease.

We are going to keep the heat on. We want the complete elimination of the contemporaneous records provisions. We need your help.

We are not on the Ways and Means Committee, but we have millions of taxpayers who were affected by the turn of events.

Are you tired of waiting for someone else to correct their mistake? If so, make a stand. Join with us in cosponsoring H.R. 600 now.

CONSTITUENTS ANGRY OVER IRS UNREASONABLE RECORDKEEPING REQUIREMENTS

(Mr. ROTH asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. ROTH. Mr. Speaker, I would like to join my colleagues in expressing my concern about the contemporaneous recordkeeping requirements of the IRS.

I have received literally hundreds of letters from all over the country regarding this provision. The theme is the same in every letter, that is, that these recordkeeping requirements are unworkable and are a real impediment to a good business climate and the creation of jobs. A letter from a constituent of mine in Pound, WI, sums it up by saying, "With all the IRS regulations, a person won't have time to make a living." I agree.

I think the IRS is well aware of the problem it has caused by these unreasonable recordkeeping requirements. It has agreed to carve out some of the exemptions for our farmers and those using their vehicles consistently and constantly during the working day; but I think that we have to agree with our constituents and say that this is not going to solve the problem.

Now, we simply must return to a commonsense approach to recording vehicle use for business purposes. I urge my colleagues to either join with my legislation or some of the other legislation that has been introduced so we can correct this problem.

SUPPORT H.R. 531, TO REPEAL IRS CONTEMPORANEOUS RECORDKEEPING

(Mr. ANTHONY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, I introduced H.R. 531. It is a piece of legislation to repeal the contemporaneous recordkeeping to claim the business use of not only automobiles, but airplanes, computers, and other business equipment.

Unfortunately, when that piece of legislation was introduced, Congressman HAROLD VOLKMER of Missouri was inadvertently left off.

Mr. Speaker, I ask now unanimous consent for Congressman VOLKMER to be listed as an original cosponsor.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. ALEXANDER). The gentleman should submit a new list of cosponsors as of today.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, I will submit a new list with Congressman VOLKMER's name on it.

THE CITY OF ANDERSON, IN, FIRE DEPARTMENT ENERGY CONSERVATION PROGRAM: A STORY OF SUCCESS

(Mr. BURTON of Indiana asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. BURTON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, the city of Anderson, IN, fire department stands as a model for fire departments throughout our Nation. Anderson has eight fire stations and several years ago faced a critical budget crunch. But instead of closing some stations and forcing people out of jobs, they rallied behind Deputy Chief Carl Greenlee and began an innovative energy program to save money.

They proceeded to insulate and remodel their buildings one by one. Five of the eight are completed. They've spent $25,000 on remodeling, and saved over $60,000 on utility bills alone. The city received a special Energy Conservation Award from Donald Hodel, Secretary of Energy, as well as several other awards. They have also had their tips on saving energy published in several national magazines.

Credit goes to many, but Chief Greenlee deserves a special salute. He has been tagged "Kilowatt Carl" for leading the energy savings program which earned the city of Anderson its reputation for innovative ideas. This is quite a feat for any municipality to achieve, and I think the Anderson Fire Department is to be congratulated, and emulated.

The DOE award to Anderson, IN, fire department read as follows:

THE U.S. DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY AWARD FOR ENERGY INNOVATION FOR 1984

Presented to the Anderson Fire Department for distinguished contribution to our Nation's energy efficiency.

Signed, Donald Paul Hodel, Secretary of Energy.

OCTOBER 1, 1984.

IN SUPPORT OF HUTTO'S BIENNIAL BUDGETING BILL

(Mr. HUTTO asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. HUTTO. Mr. Speaker, today I have introduced a bill, along with Mr. ASPIN, Mr. LOTT, and Mr. COURTER, that would amend the Congressional Budget Act of 1974 to provide for a 2-year (biennial) budgeting cycle.

We believe the primary issue for the 99th Congress is to get a handle on Federal spending, and we are convinced that going to a 2-year budgeting cycle will help considerably.

Unlike previous bills that have been introduced, under our proposal, the Congress will complete all authorizing and appropriating actions during the first year of the cycle. A single concurrent resolution on the budget for the 2 fiscal year period will be completed by May 15. The second year of the cycle will be devoted to planning, evaluation, oversight and supplemental funding and emergency authorization.

The arguments in favor of the biennial approach are:

All Federal agencies could plan better because of greater funding certainty, thus improving program efficiencies and reducing costs.

With the number of budget measures cut in half, Congress would move through legislative agendas in a more deliberate and orderly fashion.

Provide more time for nonbudgetary matters and for oversight activities.

Should give Members more opportunity for reflection and review, thus improving the quality of legislation and congressional responsiveness to policy issues.

Starting the 2-year cycle on an odd-numbered year (1987) will result in these very specific advantages:

It simplifies the transition from an annual to a 2-year cycle.

It schedules the primary budget votes in nonelection years.

It allows new Members, and a new President, to quickly make their imprint on budget policies.

It reserves a full year (the second session) principally for oversight activities.

We urge the Members of this House to endorse our biennial budgeting bill.

THE WORSENING PLIGHT OF THE FAMILY FARM

(Mr. ROSE asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. ROSE. Mr. Speaker, we have all heard in recent days about the cry for help from rural America. Well, if the farmers of America think they have lost their shirts so far, what the Reagan administration has in mind for them will take their britches as well.

I have just gotten a copy of a portion of a budget that will be moved soon through the Senate that will literally eliminate all farm price support programs, terminate the dairy program, cut farm credit, eliminate the Soil Conservation Service, slice the Farmers Home Administration in half and do all of it in the Senate in the name of a budget reconciliation package that will then be shoved over here to us, with the President's blessing on TV telling the American people that he must have this package if he is to reduce the deficit.

I want to reduce the deficit, Mr. Speaker, but I do not want to do it at the expense of the family farm. If you are concerned about the future of rural America, you should call anybody that you know in a farm organization that can band together with us to help us stop these kinds of tragic, unfair, insensitive cuts that this administration has planned for the people that live in rural America.

ONCE AGAIN IRS REACHES OUT TO HARASS THE FARMER AND SMALL BUSINESSMAN

(Mr. VOLKMER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. VOLKMER. Mr. Speaker, once again, Members of the House are being inundated by angry calls and letters from the people of America. Once again, the regulatory power of the Internal Revenue Service reaches out to harass the farmer and small businessman with new reporting requirements that would tax the patience of Job. To be fair, the IRS is only responding to the directives given them by our colleagues in the other body. However, they manage to find the most burdensome way to do so.

To repeal this ridiculous recordkeeping requirement, I have joined with my distinguished colleague from Arkansas [Mr. ANTHONY] in sponsoring H.R. 531. I urge the Committee on Ways and Means to make this legislation its first order of business so that we can relieve the business taxpayer of this paperwork nightmare as quickly as possible.

THE MONTGOMERY INITIATIVES

(Mr. MONTGOMERY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. MONTGOMERY. Mr. Speaker, we must take responsible action aimed at reducing the mounting Federal deficit. I believe that increased reliance on our National Guard and Reserve forces is an effective method of reducing the defense portion of the Federal budget.

The Armed Services Committee recognizes the very significant contributions made by the Reserve components of our Armed Forces. In last year's committee report on the DOD authorization bill, a number of initiatives were recommended which were designed to increase the effectiveness of the Reserves. While I do not agree with all of the recommendations, I feel the report serves as an excellent basis for development of additional initiatives.

Accordingly, I have developed a package of seven initiatives which I believe will further enhance the readiness of the Reserves. The initiatives which I plan to pursue through appropriate congressional activity and legislation include: First, selected reserve manpower; second, IRR manpower; third, training; fourth, family support; fifth, employer support; sixth, equipment; and seventh, facilities.

These initiatives were developed in close concert with the leaders of the Guard and Reserve communities, both military and civilian. I know of no other occasion when all of these leaders have come together in such a spirit of cooperation. I thank them for their advice and continued efforts.

Beginning this week, I will speak on each individual initiative and introduce associated legislation. I hope that the membership will be able to support my efforts at achieving a more Ready Reserve Force and, in turn, a more secure nation.

ATTORNEY GENERAL WILLIAM FRENCH SMITH ON PAY EQUITY

(Ms. OAKAR asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Ms. OAKAR. Mr. Speaker, I am outraged by the article which appeared in yesterday's Outlook section of the Washington Post by the departing Attorney General, William French Smith, lambasting pay equity.

It is unfortunate that the Attorney General has denigrated such an important civil rights issue affecting millions of working women in this country—pay equity. While he shrouded himself in legalistic rhetoric, the Attorney General has simply added his name to a long list of administration officials who have chosen to deride pay equity. We all remember Clarence Pendleton's statement that pay equity is looney tunes and Linda Chavez statement that it will ruin the economy. Instead of seeking to eliminate sex-based wage discrimination wherever it may exist, this administration has decided that the market should be left untouched, permitting such discrimination to continue. If we were to have adopted this philosophy years ago, we would still be living in a society that advocates slavery and child labor abuse.

Based upon the course which Attorney General Smith has chosen to travel, I would not be surprised if the Justice Department filed an amicus brief in the AFSCME versus Washington case, against the employees who are seeking relief from discrimination.

Mr. Speaker, it is high time this administration opened its eyes to the realities surrounding the pay equity issue and began working to support, rather than thwart, the law.

PROVIDING OF INFORMATION BY THE PENTAGON TO FAMILIES OF MIA'S AND POW'S

(Mr. DORGAN of North Dakota asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. DORGAN of North Dakota. Mr. Speaker, several families in North Dakota have sons missing in action in Vietnam for more than 10 years. A few months ago, they received a letter from a Vietnamese physician in a refugee camp in Thailand who said, "I have seen your sons. They are being held prisoner in Vietnam."

I talked with the Pentagon about this report. The Pentagon assured me they had interviewed the Vietnamese who wrote to these families. The Pentagon also assured me that the information was false. I looked at the Pentagon's information, including an interview of the Vietnamese source, and determined myself that this was a hoax, a very cruel hoax. You can imagine what it did to the families that received it.

Then, I asked the Pentagon to send the families the report of the interview with the Vietnamese physician. The Pentagon said, "Well, we can't do that. That report is classified confidential."

That is a very low level of classification. They stamp a classification on just about everything over there.

I said, "Wait a second. We are dealing with families who have received information from someone who said they know where their sons are. You owe this information to them. You owe them that interview that was conducted with that source. You owe these families an explanation why you think that source is false."

I have been working with the Pentagon for 90 days to try to get this information to these families. Still no luck.

The next time the Pentagon says they are working with all MIA families, giving them all of the information, I say, don't you believe it. The Pentagon is not responding as fully as they should to these families. These families deserve that information, and I intend to keep after the Pentagon until they get it.

The Pentagon is not going to discontinue hearing from me until they come clean.

Let us send all of the information to the MIA families. That is the very least the Pentagon owes those families.

CONNECTICUT COMMEMORATIVE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. MCKINNEY] is recognized for 5 minutes.

● Mr. MCKINNEY. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing legislation marking the 350th anniversary of the State of Connecticut. The resolution requests that the President of the United States issue a proclamation encouraging the people of the United States to reaffirm their pride in Connecticut's history and development, and to observe this year with appropriate ceremonies and activities.

In October 1635, 50 Pilgrims from the settlement of New Town, now Cambridge, MA, assembled all of their belongings and traveled southwest. They were in search of more fertile land and greater autonomy. The Pilgrims settled at a place they called Suckiaug, now Hartford, CT, marking the beginning of our State.

Connecticut has had an integral role in shaping our Nation's heritage and history. Connecticut was the first State to form a government "by the people" through the Fundamental Orders of 1639. The Connecticut delegates to the Constitutional Convention in 1787 are credited with breaking the deadlock which almost caused its premature adjournment. Unable to decide upon the organization of the legislative branch, the delegates accepted Roger Sherman's "Connecticut Compromise," which created the Congress comprised of the Senate, elected by State legislatures, and the House of Representatives, apportioned by State population and elected by the people.

We were granted our charter from the King of England in 1662. Physically, the State was quite different then. The Connecticut Colony was partitioned 73 miles wide, and steteched from Narragansett Bay in Rhode Island to the Pacific Ocean. It was not until the late 1700's that Connecticut established its modern borders.

During the Revolutionary War, Connecticut enarned the nickname "the Provisional State." As a chief supplier of food, shelter, and munitions to the Colonial Army in its struggle for freedom, Connecticut was instrumental in securing our Nation's independence.

Today, Connecticut is recognized nationally as one of our Nation's largest supplers of copper products, ball bearings, clocks, and insurance. We are a leader in producing defense, transportation, and hardware equipment.

Connecticut, however, is foremost distinguished by its people. Throughout our history, we have strongly adhered to the principles of Yankee ingenuity and independence in government, industry, and our private lives, which are exhibited in our achievements.

Mr. Speaker, the people of Connecticut take great pride in the heritage and history of their State. We look forward to an auspicious anniversary, and as a central element in our celebration, we ask for early consideration of this resolution.●

ECONOMIC PLIGHT OF AMERICAN FARMER

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Ms. OAKAR). Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ALEXANDER] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Madam Speaker, today during earlier proceedings under the 1-minute rule, several of our colleagues took the well of the House to address their concern for the desperate economic plight of the American farmer.

Over the weekend, the Washington Post featured an article which described the economic depression of the American farmer throughout America, and one of the statements quoted an Iowa farmer who said, in desperation, "The people in Washington don't know or care about farmers any more."

While it is of little consolation to the farmer in Iowa to know that people in Washington do know about their circumstances, I wish to include, nonetheless, the contents of the Washington Post article as a part of the record so that it may be distributed throughout the land so other Americans might be advised of the situation which we address.

Meanwhile, I want to assure Members of Congress who are representatives of farm States who are meeting in order to adopt a policy which will be an alternative to the current policy of this administration to provide relief for American agriculture.

I include the Washington Post article as follows:

[From the Washington Post, Jan. 27, 1985]

FARM FAILURES THREATEN TO RESHAPE RURAL U.S.

(By Ward Sinclair)

DES MOINES, IOWA.—All across the winter-blitzed Midwest, the clouds of a massive agricultural economic crisis are quickly taking shape, threatening to throw thousands of farmers out of business and send country banks and businesses toppling.

The Great Farm Shakeout that many have predicted since 1981 appears to be at hand, with no clear sense of how far the ripples of failure will reach into the national economy or of how rural America will be reshaped.

The fears and frustrations of farmers, public officials and businessmen, whose cries for emergency federal credit assistance show little sign of being heeded, are compounded by a feeling that Washington isn't listening and doesn't care.

On Friday, for example, as Iowa Gov. Terry Branstad was saying that he saw a bit more sympathy developing in the Reagan administration, newspapers were quoting Agriculture Secretary John R. Block as saying, "The circuits are overloaded [and] this is a time to tough it out."

Officials and economists in Iowa and Nebraska say the next two months are critical to agriculture, with 1984 notes coming due and farmers going to lenders seeking credit to put in the new crops. Thousands will not get it, leaving them in foreclosure or bankruptcy, and leaving their heavily leveraged farm-supply creditors in the lurch.

More ominously, Iowa State University economist Neil Harl said last week, at least 40 percent of the farmers in the North Central region—Minnesota to Missouri, Ohio to Kansas—have such burdensome debt that they are "on a conveyor belt, headed down . . . headed toward insolvency" in the next several years.

Those farmers are in jeopardy, Harl explained, because their debt loans are growing rapidly while the value of their assets, such as land and tractors, is dropping steadily. Only a surge in farm prices or a sharp interest-rate drop will help them, and few economists foresee either.

Harl added, "The next 70 days are vital because the decisions are going to be made on who gets credit. We are going to go through a terribly stressful period. . . . We must use this time creatively. We know times are stern in Washington, but we do believe we have to have some federal assistance to avoid the devastation. If, at least, we don't keep interest payments current, then lenders are going to go down the tubes also."

In Washington, farm-state legislators are pressuring the administration to quickly come up with additional credit and loan guarantees to help the battered farm sector through the growing storm. Senate Majority Leader Robert J. Dole (R-Kan.) and others want a presidental task force to tackle the problem.

Whatever is done must be done swiftly, officials, here say. In Iowa, the nation's No. 2 farm-income state, economists say that as many as 17,000 of the 113,000 farmers will go under by late spring as their applications for 1985 operating-money are rejected. More than 130 banks in Iowa are listed by the state as having "more than normal problems" and 48 of them are on a Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. "problem list."

In neighboring Nebraska, where about two of every five jobs are related to agriculture and where six country banks and two farm-credit banks have failed since Labor Day, at least 10 percent of the 63,000 farmers are expected to shut down for lack of operating credit.

"The problem is at the crisis stage," Nebraska banking commissioner Roger Beverage said. "There sure as hell is no economic recovery in Nebraska and it spills into all we do on Main Street . . . It is a parade of horribles. The people in Washington have to realize this is not a joke. This is a depression."

The story is similar all around the Midwest, the fertile bread basket that produces the bulk of the wheat, corn and soybeans that feed the nation and bring in billions of export dollars.

The reasons for the crunch of 1985 are many, but they can be boiled down this way: Low farm prices, continuing high interest rates, plummeting land and machinery values that rose beyond worth in the inflationary 1970s, a strong dollar that has depressed exports and overproduction of basic goods.

A key culprit is the interest rate that has stayed high as inflation cooled. Illinois farmers, for instance, have paid more than $1 billion in interest in each of the last two years, compared with $430 million in 1977. Nebraska farmers, with the sixth largest debt load in the country, have paid more than $1 billion in interest in each of the last three years, compared with $50 million in 1960.

"High real interest rates and rising debt loads have combined in the 1980s to sap the strength of the Illinois farm economy," said John White Jr., president of the Illinois Farm Bureau. "Lower interest rates could help bring profit back to the farms."

But, added Iowa Gov. Branstad, "It is a lot more than just the farmers. We are talking about businesses on Main Street. President Reagan's debt-restructuring program hasn't worked and it appears that the Office of Management and Budget has blocked the key elements to make it work . . . The downward spiral is speeding up and it has deteriorated even further in the last few months."

Both Branstad and Harl, in separate interviews, described their alarm after meeting last week with OMB Director David A. Stockman. Both said that Stockman lectured them and Block about the administration's determination not to provide a bailout for a localized problem.

These and other Washington reports have ignited bipartisan fears that the administration has decided to pull the plug on an industry that it believes has more producers and more production capacity than it needs.

In Nebraska last week, farmer-rancher Tom Vickers, also a state senator, said, "The Nebraska economy has been on a downhill slide for a number of years. We're about to see a disaster this state hasn't seen since the 1930s. Farmers and bankers are going to go under, and what happens here affects the whole nation."

The state legislature quickly passed a Vickers resolution calling on the legislatures of nine nearby farms states to send a delegation to Washington next month to try once more to deliver the call for help. Several states already have joined Vickers' campaign.

Bruce Johnson, an economist as the University of Nebraska, added that "literally half of the state's agricultural wealth has been lost since 1981. This ripples up through the financial institutions. When you aggregate the loss, how many banks does it take to affect national institutions? Crisis is not too strong a word to use for what is happening out here."

The numbers generate strong fears. William Nichol, the Republican speaker of the state legislature, said, "I am frightened and I never have been frightened before—and I lived through the Great Depression. Nothing is of any value and there doesn't seem to be anything to change it. I see nothing but deterioration in the months ahead."

"It's scary, sure it is," added GOP state Sen. Rod Johnson, 27, a farmer who chairs the legislative agriculture committee, "and we're not sure the federal government understands what is happening. I think Ronald Reagan owes the farmers something."

Adding to the current mix, many rural banks and farms of the farmer-run credit system have started to tighten the screws on borrowers who are not delinquent on loans, insisting that they sell land and equipment on a market where such commodities are going at firesale prices—if a buyer can be found.

"Some banks are notorious on this, said the Rev. David Ostendorf, Midwest director of Rural America. "People are then forced to go to the Farmers Home Administration or elsewhere to seek credit—and those systems are struggling already. People are being dumped every day, and it's outrageous."

As the tension and the frustration build, farmers have begun to band together to draw attention to their plight. A St. Paul, Minn., rally last week drew 10,000 protesters. Another 4,000. Farmers fill the state capitol building here daily, lobbying their legislators, and they're planning a major rally for Des Moines next month.

The Iowa Farm Unity Coalition, a family-farm-advocacy organization that has operated an informational telephone hot-line for farmers since late 1982, also is stepping up its efforts to publicize the crisis. This week, for example, it will attempt to stop another forced sale of farm machinery—a practice that has become increasingly common throughout the region.

The coalition also is promoting a campaign to force Branstad to declare a moratorium on loan foreclosures. The Iowa legislature has passed a resolution that could lead to declaration by the governor of an economic emergency and possibly a moratorium. Branstad has appointed a committee to study the idea.

"People out here have begun to realize that the whole house will topple if we do not take steps very soon," said Ostendorf, who also is a coalition official. "The question is whether we can act fast enough and get a response from Washington. It will mean a massive amount of money for debt restructuring and it will mean a new federal-state relationship in debt handling."

"We wouldn't have been in this situation if public officials had taken the appropriate steps three years ago. It could have been avoided if the politicians had listened," Ostendorf said. "Now they're reaching for the panic button and we're into crisis management once again."

CONNECTICUT'S 350TH ANNIVERSARY

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Connecticut [Mrs. KENNELLY] is recognized for 5 minutes.

● Mrs. KENNELLY. Madam Speaker, this year marks the 350th anniversary of the founding of the State of Connecticut. In recognition of our State's rich heritage and tradition, I am pleased to join my fellow colleagues from Connecticut in sponsoring this resolution.

In 1635, pilgrims migrated from the Massachusetts Bay Colony and established settlements in the towns now known as Hartford, Wethersfield, and Windsor. Since that time, Connecticut has played an important role in the history and industrial development of the United States. In 1787, Connecticut delegates to the Constitutional Convention drafted the Connecticut Compromise which in turn broke a deadlock over how many men each State should be elected to the U.S. Congress. The compromise established the present bicameral legislature and earned Connecticut the nickname of the Constitution State.

Connecticut is the birthplace of mass production manufacturing thanks to the ingenuity of Eli Whitney who pioneered mass production techniques in Hamden. Eli Terry of East Hartford became the first person to make clocks by mass production in 1808. Two years later Samuel Colt of Hartford invented the first successful repeating pistol. Connecticut continues to take a strong industrial role in promoting our Nation's economy as one of the largest suppliers of copper, ball bearings, clocks, and defense systems. Connecticut has contributed to the well-being of our Nation by developing and maintaining a leading position in the services industry. The first insurance policies covering accidents, automobiles, and aircraft were written in Hartford.

Finally, I would like to mention that I am proud of Connecticut's rich heritage in the areas of education and literature. Yale University, founded in 1701 is the third oldest university in the United States. The Nation's first law school was founded in Litchfield in 1784, and the first free American school for the deaf was founded in Hartford in 1817. Currently, Connecticut has 24 universities and colleges accredited by the New England Association of Schools and Colleges.

In the field of literature, Hartford has the honor of being the home of Mark Twain between 1874 and 1891, during which time he wrote and published seven of his major works. Harriet Beecher Stowe also resided in Hartford from 1873 until her death 23 years later.

I hope all of my distinguished colleagues will join me commemorating the 350th anniversary of the founding of Connecticut and support the joint resolution.●

THE CURRENCY DESIGN ACT

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ANNUNZIO] is recognized for 5 minutes.

● Mr. ANNUNZIO. Madam Speaker, on January 3, 1985, I introduced H.R. 48, the Currency Design Act, which would give Congress the final decision in any proposed design changes of our currency and coins.

The passage of this bill is more urgent than ever. On the basis of a hypothesized threat to our currency posed by possible advances in color copier technology, the Treasury Department is considering currency design changes to be implemented late in 1986. The changes under consideration include background tints, patterns that change depending on how they are viewed, and security threads. Millions of dollars have already been spent on the research and development of these expensive new devices. The Treasury believes that future improvements in color copiers could turn counterfeiting from a crime of expertise to a crime of opportunity. With improved color copiers, they assert, anyone could spend lunch breaks printing up extra 20's for weekend sprees in Atlantic City. These color copiers, however, do not exist. And before the hypothetical threat is confirmed, the Treasury is planning to spend millions more on printing and distribution. Without the Currency Design Act, the American public might wake up some morning in 1986 to find that the currency in their pockets looks more like Cracker Jack prizes than money.

We have learned—sometimes painfully—that the final success or failure of any coin or note depends upon how well the public receives it. If the Government spends millions of dollars to produce money which is shunned by the public, as has happened in the past, those millions will be spent for naught.

Article I, section 8 of the Constitution gives Congress authority over U.S. money. As elected representatives, we in Congress are naturally more sensitive and responsive to the people's opinions, concerns, and desires than are appointed officials. Every day we correspond with our constituents trying to fulfill the will of the people. In matters that deeply and personally affect each and every American citizen—matters such as the design or our money—the Government must be as receptive as possible to public input.

Congressional approval in these matters is vitally important in order to ensure the success and popularity of new currency designs. Without the kind of public dialog that occurs only via the elected representatives in Congress, new currency designs are liable to fail.

Wasted money, resources, and energy are the surest results of new money produced without public consultation. The public was not properly consulted with regard to the size of the Susan B. Anthony dollar. Eight hundred fifty-eight million dollar coins were minted, and today, due to its unpopularity, 497 million—over half—are sitting idle in useless storage at the Mint and Federal Reserve. Besides initial minting costs, the storage of these coins costs over $40,000 a year.

The $2 note is another case in point. Despite the lesson learned with the failure of the $2 notes; despite the numerous studies indicating no public demand for a $2 note; and despite the teller confusion the notes were known to generate, the Treasury printed the notes in 1976, shrugging off all warnings as superstitious prophecies of doom. The Treasury Department unleashed great publicity schemes urging the public to employ the new $2 note. Millions of dollars were spent in handling, printing, distributing, and, in the end, storing the unused $2 bill.

The waste generated from the production of the Susan B. Anthony dollar and the $2 bill directly results from misunderstanding the public's needs and desires. Changes in the design of our money have to be made only with the people's knowledge and approval. The American public must not be rudely surprised by a behind-the-scenes bureaucratic decision changing our money. That type of decisionmaking leads only to the failure of new currency and coins and millions of dollars wasted.

The Currency Design Act would eliminate such surprises and waste. Americans have a right to know what their Government is doing in all matters. They especially have a right to know what kind of money they will be carrying in their pockets. With the successful passage of H.R. 48 that right will be upheld.●

TRIBUTE TO THE HONORABLE JOHN W. BYRNES

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI] is recognized for 5 minutes.

● Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Madam Speaker, I had the privilege to serve with our former colleague, John Byrnes, for 14 years in the House of Representatives and for 9 years on the Committee of the Ways and Means.

During his 28 years of service in the House, John Byrnes was esteemed by his colleagues for his intellectual and political leadership. His reputation as a skilled negotiator and compromiser was well deserved as evidenced by a solid record of legislative achievement.

John Byrnes participated actively in the development of all major economic legislation in the post-World War II period, as well as the recodification of the Internal Revenue Code in 1954. As ranking minority member of the Committee on Ways and Means, John made critical contributions to important legislative initiatives in the areas of tax, trade, social security, health, and welfare, including the enactment of two landmark bills: Medicare in 1965 and the Tax Reform Act of 1969.

The bipartisan cooperation between John Byrnes and our former chairman, Wilbur Mills, is now legendary. That legend is clearly supported by a legislative record of distinction. However, the tradition of bipartisanship—of political cooperation in the Nation's best interest—is more than merely a legend around the Committee on Ways and Means. Bipartisan cooperation, as practiced by John Byrnes, is a tradition of which all Members of Congress can be proud, and a standard to which all Members should aspire.

Madam Speaker, as impressive as his congressional service was, I will best remember John Byrnes as a personal friend who in 1964, when I first jointed the Committee on Ways and Means, went out of his way as ranking minority member to befriend the most junior member of the committee. He will be truly missed. LaVerne joins me in extending our condolences to his wife and family.●

BLACK HISTORY IN PRINCE GEORGES COUNTY

HON. STENY H. HOYER

OF MARYLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, January 28, 1985

● Mr. HOYER. Mr. Speaker, last year I submitted remarks for the RECORD in honor of Black History Month regarding the Plummer family of Prince Georges County. My remarks were based primarily on the research of Miss Bianca Floyd, project manager of the black history project of the Maryland National Capital Park and Planning Commission. In the past year, Miss Floyd has continued her work and thanks to the Prince Georges County Council, especially Council man Floyd Wilson and Councilwoman Hilda Pemberton, a park historian aide position has been established as a career position.

One of the subjects of the research of the black history project has been black suburban community development. A number of suburban communities were established soon after the turn of the century in Prince Georges County specifically for the black middle class. One of the recommendations Miss Floyd has made to the Maryland National Capital Park and Planning Commission is that several of these communities be considered for historic status.

North Brentwood is the first black incorporated municipality in Prince Georges County. The town lies close to the northeast line of the District of Columbia. It is situated on a tract of land which was originally part of the farm of Capt. Wallace Bartlett. Captain Bartlett was a Civil War veteran who had commanded a regiment of black soldiers in Texas. Subsequent to the Civil War, Captain Bartlett settled in Maryland. He subdivided his property with the desire that it be inhabited by black families as a memorial to the soldiers who had served in his regiment. At the start of this century, the area had approximately 65 residents, and was known as Randallstown after one of its leading families.

In 1924, the town was incorporated as North Brentwood. The first mayor of North Brentwood was Jeremiah Hawkins, a native of Brandywine who was active in Republican politics in Prince Georges County for more than 50 years. He served as a delegate to four Republican National Conventions.

A second town of special note in the history of Prince Georges County is Eagle Harbor which was incorporated in 1926. Located on the site of a former tobacco farm, the town was originally started as a summertime resort for black residents of Washington and Baltimore. Although the town now numbers some 200 year-round residents, Eagle Harbor, in southernmost Prince Georges County on the banks of the Patuxent River, continues to serve as a resort for families which have been coming there for generations.

Just over the border of the District of Columbia lies Fairmount Heights. Had incorporation been granted when application was first made in 1922, it would have been the first black incorporated municipality in the State of Maryland.

Due to its proximity to the District of Columbia and its attractiveness as a community, a number of activists and professionals were drawn to Fairmount Heights. Among them was William Pittman, a prominent black architect of the early part of this century. Pittman, a graduate of Tuskegee Institute, moved to a new home in Fairmount Heights in 1907. He helped to found the first civic association and in 1911, he was hired by the Prince Georges County Board of Education to design a new high school for the community. Completed in 1912, the school housed the first industrial department for black students in Prince Georges County.

Each of the three communities which I have mentioned continue to have operating municipal governments today. Another community, the history of which has been extensively researched by the black history project, is Lincoln. Although not an incorporated town, Lincoln is located off Maryland Route 450 in the Lanham-Glen Dale area.

Thomas J. Calloway was one of the founders of Lincoln. A close friend and associate of Booker T. Washington, Calloway was a graduate of Fisk University. Prior to coming to Lincoln, he had served as president of Alcorn College in Alcorn, MS (1894-96) and assistant principal of Tuskegee Institute (1897-99). In 1899, Calloway was appointed U.S. Special Commissioner to the Paris Exposition and was responsible for organizing a photographic exhibit of black industrial education in the United States. Mr. Calloway became a practicing attorney following his graduating from Howard University Law School in 1904. He purchased a lot in Lincoln for $100 in 1910. Construction of a house on that lot was completed in 1912.

Calloway's vision was to establish Lincoln as an ideal community for black Americans. He described his vision in this way, "Lincoln, MD, has a plan to establish without restriction as to race, but primarily by, for and of colored persons, a community with its own municipal government, schools, churches, commercial and industrial life."

In 1908, the Lincoln Land & Improvement Co., of which Calloway was vice president and general manager, had purchased 200 acres of land between the Vista and Glen Dale stations of the Washington, Baltimore & Annapolis Electric Railway. Lots of 50 by 100 feet were laid out on wide streets and were sold for $270 each.

Aside from his considerable real estate investments in Lincoln and nearby Buena Vista, and his law practice, Thomas J. Calloway was active in establishment of the Bethel A.M.E. Church, later named the Seaton A.M.E. Church. Calloway was also instrumental in establishment of a school in Lincoln. It was fitting that he should serve as the first principal of the school which was opened in 1922.

In addition to the church and school, Lincoln had a general store-hotel-restaurant operated by W.A. Davis, a native of Philadelphia. The town had its own water system, gas plant and a brick factory. Although the community organization continued to develop, the Lincoln Land & Improvement Co. went bankrupt between 1917 and 1920 and housing construction ceased. The original 20 to 25 homes built in Lincoln are still standing, as is the school.

Mr. Speaker, from this brief discussion, I know that Members will be able to see the great service that the black history project is providing in adding to the historical record of my county. Compiling data from written records and from interviews with older residents, the project benefits all citizens by teaching us about the development of Prince Georges County communities. I urge the Members of Congress to encourage similar projects in their own communities and districts. Again, I commend Bianca Floyd for her work and research as well as the Maryland National Capital Park and Planning Commission and the Prince Georges County government for their support of the black history project.●

TRIBUTE TO COACH GIL RECTOR

HON. IKE SKELTON

OF MISSOURI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, January 28, 1985

● Mr. SKELTON. Mr. Speaker, I would like to honor Coach Gil Rector for being named the Missouri 3A Coach of the Year. Coach Rector has been coach at Lexington High School for 17 seasons and has led the Lexington Minutemen to three State titles in the past 8 years. I praise him for his hard work and wish him continued success in the future.●

DEPARTMENT OF DEFENSE SHOULD ALLOW TAX EXEMPTION FOR DEPARTMENT OF DEFENSE EMPLOYEES

HON. MARY ROSE OAKAR

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, January 28, 1985

● Ms. OAKAR. Mr. Speaker, late in the 98th Congress, I introduced and the Congress passed H.R. 6101, a bill which authorizes payment of a housing allowance to an executive agency employee whose permanent duty station is in the Republic of Panama.

Mr. Speaker, due to the implementation of the Panama Canal Treaty of 1977, a number of functions and associated personnel were transferred from the Panama Canal Co., and Canal Zone Government to the U.S. Department of Defense. These transfer-of-function employees, principally schoolteachers and medical personnel, were permitted to continue to rent the Panamanian-owned housing under the control of the Panama Canal Commission. This right, however, was limited by an executive agreement between our Government and the Republic of Panama that expired on October 1, 1984, when the Republic of Panama became entitled to take possession of the housing units.

Because the Department of Defense would not have had sufficient housing units to accommodate these employees and they would have had to find suitable housing on the Panamanian economy, I introduced H.R. 6101 to alleviate this problem.

The new authority to pay a housing allowance, however, is subject to the restrictions that: First, the amount of the allowance must be reduced by the amount that the employee would have paid in rent for Government quarters; and second, the allowance may never exceed the maximum set by the State Department regulations governing overseas allowances. Moreover, the housing allowance will not be paid if suitable Government quarters are available, but are refused by the employee.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 6101 was passed by the Congress under very restrictive conditions and time contraints due to the impending congressional adjournment. Just as Congress was quickly approaching its deadline to act on legislation, so was the Defense Department's ability to provide adequate housing for its civilian employees stationed in the Republic of Panama coming to an end. Due to the necessity for expeditious passage of H.R. 6101, we wanted to make certain that the allowance was available to these employees, and that related matters, such as the granting of a tax exemption on U.S. income taxes for the housing allowance, could await the current Congress.

Mr. Speaker, my new legislation would grant this tax exemption to those Department of Defense personnel stationed in the Republic of Panama. This exemption is now provided to all other Federal civilian employees stationed overseas. I see no reason why Department of Defense civilian employees stationed in the former Canal Zone should be excluded. Without the ability of the U.S. Department of Defense to provide this tax exemption to this important group of employees, I believe that a significant loss of personnel could result and recruitment and retention of replacements would be extremely difficult.

Moreover, it is important to note that the revenue lost through this much needed tax exemption will be very slight when compared to the potential loss of many valuable Department of Defense personnel.

I urge all my colleagues to cosponsor this important legislation.●

INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION TO EXTEND SECTION 127 OF THE INTERNAL REVENUE CODE OF 1954

HON. SILVIO O. CONTE

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, January 28, 1985

● Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I recently introduced legislation to extend permanently the section of the Internal Revenue Code which provides for the exclusion from income of educational assistance payments. In the 98th Congress, we passed H.R. 2568, which extended this exclusion only until the end of this year. My bill would extend the exclusion permanently.

The legislation is very important for several reasons. It is beneficial to all aspects of business, labor, and education.

Under present law, Mr. Speaker, a taxpayer generally may exclude the value of educational assistance payments—including tuition, books, fees, and supplies—provided by an employer from income. In other words, education can be purchased with tax-free dollars, even if its availability would not normally be a deductible business expense for the taxpayer.

Tax-free educational assistance allows employees the opportunity to keep their education up to date—which is a key factor in their growth potential. Not only does it allow them to function more effectively in their present jobs, but it also increases their ability for promotion. This, in turn, means increased salaries, and more taxes being paid by a more highly educated workforce.

The exclusion also benefits educational institutions. It provides a means for them to promote their own employees' education, while also increasing their enrollment with students who otherwise might be unable to afford a higher education.

The tax-free educational assistance plan is also profitable for the corporations themselves. It is essential for their productivity to keep their employees up to date on the latest changes in their field. It is also better for the morale of the company's employees if promotion is done from within—something that would not be possible if the employees were not constantly enriching themselves.

The groups most harmed by the expiration of the educational assistance plan would be women and minorities. It is essential for them to be able to continue their education if they are to remain competitive in the job market. For many, higher education would not be possible if they could not receive tax-free education payments from their employers.

Mr. Speaker, this legislation gained a great deal of support in the 98th Congress, and I urge my colleagues to support it now. I also urge expeditious consideration of the legislation by the Ways and Means Committee.●

UNEMPLOYMENT COMPENSATION/ADJUSTMENT ASSISTANCE ACT [UI/AA]

HON. FORTNEY H. (PETE) STARK

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, January 28, 1985

● Mr. STARK. Mr. Speaker, I am reintroducing today my bill from the 98th Congress, H.R. 5748, a bill to provide for 3-year demonstration projects in two States of provisions under which unemployed individuals will receive retraining, education, and relocation assistance in lieu of certain extended or other additional unemployment compensation benefits.

The Ways and Means Committee will soon be considering the Unemployment Insurance [UI] Program, since the Federal Supplemental Compensation Program will expire in March. It is my hope that the ideas contained in my bill will be explored and that there will be a willingness to test out these concepts in two volunteer States.

Let me stress that under this bill, trading in one's extended UI benefits in order to get up front cash assistance for retraining, reeducation, or relocation is strictly up to the worker. It is an option; it is not mandatory. Ideally, I would like to see additional retraining funds for workers in declining and dead-end industries. But with these growing deficits, that is not in the cards. We will be lucky to maintain our current level of job training and support programs. Therefore, I have looked to the UI Program as a possible source of no additional cost financing of worker selected retraining and relocation.

This bill is an attempt to bring some new ideas to the 50-year-old UI Program. I am open to suggestions and ideas on how to make this a better bill, one which provides more flexibility to the worker himself in the selection and use of his UI benefits and retraining opportunities.

Following is a factsheet describing the bill:

FACTSHEET

FINDINGS AND STATEMENT OF PURPOSE

Owing to structural changes in the economy and increased trade competition, millions face prolonged joblessness, lack the appropriate job skills to obtain reasonable employment, and exhaust their UI benefits without the opportunity for retraining, education, or relocation necessary to enter occupations or labor markets where job openings are available.

The budget deficits make new retraining, education, and relocation programs difficult, and require that we improve the effectiveness of existing programs.

Therefore, allowing UI recipients early in their period of regular UI benefits to obtain the cash value of the various extended UI benefits be extended benefits and Federal Supplemental Compensation, for which they will be eligible, will provide a "pool of capital" to fund retraining, education, and relocation programs without increasing the Federal budget.

INDIVIDUALS ELIGIBLE TO EXERCISE ADJUSTMENT ASSISTANCE OPTION

Any individual eligible for regular UI, in a State where extended UI benefits and/or Federal Supplemental Compensation benefits are in effect, who applies for the AA option within the first 30 days of his UI eligibilty will be eligible for the AA option.

AMOUNT OF AA

The maximum amount of AA will be the value of the various forms of extended UI available to him in his state when the individual applies for UI. In other words, the bill assumes that without Adjustment Assistance the worker will exhaust not only his regular UI, but the various forms of extended benefits available to him—and in lieu of waiting for this to happen, the bill makes available a "pool of capital" equal to what the person would have received in extended benefits.

TYPES OF AA

Retraining: If an employer hires and provides significant adjustment in the workers job skills thru retraining, then the State Employment Security Agency (SESA) may pay the employer an amount up to the cash value of the training or the individual's UIAA, whichever is less. The employer must certify that the hiring does not displace current workers. The SESA will maintain a list of participating employers for interested workers.

Education: SESAs will also maintain a list of education programs for which individuals can use UIAA as payment. The program must result in a significant adjustment in the worker's job skills.

Relocation: UIAA participants may receive job search and relocation cash allowances to help pay for the cost of looking for work outside of the normal commuting area (if the SESA determines jobs in the individual home area are not likely) and/or relocating to another area to accept employment.

FINANCING

The Federal/State share of UIAA shall be the same as their share of extended UI benefits. State administrative costs shall be covered as under current UI programs.

GROUP APPLICATIONS AND APPROVALS

For administrative simplicity, group applications for AA shall be encouraged. Thus, a union or company which is shutting down a production process could seek group approval if it is aware that rehiring is unlikely.

REPORTS AND STUDIES

A report to Congress after 1 year on utilization of the program, barriers to utilization, and how this type of program could be made available to workers not eligible for UI.

EFFECTIVE DATE

January 1, 1986, with amendments to State laws required by 1/1/88.

COST OF UIAA

Duration of unemployment for many is so long that benefits are being exhausted without alternative employment being found. The people who need Adjustment are already using up all or most of their regular and extended UI benefits. Thus, allowing them to trade in their additional benefits for Adjustment Assistance will involve little or no extra cost. Since many of these people have been in cyclical industries in long-range decline, breaking out of this cycle and into new job fields will reduce the number of "repeat" UIU beneficiaries and future UI expenses.●

FEDERAL FUNDING IS VITAL

HON. BARNEY FRANK

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, January 28, 1985

● Mr. FRANK. Mr. Speaker, recently, an extremely thoughtful editorial appeared in the Fall River Herald News about the importance of continued Federal support for several of the programs which provide assistance to older, poorer cities. The Fall River Herald News does an excellent job of monitoring the economic and political behavior of the city of Fall River. The Herald News has been a voice for fiscal responsibility, and in this very thoughtful editorial the Herald News shows a recognition that fiscal caution must not be achieved at the expense of some of our older industrial areas.

As the editorial points out, Fall River, under the able leadership of Mayor Carlton Viveiros, has spent its Federal funds wisely. There are many areas of the Federal budget in which we can make cuts. I agree very much with the points made by the Fall River Herald News about the lack of wisdom of making some of the cuts in urban-related programs which have been proposed and I insert the editorial here.

The editorial follows:

[From the Fall River (MA) Herald News, Jan. 22, 1985]

FEDERAL FUNDING IS VITAL

Mayor Viveiros has spoken out strongly against proposals reportedly contained in the administration's new federal budget.

The budget will not be submitted to Congress until the first week of February, but it is already being argued over because of the frequent informal disclosure of parts of its contents by persons involved putting it together.

What Mayor Viveiros is objecting to is the proposal that the federal revenue sharing program be eliminated as well as the block grant community development program.

The Mayor points out that Fall River uses the federal money that is received here by both programs for a wide range of essential purposes.

For instance, this city gets nearly $2 million in revenue sharing funds each year. It is used to pay the salaries of policemen and firemen, and to maintain public safety.

The funds received by the Community Development program are used for any number of civic betterment purposes. Many of those are essential to keep the city functioning effectively.

It is all very well to say the city ought to be able to pay for these things itself.

But the fact is that it cannot, and the federal money it receives has been well-spent. It has certainly not been squandered.

It is no wonder that Mayor Viveiros echoes similar expressions of alarm and dismay by the Conference of Mayors.

The reports about what the administration's budget contains may turn out to be inaccurate.

This is possible but unlikely.

What the mayors obviously hope is that if they respond vigorously enough to the report that revenue sharing and community development are to be eliminated, they will make the White House change its mind before the budget is sent to Congress.

Yet the trouble is that the federal deficits must be reduced.

Just last week the President indicated that he does not really expect to see the deficits eliminated before he leaves office, but they must be trimmed.

Everyone agrees on that, and the problem the administration and Congress are facing is how to do it.

If the reductions are accomplished entirely by cutbacks, as the President seems to wish, then it is hard to see how some extremely valuable programs can avoid being sacrificed.

But if cutbacks are combined with judicious tax increases, then it should be possible to salvage some of the vital programs.

Something along these lines is what the Conference of Mayors must seek to achieve in the next few months.

It will do no good merely to advocate retaining this or that federal program without explaining how this can be done while still reducing the deficit.

But it must not be supposed that increasing taxes, although undesirable, is totally out of the question.

A tax increase may indeed be preferable to some of the cuts that the White House reportedly has in mind.

At any rate Mayor Viveiros is right to make perfectly clear that this city is in no position to absorb the loss of federal revenue sharing and community development funds.

And if enough mayors feel as he does, it is hard to believe that Washington will ignore the clamor from cities everywhere in the country.

The battle of the new budget has not yet begun. It must not be supposed that it has been lost even in advance of the administration's budget being sent to Capitol Hill.●

THE CITY OF COMMERCE CELEBRATES 25TH ANNIVERSARY

HON. MATTHEW G. MARTINEZ

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, January 28, 1985

● Mr. MARTINEZ. Mr. Speaker, this year marks the 25th anniversary of the incorporation of the City of Commerce, CA. Since its incorporation, the City of Commerce has evolved into one of southern California's most prolific industrial communities, while providing such outstanding city services that it is a desirable place to live as well as to work.

This modern industrial city was one part of Rancho San Antonio, a Spanish land grant bestowed upon Don Antonio Maria Lugo in 1810. In the latter half of the 1850's Don Antonio portioned the rancho among his heirs. After the death of one of his daughters, he sold her portion to Abel Stearns, a New Englander who had become a merchant in Los Angeles. Stearns gradually acquired other land from Lugo heirs and eventually joined all his holdings into the 6,000-acre Rancho Laguna. This rancho included all of the present City of Commerce with the exception of the small portion south of present day Gage Avenue.

Rancho Laguna began to be broken up in 1900, and in 1922 the last of the land was sold. Subdivision of the land into what would eventually become the City of Commerce started in 1905 with the creation of the El Carmel tract, which was located in the area east of Vail Avenue. The various residential areas were created during the ensuing years. First, the northwest area was created in 1925, followed in 1928 by the Ferguson neighborhood, located on the site of the former Vail Field. The Rosewood Park area was subdivided in 1929, followed by the present southeast area in 1928 and by the Freeway tract in 1941. The Bandini-Rosini neighborhoods, which are actually the oldest of the developed neighborhoods, grew out of earlier subdivisions.

Until 1960, Commerce was an unincorporated portion of Los Angeles County. Relatively low taxes, and the superior rail facilities of Union Pacific and Santa Fe, together with aggressive real estate activities by the railroads themselves, attracted industry with increasing success. As the industrial community grew, so did the property values. Neighboring cities began to look enviously at City of Commerce's potential tax revenues.

By 1959, it was clear that Commerce would have to act at once to protect itself. Such cities as Downey, Montebello, Bell, and others were reported drafting papers and talking to local leaders about annexation. Los Angeles, Vernon, and Maywood were said to be interested.

Despite statements that annexation would be good for the City of Commerce, residents and businessmen alike feared such a fate. They saw as their "reward" higher taxes, a limited voice in their "adopting government," and possibly even fewer services than they were receiving from the county.

In June 1959, the area's business leaders formed the industrial council with the announced purpose of studying the question of incorporation. Faced with such vigorous annexation efforts by neighboring cities, the council retained a management consultant firm to make a complete analysis of the situation. When their report was published in August 1959, its authors noted that a citizens' group had already, on their own, begun the petition drive for signatures to authorize an incorporation election. The report concluded that "a future city will have an excellent chance of real success."

Incorporation sentiment was growing. Charles T. Atwood, a Lever Brothers executive and the first chairman of the industrial council, declared the council's "basic purpose is to promote the development of a model city." He pledged industry support for an improved library, better parks, swimming pool, streets, sidewalks, and curbs—which were services most frequently mentioned as needed in the incorporation survey.

The citizens' committee was chaired by Warren B. Bedell, assisted by Dean Mericle, Georgetta G. Welch, Bernice Parker, Eva Long, Mrs. Leone Thornburg, Lou Gretz, Larry Maese, Mrs. Kathryn Pahl, Mrs. Valentina Bassett, Mrs. Wilma Bedell, Mr. and Mrs. James Bristow, Mr. Leslie Mabey, Mrs. Lu Mericle, Henry Van Unen, and Earl J. Welch. This committee signed up 34 percent of the residents, representing 42 percent of the assessed valuation, although only 25 percent of each was needed.

In the special election held January 12, 1960, Commerce residents voted 895 to 283 for incorporation. They also chose, from among 25 candidates, 5 members for their new city council: Maurice Quigley, James W. Bristow, Leone Thornburg, Kathryn Pahl, and Charles F. Scheibler.

On January 28, 1960, the council elected Quigley as first mayor and Scheibler as first mayor pro tem. County Supervisor Ernest Debs swore in the mayor and council. Incorporation was now complete. Commerce became Los Angeles County's 67th city with a population of 9,555.

The new City of Commerce boasted many advantages to both residents and industry. One of the most notable was the absence of city property taxes. In the decade that followed incorporation, the city made rapid progress toward becoming the "Model City" envisioned by its founders. An olympic-sized swimming pool, built at a cost of $800,000, was opened in December 1961. A new municipal bus system, the Nation's first free bus service, was inaugurated in June 1962. This system still provides fare-free service and carries approximately 180,000 passengers annually. The post office was established in 1963.

The city began its own library operation in a rented duplex on July 1, 1961. In August 1964, the library moved into new quarters in the civic center building with 16,150 square feet of floor space. This library became known as Central Library, and to its first branch library (Atlantic Branch), it added two other branch libraries—Northwest and Greenwood—both dedicated in 1966. The library now houses over 100,000 volumes and is well known in southern California for its excellent resources for business and industry.

Recreation services grew rapidly. In addition to the indoor aquatorium facility, four city parks and park buildings were developed, along with a baseball stadium, gymnasiums, and an indoor rifle and pistol range. Today, the city's parks and recreation department provides over 1,000 activities annually.

Social services to residents included free immunization clinics and transportation for medical appointments as well as a city office for referral services and information services.

A senior citizens center was developed, offering nutritional meals and many social programs and opportunities for the seniors.

Street improvements desired by the founders were made by the city's public works departments.

The seventies saw some changes in the industrial composition of the city and new efforts by the city toward redevelopment and toward retaining old businesses and attracting new ones.

An industrial development committee was formed in 1972 to gather together Commerce's best business minds to work on long-range plans for enlarging the city's economic base. Tom Hall, general manager of the industrial council, was appointed to that post by then-Mayor Michael V. Guerra.

When some major businesses began leaving in the midseventies, the city started a redevelopment agency in 1974 to improve the competitive position of Commerce by improving appearances and by pursuing the elimination of blight from all areas of the city. Projects designed to improve housing quality and increase the availability of low- and moderate-income housing included an ambitious conversion of Great Western Exhibit Center site to 140 single-family units and 94 seniors apartments. All in all, as of 1984, a total of 291 units had been completed, with all types of housing units represented.

Antiquated industrial sites (U.S. Steel, Triangle Industrial Park) were rehabilitated or redeveloped into industrial and office complexes. Currently, the agency is attempting to redevelop the former Uniroyal Tire site. This would enhance the city's image as a major commercial/business area while retaining the distinctive Assyrian wall, which has been declared an historical monument.

The Atlantic Boulevard Commercial Revitalization Project (now in progress) will provide much needed community shopping areas and improve the quality of surrounding neighborhoods.

A bold new project to convert refuse to energy is now underway and should provide additional revenue to the city as well as creatively utilizing technology for alternative energy sources.

As the 25th anniversary year begins, Commerce should be well underway to establishing its cable TV system, which will be owned by the city. In addition to the usual features of cable, two-way capabilities will be designed into the system for long-range industrial and residential applications.

Services for residents of the city have not been forgotten in the latter decade of Commerce history. All city departments stress fine services to residents, and new programs have been developed of special benefit to the residents. A community outreach program was initiated in 1981 to try to alleviate the antisocial problems of youth. This program has now evolved into a community education program, reaching out to Commerce families to inform them and to help prevent problems with drugs, alcohol, and crime. They also have initiated a program that is getting jobs for young people and is teaching them job skills.

An employment referral office was begun in 1982 to help match residents in need of employment to jobs in Commerce industries.

In 1984, the Commerce library joined the California literacy campaign with a special project which provides tutoring to adults who need to learn to read in English.

Ever mindful of the need for the safety of residents and workers, the public safety office has started a Neighborhood Watch Program, and the city council has authorized a new team of public safety specialists to help the city's Neighborhood Watch Program.

As Commerce reaches its 25th anniversary, the city is proud of its past accomplishments and is looking forward to exciting and creative years ahead. The present city council, consisting of Mayor Dr. Michael V. Guerra, Mayor Pro-Tem James B. Dimas, Sr., and councilmembers Robert Cornejo, Arturo Marquez, and Richardo Vasquez, are pledged to continue the development of Commerce as a fine place to live for its residents and as a outstanding environment for business. They stress to all city departments the necessity for first-class service to residents and business alike and for a continuation of the unique cooperation of council, city departments, residents, and industry that makes Commerce truly a "Model City."●

TRIBUTE TO ROY GERHARDT

HON. IKE SKELTON

OF MISSOURI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, January 28, 1985

● Mr. SKELTON. Mr. Speaker, small town America is the backbone of our country, and it often does not get the recognition it deserves. Now, thanks to a book by Mr. Roy Gerhardt, more people will know what it is like to live in a small town, and the contributions a small town makes to its country. The book, titled "A Town Called Speed," is the result of painstaking research, and I commend Mr. Gerhardt for his diligence in bringing small town America alive.●

GILMAN INTRODUCES RESOLUTION FOR MIA/POW'S IN SOUTHEAST ASIA

HON. BENJAMIN A. GILMAN

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, January 28, 1985

● Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, last week I introduced along with some of my colleagues on the House task force on American MIA/POW's in Southeast Asia and along with other committed Members of this body, a resolution expressing the sense of the House regarding the status of these brave yet unaccounted for Americans.

The issue of our "Missing in Action" for well over a decade has been of fundamental importance to us all. The exceptional commitment put forth by the National League of Families has been a magnet for involvement on the part of hundreds of thousands of Americans. Resolving the fate of 2,483 missing and unaccounted for Americans has been assigned a high priority by President Reagan, and his commitment to utilizing every avenue for information on their behalf is to be commended and emulated.

The issue of our missing is one that affects all Americans. It has strong bipartisan support in both Houses of Congress. This sense of the House resolution is similar to one which enjoyed significant support in the last Congress. It deserves the endorsement of all of our colleagues. The thrust of this measure focuses on requesting the President to continue to ensure that his commitment to a full accounting by Indochinese governments be carried out by American officials at all levels of government, as well as working to obtain the immediate release of any Americans who may still be held captive in Indochina and for the immediate return of all American servicemen and civilians who have died in Southeast Asia whose remains have not been returned.

Furthermore, every effort should be made to secure the further cooperation that has been pledged by the Socialist Republic of Vietnam in resolving this humanitarian issue of fundamental importance. Although some progress has been made in recent months, Vietnam is again to be urged by Congress to accelerate cooperation with our Government in achieving the fullest possible accounting for Americans missing or unaccounted for in Indochina.

Mr. Speaker, last Congress I was privileged to serve as chairman of the House task force on MIA/POW's. Along with my colleagues on our task force, we heard much moving testimony that has spurred us on to further commitment. I ask our colleagues to join in supporting this measure with their cosponsorship, and insert the full text of the resolution at this point in the RECORD:

H. CON. RES. 37

Whereas the President has declared the issue of 2,483 Americans missing and unaccounted for in Indochina a matter of highest national priority and has initiated high level dialogue on this issue with the Governments of the Lao People's Democratic Republic and the Socialist Republic of Vietnam;

Whereas the Congress, on a bipartisan basis, fully supports these initiatives to determine the fate of Americans still missing in Indochina and realizes that the fullest possible accounting can only be achieved with the cooperation of the Indochinese governments; and

Whereas the Government of the Socialist Republic of Vietnam has pledged to accelerate efforts to cooperate with the United States Government in resolving this humanitarian issue, separate from other issues dividing our two countries, and the Government of the Lao People's Democratic Republic has taken some positive actions to assist the United States Government in resolving the status of missing Americans: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That it is the sense of the Congress that the President should—

(1) ensure that officials of the United States Government consciously and fully carry out his pledge of highest national priority to resolve the issue of 2,483 Americans still missing and unaccounted for in Indochina;

(2) work for the immediate release of any Americans who may still be held captive in Indochina and for the immediate return of all American servicemen and civilians who have died in Southeast Asia whose remains have not been returned; and

(3) make every effort to secure the further cooperation of the Lao People's Democratic Republic and the Socialist Republic of Vietnam in resolving this humanitarian issue of fundamental importance.

SEC. 2. The Congress calls on the Socialist Republic of Vietnam to fulfill their pledge to accelerate cooperation with the United States in achieving the fullest possible accounting for Americans missing or unaccounted for in Indochina.●

POLONIA FOUNDATION HONORS TWO OHIO WOMEN

HON. MARY ROSE OAKAR

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, January 28, 1985

● Ms. OAKAR. Mr. Speaker, on October 7, 1985, the Polonia Foundation of Ohio held its Pulaski scholarship and recognition awards banquet at the Knights of Columbus Hall in Garfield Heights, OH. The banquet was held to honor one of Poland's great heroes and a great friend of the United States, Gen. Casimir Pulaski. To honor the occasion, President Reagan proclaimed October 11, 1984, as "National Pulaski Day." Governor Celeste of Ohio issued a similar proclamation.

The memory of General Pulaski is also traditionally honored by publicly acknowledging the accomplishments of men and women of Polish descent who have contributed their time and talents to the community at large. The 1984 Heritage Awards of the Ohio Polonia Foundation were bestowed upon Mrs. Helen Karpinski, a civic and political leader in Greater Cleveland and upon Mrs. Ursula Preebe who has long been a leader in volunteer youth, civic, religious, and philanthropic organizations.

I commend to my colleagues attention, the biosketches of these two fine citizens who were justly honored by the Polonia Foundation last fall.

The following are sketches of both outstanding citizens:

BIOSKETCH OF URSULA PREEBE

Ursula Preebe was born in the Warzala area of Cleveland, the daughter of the late Adolph and Josephine Biegacki. She attended St. Stanislaus Elementary School, A.B. Hart Junior High School and graduated from South High School. In 1946, she married Stanley J. Preebe who also attended the same schools. Later, she received her secretarial and business education at Schauffler College. Twenty eight years ago, she started her voluntary youth work. This experience led to full-time employment with the Parma City School District; nineteen years at Schaaf Junior High School; six at Fay Junior High and one at Pleasant Valley Junior High. Over these years, she was responsible for training, developing, and supervising the Cooperative Office of Education that trained students in acquiring practical business skills. She assisted students in securing post graduate in business and still keeps in touch with many of the students to see the end results of these experiences and is thrilled with the end results. She reported directly to the principal and was expected to perform on a self-directed capacity. She primarily served as a liaison between principal, teachers, parents, and students to promote a successful educational experience for students. Now retired, she is like a second mother to these young people. Her destiny in life is apparently to continue guiding students. She is best described as being sensitive and sympathetic to the needs of people and enjoys active participation in constructive and positive projects that promote and encourage excellence.

Over many years, she has been involved in a wide range of community activities. She served as past secretary and treasurer of the Educational Secretary's Chapter of the Ohio Association of Public School Employees; founding member of the Playhouse Square Association; past participating member of the Cleveland Safety Council; Life Member of the Parma Community General Hospital Auxiliary; Rotary Ann Club of Parma; contributing and participating member of the Y's.

She also served as the secretary-treasurer of her husband's corporation, the S.J. Preebe and Associates, a multi-million dollar industrial sales marketing firm.

Stanley J. Preebe, also retired as the corporate president. Both continue to be jointly active in Polonia and community activities.

Both have shared their good fortune and talents with others. They are known as "Polish Philanthropists" for their generous grants to worthwhile Polonia and community projects. They are proud of their Polish Heritage and continue to foster the cultural traditions of Poland.

The Preebe's have a close relationship with Marymount Hospital. Stanley J. Preebe serves on the Marymount Civic Advisory Board. Satisfied with the hospital's care, they donated the "Visitation Chapel." They wanted to do something for the hospital and for the families of patients that visited the hospital that were upset with their sick loved ones. The Preebe's wanted to provide a quiet place where these visitors could meditate and find a moment of solitude and peace.

After the Chapel was built, the Preebe's financed a public address system for Marymount Hospital. This allowed bedridden patients to hear Chapel services.

The plaque gracing the entrance to the "Visitation Chapel" reads: "With Gratitude and Love"/Mr. & Mrs. Stanley J. Preebe."

The Preebe's received statewide recognition for donating the "Visitation Chapel" with its unique public address system beamed to rooms at Marymount Hospital. A resolution of recognition was passed by the Ohio General Assembly to honor them for their generous and thoughtful gift to those in need. This sincere concern and consideration is the hallmark of an involved, sensitive, and responsible citizenship. This noteworthy civic accomplishment is evidence of their potential as individuals to positively affect the quality of life in our society.

The Preebe's have earned the respect of others by their unfaltering and unselfish commitment to those in need. They are worthy of the highest form of praise and recognition. They were, furthermore, commended as truly selfless individuals and outstanding Ohioans.

Expressing a sense of humility, the Preebe's consider themselves blessed. "We have received more than we have given. Through giving, you receive."

The Preebe's reside in Parma.

BIOSKETCH OF HELEN B. KARPINSKI

Born in Cleveland, Helen Karpinski married the late John Karpinski in St. Casimir's Church and lived in the "Poznan" area most of her married life, where she was active in community affairs. In 1938 she was an organizer and officer of the Ladies Auxiliary of the Polish Legion of American Veterans, George Washington Post No. 31. Recently she was honored as a founder of the Ave Maria Senior Citizens Club at St. Casimir's.

For over 60 years she actively participated in the American Polish Women's Club, an organization devoted to preserving Polish customs and traditions and to assisting in civic improvement. Elected the Club's sixth President, she initiated projects as part of the World War II effort and helped establish the Polish Garden in Cleveland's Cultural Gardens. Through her leadership, funds were acquired for a sculptured bust of Madame Marie Curie for the Polish Garden. For over 20 years she has been a chapter officer in the Polish Women's Alliance of America, through which she has promoted fraternal insurance. She is also a member of the Association of Polish Women and the Alliance of Poles. Through her pioneering leadership and unselfish service, she has provided an effective role model to younger ethnic women, demonstrating that a woman could combine responsibilities of a wife and mother with employment and active work in the community.

Her civic interests include 43 years of membership in the Cleveland Cultural Garden Federation, where she has represented the Polish Garden and presently serves as Vice-President. The Federation is a chain of ethnic gardens united for peace, culture, and brotherhood. As an officer during most of its history, Helen Karpinski came into contact with a large variety of ethnic groups. One of the major goals in her life, evolving from this experience, has been to develop political influence through ethnic co-operation. To this end, she helped found the Women's Cosmopolitan Democratic League of Cuyahoga and in 1952 served as its President. The League's purpose is to promote mutual understanding among ethnics and to provide an organization for the political activity of ethnic women.

A believer in the two-party system and in women participating in the political process, Helen Karpinski took an early active role in the Democratic Party beginning in the 1930's and continuing to the present. She served as an elected Democratic Ward Leader for 15 years and as precinct committeeperson for 20 years; was one of the first women nominated to Cleveland City Council; and has served on both the County and State Democratic Executive Committees for many years. In 1967 she was elected President of the Federated Democratic Women of Ohio. She has served as an elected Delegate or Alternate at Democratic National Conventions since 1932 and was a member of the Democratic National Committee from 1980 to 1984.

She has promoted and supported women aspiring to public office and chaired the successful 1970 campaign to elect the first woman to the Office of Treasurer of the State of Ohio and was a Cleveland coordinator in the present State Treasurer's 1982 campaign. She has served on ethnic campaign committees ranging from the President of the United States to numerous Cuyahoga County judges and has served on the Ethnic Committee of the Democratic National Committee.

Having recently returned from the Democratic National Convention, she witnessed a life-long dream coming true—to see an ethnic woman nominated as Vice-President. Through 54 years of political activity, she has been determined to demonstrate to women and to ethnics that they could be successful in politics and government. In recognition of her pioneer efforts in the changing role of women in our society and their emergence especially in politics and government, the Ohio Hall of Fame gave her an award as a special honoree in 1983.

Other recognition she has received includes:

1959 Public Recognition Reception, Women's Cosmopolitan Democratic League.

1965 Community Service Award, Baptist Ministers Association.

1974 Ohio Democratic Woman of the Year Award, Federated Democratic Women of Ohio.

1982 Distinguished Service Award, American Polish Women's Club.

Helen Karpinski is the mother of three daughters: Gloria Joy Battisti, Mercedes Spotts, and Diane Karpinski.●

LEGISLATION TO COMMEMORATE SHAYS' REBILLION

HON. SILVIO O. CONTE

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, January 28, 1985

● Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, we are on the verge of the historical bicentennial of Shays' Rebellion. I stand before my colleagues to share the significance of this hallmark and to summon their support in commemorating its contribution to our American heritage.

Shays' Rebellion was the result of citizens' discontent with the Government and the economy following the Revolutionary War. Revolt took place in almost every State but ignited in Massachusetts where the war had devastated its major industries. Exports fell, resulting in massive public indebtedness. The only accepted tender for a long while was cash and its unstable fluctuations made paying costs close to impossible. Debts were high, punishments were severe. Overall, a general distrust of the Government persisted because public grievances were not being addressed.

By 1786, feelings of unrest had spread across the Massachusetts Commonwealth. Daniel Shays and a group of farmers obstructed court proceedings, demanding that the court be attentive to their concerns. The unrest culminated in January 1787 when Shays and his followers stormed an arsenal in Springfield on the 25th. The uprising of Shays' Rebellion climaxed the newspaper debating, the listing of grievances, the interference with the courts and the rioting which marked the years between 1780 and 1786. People in all States were alarmed by the revolutionary disorder and the underlying social and economic problems that had caused such a reaction.

Plagued by a weak and disorganized economy, and an unresponsive government, the rebels in Massachusetts voiced their dissatisfaction with the post-war crisis. The rebellion hastened special reforms in taxation and judicial procedure. In addition, it alerted leaders of America to the frailities of the Government under the Articles of Confederation and served as the impetus for the drafting of our Constitution.

The influence of Shays' Rebellion in the formation of our present Government deserves recognition by Congress and the people of the United States. I invite my colleagues to support a joint resolution celebrating the historical significance of this event. Please join me in designating January 19 to January 25, 1987 as Shays' Week and Sunday, January 25 as Shays' Day in honor of the rebellion leader.

Mr. Speaker, I feel strongly about this endeavor. Shays' Rebellion represents more than a glimmer of our past. It represents the spirit of the American way and the struggle of a people to persevere and combat injustice. We who have reaped the benefits of the seeds Daniel Shays and his rebels sowed, owe them an enthusiastic recognition. A commemorative resolution signals a step in that direction.●

REPEAL RECORDKEEPING REQUIREMENT

HON. IKE SKELTON

OF MISSOURI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, January 28, 1985

● Mr. SKELTON. Mr. Speaker, I have introduced today a bill to repeal the law that requires that so-called contemporaneous records or logbooks be kept with minutely detailed entries in order for a farmer or a business person to benefit from the lawful deduction of the expenses incurred by the business use of a car or truck. Bear in mind that laws already exist that require business deductions be justified. The law I seek to repeal, however, created an excessive standard to justify the expense and, in my view, imposes too much Government into the life of private citizens.

In the past few weeks, Mr. Speaker, I have interviewed or heard from a large number of small businesses and farmers who have complied with these rules during January. They tell me from firsthand experience that these rules drain their time unnecessarily; time which they could put to better use feeding the country or creating jobs. As a member of the House Small Business Committee, I have heard repeatedly that small businessmen do not mind paying their fair share nor do they mind doing those activities which genuinely safeguard our Nation. They are a patriotic group and a valuable resource. What they do mind are unjustified Federal requirements for thousands of pages of unneeded, unheeded, and unread paper. This body responded to their outcry with the Paperwork Reduction Act, which was designed to systematically reduce Government recordkeeping requirements and to require Government agencies to justify any further demands. The contemporaneous recordkeeping requirement flies in the face of that goal.

Determined tax cheats are not thwarted; they will simply falsify entries or construct false books if they are ever required to "produce the record." It is the honest taxpayer, who already works a good portion of the year for Uncle Sam, who will now spend time filling in the blanks. If what we are trying to do is impose a charge on those who drive their business cars home, then let us debate that issue directly and vote on it on its own merits.

Mr. Speaker, it is time that we left our farmers and small businessmen with enough time to do what they do best: tend to business.●

A TRIBUTE TO MARY ANN DYBALA

HON. WILLIAM O. LIPINSKI

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, January 28, 1985

● Mr. LIPINSKI. Mr. Speaker, it is with great pride that I call attention to a respected citizen from Illinois' Fifth Congressional District, which I am privileged to represent, and she is Mary Ann Dybala. Mary Ann has consistently shown that every neighborhood has people who are dedicated to the growth and progress of their community.

Mary Ann is a native of Chicago and has devoted herself to numerous community activities and projects in the hopes of encouraging future community growth and improvement. Her participation in the community can be highlighted through her efforts as president of the Garfield Ridge Chamber of Commerce. Mary Ann has been active in the chamber for 10 years and is beginning her second consecutive terms as president. Throughout her many years of community service, she has always looked at participation as a way to help others as she has been helped by others in the community.

I join with the residents of the Fifth Congressional District in paying tribute to Mary Ann Dybala for her work in our behalf, and I introduce into today's RECORD a newspaper article honoring Mary Ann Dybala upon her receipt of the Ray McDonald Community Achievement Award.

The article follows:

MCDONALD AWARD TO MARY ANN DYBALA

The Midway Sentinel Proudly salutes Mary Ann Dybala as the recipient of the Ray McDonald Community Achievement Award for the month of November.

Mary Ann Dybala is a native of Chicago having spent here early years in the Brighton Park area. She moved to Garfield Ridge in 1950 with her parents, two brothers and a sister. She graduated from St. Daniel's the Prophet Grammar School and from Kelly High School. She also attended Bogan Junior College and Northern Illinois University studying nursing.

Many long time residents may remember her from the old Dvorak's Pharmacy on Archer and Rutherford streets in the late 50s where she worked as an apprentice pharmacist. She also was both a Tupperware Demonstrator and group manager for almost 14 years. It was at one of these parties that a friend in the real estate business convinced her to give selling homes a try. She had always enjoyed sales and meeting people, so she took the state exam and began as a sales associate in one of the community realty officers. After almost two years at that agency, she went into partnership in her own business forming a realty, then located in a small office at the corner of Archer and Austin Aves. Business grew to the point where relocation became necessary, so a move was made one-half block west to the present location at 6165 S. Archer Ave. where she is now the sole owner.

Beside her interest in this area from the home standpoint, she has a genuine interest in people, the Garfield Ridge area and in the future growth of the 23rd Ward. She believes that with the promised improvements to the southwest side such as the Rapid Transit leg to Midway and the regrowth of the airport itself, and the new businesses, our community can only continue to grow and flourish. To that end she has devoted herself to many community organizations and projects. She is presently beginning her second consecutive term as president of the Garfield Ridge Chamber of Commerce of which she has been an active member for almost 10 years. She is also a member of the Board of Directors of the Garfield Ridge Chapter of the American Cancer Society and is involved with the Southwest Realty Board.

Throughout her many years as a resident of the southwest side and the 23rd Ward, she has participated in many other worthwhile communtiy activities because she truly believes in "getting involved" to help others as she has been helped by others in this community.

She currently lives in the 23rd Ward with Ray, her husband of 19 years, and their daughter Kim, and son Philip.

The staff of the Midway Sentinel Expesses its thanks to Mary Ann and honors her for the unselfish dedication of the time and concern she has shown for the business and residential community of the 23rd Ward and the southwest side.●

TOUR OF DEPARTMENT OF DEFENSE DEPENDENTS SCHOOLS

HON. MARY ROSE OAKAR

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, January 28, 1985

● Ms. OAKAR. Mr. Speaker, during the recent congressional recess I had the opportunity to chair an inspection tour of the U.S. Department of Defense dependents schools located in Japan. The inspection tour included stops at Sollars Elementary School, Edgren High School, West Elementary School, Byrd Elementary School, Yokota High School, East Elementary School, Sullivan Elementary School, Kinnick High School, Zama Middle and High Schools, and Arnn Elementary School.

These Federal public schools are responsible for the education of American children living abroad—children who are the sons and daughters of our service women and men who have contributed so much to the defense of our country.

Mr. Speaker, while most of us would view the prospect of living and teaching in a foreign country as an exciting adventure, the realities of life are far less pleasant for our overseas personnel. During my recent inspection tour of the dependents schools I came across a number of glaring problems that could affect not only the morale of the educational staff but also could hinder the recruitment and retention of important military personnel.

The recent inspection tour revealed, among other things, that Department of Defense education personnel face a high cost of living that is not met by their modest salaries. Furthermore, many of the employees encounter on a daily basis substandard housing, language difficulties, cultural adjustments, poor or nonexistent medical facilities and less than sophisticated communication and transportation systems.

There is no doubt in my mind that the educational personnel serving in these schools are of superior quality. It is unfortunate they face personnel problems that no other teacher or administrator could faintly imagine. If we are to continue to provide a superior education for our military dependent children, then we must solve the overwhelming social problems that the educational staff face on a daily basis.

During my tour of the dependents schools, I had the opportunity to meet with and talk to many of the fine teachers and administrators serving in the overseas school system. My lengthy conversation with the personnel brought to light two major problems. The most common complaint was the lack of transfers. Most teachers said they would be willing to experience substandard living conditions for a year or two if they had some hope of moving to another less isolated location. Shockingly, I discovered that some teachers had served in the same location for 10 and 12 years without being able to transfer to a more desirable location. If we are to retain these teachers, then we must design a system that will allow them to compete on an annual basis for available vacancies in other countries.

The second most serious problem facing Department of Defense educational personnel was their inability to use medical facilities on military bases. While our overseas military bases will attend to the needs of military personnel they have refused time and again to provide even the most minimal of medical care to the staff educating their children. It is ludicrous that Defense Department educational personnel have to travel 60 to 75 miles per day to see a foreign doctor for medical care while military doctors and dentists sit idle less than 10 or 15 minutes away.

Finally, the recent tour of our Defense Department dependents schools reaffirmed my belief that we must improve the working conditions of our educational personnel overseas. If we are to continue to recruit and retain superior personnel from the United States to serve in Department of Defense schools, then I ask all my colleagues to support my bill, H.R. 43, the "Overseas Teachers Act of 1985." The issues addressed in H.R. 43 will guarantee the finest possible education for the children of our armed services and civilian employees serving abroad.

Mr. Speaker, my bill, among other things, will ensure equality of benefits, provide a simplified method of pay, allow sabbatical leave, define the school day, year, and class size, and establish a career ladder that will allow teachers to remain in the classroom. Only when we have accomplished these goals can we be assured that we have provided a superior education for the children of our military personnel. Mr. Speaker, if there are other Members who are interested in continuing the long tradition of providing a superior education for the children of our armed service employees then I ask them to join me in supporting this important proposal.

Mr. Speaker, in closing, I would like to express my sincere thanks to Dr. Beth Stephens, Director of the Department of Defense Dependents Schools and Lieutenant. General Weyand, Commander of the IX Corps, Japan, for their assistance in making the visit of the Subcommittee on Compensation and Employee Benefits of the House Post Office and Civil Service Committee a success. A special thanks is in order to the many fine enlisted and commissioned personnel that provided ground and air transportation during the subcommittee's visit. Without their efforts and cooperation the subcommittee's tour would not have been the success that it was.●

PROTECTION NEEDED FOR TEAM FRANCHISES AND COMMUNITIES

HON. BARBARA A. MIKULSKI

OF MARYLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, January 28, 1985

● Ms. MIKULSKI. Mr. Speaker, last year, in the middle of a snowy night, the Baltimore Colts were moved from our city to Indianapolis.

At other times, in other cities around this country, other sports teams have also arbitrarily moved from city to city. Oakland lost its Raiders, New York lost its Jets, San Diego lost its Clippers. Philadelphia almost lost its Eagles and, now, there are rumors that the St. Louis Cardinals may be flying the coop.

When professional sports teams leave a city, they not only leave behind the broken hearts of millions of fans, they often leave an empty stadium with enormous financial debts they helped create.

What we've seen recently is that sometimes teams hold local governments hostage by threatening to leave and making ransom demands for additional guarantees and subsidies.

It's a sad commentary today that many of our professional sports teams want guaranteed ticket sales and guaranteed stadium improvements but they don't want to guarantee they'll stay in a city. To me, that's not being a good sport.

The legislation we are introducing today is designated to protect local governments and taxpayers who have put millions of dollars into stadiums and playing arenas.

It is also designed to protect the integrity of professional sports leagues and to enable them to be good faith bargainers.

This bill creates an orderly framework of events that must occur and criteria that must be met if a professional sports team wants to move from one city to another.

This bill allows teams to move for financial need, but not for financial greed. It gives cities the right of first refusal if a team does want to leave and it establishes an arbitration panel to determine if there are valid financial reasons for a move.

This bill goes even further in protecting communities and team franchises.

It allows leagues to bargain collectively for telecast agreements and revenue sharing.

It also mandates that by 1988, the NFL must expand its league by two teams and that one of those teams must be in Baltimore. Further, the NFL is to add two more teams by 1990 and one of those teams must be in Oakland, CA.

I have been a fan of professional football all my life. I used to love to go to Colts games with my uncles, and one of the first things I bought when I finished college and got a job was my own set of season tickets.

I am a sports fan. I am also a representative of the fans. Communities are fighting aggressively today to get sports teams as they are to get the high-paying microelectronic industries. Sports teams mean jobs. They mean community pride.

Through this legislation I hope we can bring order and stability to what is otherwise becoming a very chaotic playing field. I urge my colleagues in the House of Representatives to support it.●

LAW ENFORCEMENT ACCREDITATION COMMISSION DOES EXCELLENT WORK

HON. BARNEY FRANK

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, January 28, 1985

● Mr. FRANK. Mr. Speaker, one of the most interesting, educational, and valuable experiences I have had as an elected official was serving as a member of the Commission on the Accreditation of Law Enforcement Agencies. This group was established by several private organizations concerned with law enforcement and had representation from law enforcement professionals, elected officials, private citizens, and others to propose standards which police forces throughout the country could, on a voluntary basis, be accredited.

During the last years of my service as a State legislator in Massachusetts, I was a member of that commission and found the commission meetings to be extraordinarily useful to me. A diverse group of people representing many ideologies and backgrounds were brought together on a periodic basis to discuss difficult issues of law enforcement, and the results were in all cases stimulating discussions and mutual conclusions. I was serving on the commission in my capacity as a State legislator, so I left when I became a member of this body. But I have continued to follow the commission's work with interest and I was recently delighted to read in Parade magazine a very good article describing the extraordinary progress that has been made with the important work that the Law Enforcement Accreditation Commission does. The fears that some had that this commission would be an intrusive national presence disturbing local traditions have proven unfounded. Instead the commission has already begun to show its usefulness and I long to call to the attention of the Members the interesting work that has been done in this article by Mr. Bernard Gavzer.

The article follows:

CAN YOUR POLICE DEPARTMENT PASS MUSTER?

(By Bernard Gavzer)

Everyone knows—or thinks he knows—what makes a good cop: honesty, strength, dedication, persistence, street smarts, compassion.

But what makes a good police department?

How do you know whether the organization behind the men and women in blue is employing their talents most efficiently and professionally in delivering police services?

You know how to judge schools because of objective tests and standards. The same is true of hospitals.

And now, there's the promise of a sort of revolution in police work. For the first time, there is a nationwide program to accredit entire police departments.

This can be done through the Commission on Accreditation for Law Enforcement Agencies, headquartered in Fairfax, Va. It is an independent, nonprofit, nongovernmental organization operating since 1983 with the goal of raising police work from a blue-collar job to a profession.

"Our goal is to involve every eligible law-enforcement agency in the country in the accreditation program," says James Cotter, executive director of the commission. More than 15,000 agencies could be eligible.

Being accredited would be the equivalent of saying about a department that it "is in an outstanding category, that it rightfully has an uncontested status and that its accreditation is a guarantee that it conforms to a desirable standard," says Cotter. But that definition alone, you could be reasonably sure that, if your department was accredited, at least the professionals regarded it as good.

Charles Plummer, police chief in Hayward, Calif., addresses the issue with emotion, saying: "If you had a heart attack, how'd you feel being wheeled into a hospital that's not accredited? Would you send your kid to a college that's not accredited? If you want standards for health and education, by God, why not for public safety? Why wouldn't any community insist on a police department that meets professional standards?"

His department is seeking accreditation.

So far, five police departments have been accredited. In addition, to the 17-member force in Mount Dora, Fla., which was the first to win accreditation, they are the 290-member Arlington County Police Department in Virginia, the 1370-member Baltimore County Police Department in Maryland, the 44-member department of North Providence, R.I., and the 51-member Elkhart County Sheriff's Department in Indiana. (Figures in this article are for full-time members of a department, but part-time police also must pass muster.)

Thirty-six departments, including those in Denver, Tampa and Atlanta, are in a preliminary stage leading to accreditation, while 130 others—including departments in Boston, Phoenix, Houston and Louisville—have applied. The accreditation is for five years.

Mount Dora was one of five departments that took part in a test to design an accreditation program. "It's not a 'good ole boy' department anymore," says the former police chief, Earl Gooden, who was in command during the process. And his successor, Bob Roberts, says, "The beauty of accreditation was proved right here because, when Earl left there was no concern about policy changes or interpretations or who would do what. I think it was the most orderly change of authority I ever heard of."

Chicago's force of 12,000, according to Deputy Superintendent Ira Harris, is "in the self-assessment phase of moving toward accreditation." That would make it the largest department in the nation to pursue accreditation.

Like many other big-city departments, Chicago has had its share of grief over corruption, which is the major problem of every police department, regardless of size. "The heritage of American policing is one of brutality and corruption," says Joseph McNamara, chief of the San Jose Police Department in California and a highly regarded but controversial commentator on police matters. He adds that it's been that way since New York City formed its police department in 1845. "The police were manipulated by politicians," says McNamara. "And it is as true today as then that where you have a politically controlled police system, the motives and goals of the political machine are foremost, and you have scandal, brutality and corruption."

McNamara believes accreditation can turn that image around.

The need caused four leading police executive organizations to act. They are the International Association of Chiefs of Police, the National Sheriffs' Association, the Police Executive Research Forum, and the National Organization of Black Law Enforcement Executives, which Chicago's Ira Harris heads. Their aim was to find a way to develop a realistic, workable strategy to raise the status of police work, deal with its problems and make it truly professional.

"There couldn't have been more credible, knowledgeable and professional police organizations involved," says Hubert G. Locke, dean of the University of Washington Graduate School of Public Affairs. "It bodes well for accreditation."

The organizations created the Commission on Accreditation in 1979 and picked Jim Cotter to run it. Cotter had headed the FBI National Academy for 18 years, until his mandatory retirement. On the commission are 11 law-enforcement professionals and 10 representatives from the public and private sectors.

They came up with 1000 standards they thought should be met by most departments. These were sent to 358 randomly selected departments. The number of standards later was pared to 944. If you don't meet them, you can't be accredited. Obviously, a small department without a crime lab wouldn't have to meet standards relating to crime labs.

One revolutionary aspect is that the public has a say in the accreditation. This happens when the inspection team visits the community, inviting the public to say, in effect, if there is any reason accreditation should be withheld. Traditionally, police departments are very cool to the notion of inviting citizens to take such a close look.

Jim Cotter says accreditation can work for any size department, whether it's the 25,000-member New York City force or the four-member department at Painted Post, N.Y." But Sheriff Richard Elrod of Cook County, Ill., a commission member and former president of the National Sheriffs' Association, sees some problems for big agencies.

"It can be difficult in a large department—New York, Chicago, Los Angeles—because of a need to possibly change existing policies, criteria and standards," he says. "It is not an easy task changing longtime practices."

New York and Los Angeles are in states whose police chiefs' associations have reservations about the accreditation commission. "We object to a national commission as an intrusion on local government," says Joe Dominelli, executive director of the New York police chiefs' outfit. "We go along with standards and accreditation but want it done on a statewide basis." The California chiefs' group says standards of the Peace Officers Standards and Training Commission (POST) are good enough. It expresses a fear that the accreditation commission could lead to having to deal with a Big Brother out of Washington.

"You know what they're afraid of is what happened with the 21-year-old drinking age because of drunk drivers," says Howard Runyon, chief of police in Sterling, N.J., and former president of the International Association of Chiefs of Police. "States that wouldn't set a 21-year minimum age were threatened with losing federal funds. They think maybe one day there'll be someone—the commission—saying if you don't get accredited, you can't get funds."

Thomas J. Sardino, the current head of the international police chiefs' group, says there's an option open to departments that fear the national commission might become an interfering Big Brother. "That is for meshing the standards to comply with standards set within their own states," he says, "whether it's POST or, in New York, the Municipal Police Training Council."

"The council's standards on use of deadly force, for example, differ only in minor ways from the accreditation commission's, so it's not much of a problem in New York," adds Sardino, who is chief of the 400-member police department in Syracuse, N.Y. "But in Tennessee that is a very heated issue right now because of considerable differences relating to the use of deadly force. States like Tennessee may not want to meet the commission's standards—or may not be able to because of state law—so they are not likely to go along with the commission."

Sardino clearly favors accreditation as a step toward police professionalism. He says the Syracuse department already meets most of the commission standards and will very likely seek accreditation.

Jim Cotter says the accreditation commission has no control over any federal or state funds going to police organizations. He also insists there is no way accreditation can lead to a national police force any more than school or hospital accreditation has led to nationalization of hospitals and schools.

The standards aim to prevent or correct problems confronting every police department. "Procedures have been thought through and put down on paper as clear directives on how to handle such diverse events as corruption, abuse of suspects, delinquencies by police, hazardous waste spills, mass murder, domestic violence, crowd control, missing persons, runaway children and traffic control," says Cotter.

To deal with corruption, for example, there is a strict system of accountability and a sophisticated process for seeing what goes on within a department. Even so, no one is prepared to say there can't be human failure.

As for excessive force, many states permit police to shoot at fleeing felons or suspects. But the standards say such force may be used only if the life of the officer, or others in the immediate area, is threatened . . . and only then.

"We finally have standards of what a good department ought to look like and be, and put together by professionals," says Neil Behan, chief of the Baltimore police. "These are humanistic standards."

Gary Hayes, executive director of the Police Executive Research Forum, recommends those things stressed by the accreditation commission: leadership, training, written policy.

Charles Sorrentino, a former director with the Law Enforcement Assistance Administration, says such leadership would be shown by any police chief moving toward getting accreditation because "he is telling them he wants to be professional."

Charles Seiger, chief of the department in Egremont, Mass., with two full-time members, says it would be great to have the same standards apply to all departments. "It's crazy that they should differ from one place to another."

And Dean Locke says the cost—from $3,800 to $15,000, depending upon size—should play no role, "especially when you realize that whom you select for a chief or what you do for your department is as important as whom you choose for the local football coach or team."●

PROSECUTORIAL AUTHORITY TO SEIZE DRUG-RELATED ASSETS

HON. ROMANO L. MAZZOLI

OF KENTUCKY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, January 28, 1985

● Mr. MAZZOLI. Mr. Speaker, I commend to the attention of my colleagues the following article, entitled "Attorneys' Fees Become Issue in Narcotics Cases", which appeared in the January 13, 1985, Washington Post.

For a long time, prosecutors have asked for the authority to seize assets of defendants convicted in drug or organized crime cases. Thus, I was particularly pleased by the inclusion of this authority in the omnibus crime bill enacted into law by the 98th Congress, in 1984.

I believe officials of the Justice Department are exactly right in targeting defendants' assets as "blood money" and ill-gotten gain which should be frozen before trial and forfeitable in full on conviction.

Attorneys who defend these drug kings do so with their eyes open. They deserve no more protection than any other person or entity who knowingly does business with persons indicted on drug or organized crime-related charges.

ATTORNEYS' FEES BECOME ISSUE IN NARCOTICS CASES

LAWYERS CALLED TO TESTIFY AGAINST CLIENTS

(By Loretta Tofani)

Robert Simels, a New York criminal defense lawyer, said he was shocked when he was subpoenaed by the prosecution to testify as a witness at a client's trial on charges of cocaine dealing.

Simels this month received a second subpoena, this time to appear before a grand jury to document the size of his fee and who is paying it.

Simels and other defense lawyers say that such testimony jeopardizes the attorney-client relationship, perhaps forcing the attorney to disqualify himself. But prosecutors say the testimony is necessary to determine whether the defendant has unreported and illegal income.

While lawyers have been receiving subpoenas to testify in their clients' narcotics cases for about 10 years, such subpoenas remain unusual.

Defense attorneys predict that the numbers of such subpoenas will rise as a result of the Comprehensive Crime Control Act of 1984, which gives prosecutors the right to take most assets—including homes and money that would pay lawyers' fees—of a defendant convicted in a drug or organized-crime case.

To ensure that the defendant does not spend the money before trail, the government now has the right to freeze the defendant's assets.

"Now that the government is seeking to freeze the defendant's money, it has more incentive to issue subpoenas because it wants to get the money back," said Alan Ellis of the National Association of Criminal Defense Lawyers.

Federal prosecutors have warned at least two attorneys since passage of the law in October that they cannot spend fees from certain clients because that money will belong to the government if the client is convicted of a narcotics or racketeering charge.

Neal R. Sonnet, a Miami defense attorney and former federal prosecutor, last month received a letter from Assistant U.S. Attorney Brian Leighton saying, "The government hereby puts you on notice that any and all assets belonging to the defendants are forfeitable to the United States, including any attorney's fees or other valuable consideration received by you, or to be received by you for your representation of the defendant."

In another case, defense attorney Jeffrey Gordon of Los Angeles was notified by a prosecutor that the government might be entitled to any money paid him by client Leo Rogers. Rogers had been indicted on charges of obstruction of justice and operating a continuing criminal enterprise—a tax-shelter investment program.

Gordon said he intends to argue in federal court this month that the forfeiture provision of the law is unconstitutional because it violates a defendant's Sixth Amendment right to counsel by leaving the defendant unable to pay an attorney.

Prosecutors disagree, saying that the defendant is entitled to a public defender. But defense attorneys point out that only defendants without money can use public defenders. Most defendants charged with drug dealing or racketeering technically have money.

"It might be a catch-22," Simels said.

Gordon said the forfeiture provision also could result in violations of attorney-client privilege because if the client is convicted, the attorney must try to prove that the money used to pay his fee did not come from an illegal activity—or he cannot keep his fee.

"The forfeiture provision really strikes at the heart of the adversary system," Gordon said.

Defense attorneys also were worried that the forfeiture provision has great potential for abuse because it makes it difficult for certain defendants to hire excellent defense lawyers, both because the government can claim the attorney's fee and because the government can force the lawyer to testify against his client, encouraging the lawyer to disqualify himself from the case.

But the Justice Department sees the matter differently. "If you have drug money, you're not allowed to buy a plane with it, a house with it or more drugs with it," Trott said. "Why should there be a different rule for lawyers' fees? That money is blood money."

Answered Ellis: "There's no constitutional right to a Mercedes. There is to a lawyer."●

A BILL TO AMEND THE FEDERAL SALARY ACT OF 1967

HON. MARY ROSE OAKAR

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, January 28, 1985

● Ms. OAKAR. Mr. Speaker, I am introducing today a bill to amend the Federal Salary Act of 1967, and title 5 of the United States Code. The purpose of this legislation is to transfer the authority to determine the pay classification of Federal administrative law judges [ALJ's] from the Office of Personnel Management [OPM] to the Commission on Executive, Legislative, and Judicial Salaries.

Administrative law judges occupy a unique position in our Federal work force. They are judges serving in the executive branch, who have existed since the days of George Washington when officers were appointed to figure import duties and determine which soldiers were disabled. They hear and decide the appeals from the millions of decisions made by our Federal agencies each year, dealing with everything from the payment of Social Security benefits to the regulation of utilities, the media and interstate commerce.

There are currently more than 1,100 ALJ's, serving in approximately 29 separate agencies and working under the auspices of the Administrative Act and other Federal statutes. Unlike most other Federal employees, administrative law judges are considered personnel of the agency to which they are appointed, but they are selected by the OPM independently of any agency recommendation or rating. In addition, OPM also controls the pay of the ALJ's, and they can only be removed from office after a hearing establishing good cause before the Merit Systems Protection Board.

Administrative law judges also occupy an important place in our constitutional system. While they are not appointed in the same manner as judges in our Federal judiciary, they are, nevertheless, vested with the same responsibilities for maintaining the integrity of our judicial system as are the judges commissioned pursuant to article III of the Constitution. More importantly, administrative law judges generally perform the same duties as do trial judges in our Federal courts. As triers of fact and law, their job is to ensure that agency rulings are legal and fair, and that our citizens are afforded due process of law.

The U.S. Supreme Court has recognized the special character of administrative law judges. In Butz v. Economou, 438 U.S. 478 (1978), the Court held that ALJ's are "functionally comparable" to judges employed in the judicial branch, and the Court conferred on them absolute immunity for judicial acts. Later in Marshall v. Jerrico, Inc., 466 U.S. 238, 250 (1980), the Court commented on the role of the administrative law judge, observing that the independent administrative law judge is one "whose impartiality serves as the ultimate guarantee of a fair and meaningful proceeding in our constitutional regime."

Over the years, we in Congress have also been concerned with the unique position of administrative law judges in both the career Federal service and our judicial system. Legislative history clearly demonstrates congressional concern and action to preserve the functions of administrative law judges and their freedom from agency influence and control.

In passing the Civil Service Reform Act of 1978, we in Congress expressly excluded administrative law judges from the Senior Executive Service [SES], recognizing that performance evaluations and pay bonuses are incompatible with the decisional independence required of an administrative law judge. ALJ's are, therefore, classified under the General Schedule [GS] pay system. However ALJ's are prohibited by statute from receiving merit pay increases or other bonuses for outstanding performance and, in fact, are excluded from any performance evaluations. These exclusions are necessary and proper in order to avoid exposing administrative law judges to conflict of interest situations. ALJ's need to be independent and impartial in rendering their decisions. To be impartial, however, requires that administrative law judges must be free from all political and employment pressures and control.

Mr. Speaker, impartiality is what this legislation seeks to assure. We have all seen the recent reports that some agencies are allegedly pressuring their administrative law judges to reject appeals. We have read that some agencies may even have quotas on the number of claims which are granted, and that others are supposedly threatening to dismiss or otherwise penalize administrative law judges who grant too many appeals. In fact one group of ALJ's has filed suit against an agency precisely on these grounds. Such allegations, especially if true, do nothing but undermine public confidence in our Government. They strike at the heart and very foundations of our system of justice.

These reports also point out a continuing need to keep the administrative law judges independent and free from improper control by the agencies to which those judges are assigned as well as from arbitrary actions of the OPM. Congress has always recognized the efficacy of an independent administrative judiciary. Such independence serves to structurally insulate ALJ's from the potential of agency retaliation for their decisions. To reassure private litigants of the impartiality of the ALJ employed by the opposing agency, to enhance the credibility of the administrative process, to remove any appearance of impropriety and to maintain public confidence in the administrative process. Congress must continue to foster the independence of administrative law judges.

Mr. Speaker, this bill creates no new obligations, rights or privileges. It follows on recommendations of the Federal Administrative Law Judges Conference and the Judicial Administration Division of the American Bar Association. It is needed to solidify the independence of ALJ's. To retain administrative law judges on the GS pay schedule tends to encourage their agencies to view them as other Government employees and to deal with them as such. Moreover, it nurtures unnecessary tension among ALJ's and other agency personnel who take an adversary role in litigation before them. Such dealings impede fair and impartial dispensing of justice. It is entirely appropriate, therefore, that the pay classification of administrative law judges be determined by an outside source, the Commission on Executive, Legislative, and Judicial Salaries, which has, for years, studied and recommended the salaries of Federal judges in the judicial branch.●

FOOD FOR THOUGHT—AND FOR THE FUTURE

HON. IKE SKELTON

OF MISSOURI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, January 28, 1985

● Mr. SKELTON. Mr. Speaker, an editorial written by Mr. Kim Sexton of the Blue Springs Examiner, which is published in my district, brings up a point which should be taken to heart by the various factions working on the 1985 farm bill. The point is the need to work together, to form a farm coalition which will protect all farmers. It is important that we, from rural districts and those with other agriculture interests, do not let the fighting among farm interests cause irreparable damage to the family farmers and farm economy in general. I ask the article be reprinted, and commend it to my colleagues.

FOOD FOR THOUGHT—AND FOR THE FUTURE

My New Year's prediction is that farmers will organize in order to drive up the price they receive for their products.

At a time when the world is starving it is difficult to understand how there could be a record number of farm failures.

Food prices have certainly gone up in the last decade, but most of the increase has gone to distributors rather than growers.

I believe there should be a federal investigation to see whether there has been a conspiracy against farmers and consumers. Meanwhile, I would suggest that producers get together, go on strike or do whatever is necessary to obtain a fair return on their investment of time, money and energy to feed us.

I know a lot of readers are going to get mad at me for advocating what will likely substantially increase the price of food. I won't like paying more money, either. But I would rather do that now to protect the family farmers and competition than wait for our farmland to be gobbled up by big corporations that will certainly charge even more later.

I don't see any way to keep food prices from going up. The demand is increasing at home and abroad for the most important thing humans need besides water.

I think it is ridiculous for this nation to continue in many cases to pay farmers not to farm, too. Let's grow all we can and send what we don't need to nations where starvation is most prevalent.

It's a national shame to allow the farm foreclosure fad to continue. We know U.S. Rep. Ike Skelton is concerned about this agricultural assault epidemic, and we believe he will encourage his colleagues to give high priority to a solution.

Many of the farms being taken have been in families for several generations. Why are they now suddenly failing at a time when the nation's economy is strong? Please find out, congressmen. Our future requires food.●

SEATBELTS IN SCHOOL BUSES

HON. PETER H. KOSTMAYER

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, January 28, 1985

● Mr. KOSTMAYER. Mr. Speaker, today I reintroduced legislation that would provide States with a financial incentive to require the installation of seatbelts in new schoolbuses. I want to congratulate the National Coalition for Seatbelts in School Buses for all of their work in this field and would like to insert into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD excerpts from an article from one of its recent newsletters.

SEATBELTS IN SCHOOL BUSES

RATIONALE

Seatbelts in school buses serve two functions. The first purpose is to reduce the number and extent of injuries. Although 8 years have passed since the National Highway Transportation Safety Administration enacted stricter school bus design standards, a significant reduction in injuries has not resulted. The National Safety Council statistics reveal 4,100 injuries for 1971 and 4,200 for 1982. Unbelted children have little lateral collision protection, no rollover protection and during a crash they can become human missiles as they are thrown into each other, into the unpadded areas of the bus, and into the aisles, thus blocking quick evacuation.

The second function seatbelts in school buses serve is the education of the children in seatbelt usage. Between 11 percent and 14 percent of the American population wears seatbelts. Children have few role models to follow. Seatbelts in school buses offer an excellent opportunity to teach children the life-saving habit of wearing a seatbelt. This positive training will carry over to the family car and protect children from their number one killer—the automobile accident.

EXISTING PROGRAMS

The following areas in the country contain school districts operating Type I school buses with seatbelts for each passenger:

Ardsley, Greenburgh, and Port Jefferson Station, NY.
Hartland, VT.
Dalton, GA.
Manchester and Marblehead, MA.
Oxford, MI.
West Orange and Plainsboro, NJ.
Pleasant Hill and Klamath, OR.
Catalina Foothills, AZ.
Wilmette, Skokie, and Glencoe, IL.
Rochester, MI, will have seatbelts in school buses sometime this year.

THE ILLINOIS PROGRAM

Illinois has four school districts operating school buses with seatbelts. No one has used the belts as weapons and usage rates are extremely high. The buckles are light-weight, easy to operate, and fingers don't get caught in them. Tripping hazards have been eliminated through the installation of the shorter end of the belt in the aisle position. Furthermore, belts are attached to the posterior or seat frame and not to the floor of the bus. The belts are color-coded allowing the children to quickly locate their appropriate belts.

Two of the districts have bus monitors, while the other two districts used parent volunteers the first few days of school to help acquaint the students with the seatbelts. The primary function of the monitors is to watch the children outside of the bus and prevent them from being run over by their own bus or another vehicle. Several of our reports indicate that bus drivers have noted a substantial improvement in the behavior of their passengers. Driver error is a frequent cause of school bus accidents and the calmer climate produced by seatbelt usage allows delivers to concentrate better on their driving and observe more carefully the students in the danger zones outside the bus.

Seatbelts make it more difficult for a student to stand up and stick his head out of a bus window. A student in Tennessee was decapitated by an electrical cable when he stuck his head out of the school bus window.

The U.S. Department of Transportation has been actively encouraging seatbelt usage in automobiles, the installation of seatbelts in new school buses is a logical extension of this commitment.●

A BILL TO PROVIDE MORE WORKER OPTIONS IN UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE AND RETRAINING

HON. FORTNEY H. (PETE) STARK

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, January 28, 1985

● Mr. STARK. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing a bill to provide more worker options in the use of unemployment insurance and retraining opportunities.

The idea for the bill is drawn from sections 401 through 406 of the Economic Competitiveness and Cooperation Act (S. 2795), which was authored by Senator KENNEDY and others and introduced during the last Congress. This is but a small section from that legislation, which provides many incentives to increase the international competitiveness of American businesses. Introduction of just this part of S. 2795 will enable the good ideas relating to unemployment insurance [UI] to be considered in just one committee of the House—a procedure which greatly simplifies the legislative process.

The bill:

First, extends expiring TEFRA language designed to encourage States to establish short-term compensation [STC] programs and to provide short-term UI benefits for a worker in a declining industry who works part time while in a State-approved training program. STC is an important, but underutilized option, which helps both firms and workers. As an example, if a firm faces a cut of 20 percent, rather than lay off 20 percent of its workers, the company could cut work hours and pay 20 percent. Under STC, employees could receive 80 percent of full-time pay and 20 percent of what their unemployment benefit would be.

STC has been used in California and two or three other States, but has gone unused in the other States. It is a great tool for encouraging employee loyalty. Rather than firing and hiring with the economic cycles, trained workers can be kept and support for the company built. This is almost a Japanese-style of management idea. For the worker, fewer are laid off, and health and pension benefits are maintained during recessions.

Second, gives UI benefits to workers who voluntarily resign from a declining firm to enter a training program. A declining firm would be defined as one which has had a 40-percent loss of jobs over 18 months or has announced eventual closure, or meets other criteria set by the States.

Third, gives to a worker 80 percent of his remaining weeks of UI benefits if the person accepts a lower wage job. These payments would be made periodically over the course of 1 year to a worker who keeps this lower paying job. This provision is obviously useful for the adjustment of workers in towns where middle-income jobs have been eliminated and only lower paying, or service industry jobs may be available. Rather than having workers wait through their period of unemployment benefits in the often vain hope that better paying jobs will return, it encourages the worker to look at different types of jobs.

Fourth, authorizes extra UI benefits for a worker in a retraining program. This final provision costs money—some $200 million is provided—and is therefore the most difficult provision to consider during this period of rising deficits. Yet, to the extent it breaks people out of cycles of unemployment, it could be a long-term savings. Under this section, during his first 8 weeks of UI benefits, a worker could elect to get an amount equal to 125 percent of the remainder of his benefits if he's in an approved training program. He will be eligible for these higher benefits for a period equal to the lesser of the length of the training course or two times the number of weeks of eligibility which remained at the time of election.

The Nation spends from $25 to $32 billion a year on UI. It is a program that is 50 years old this year—and I believe that for all its good service, it is a program that has grown too stagnant and too rigid over the years. This golden anniversary year would be a great year to clean out the cobwebs, from top to bottom. In a time when training programs are being slashed and yet unemployment is still above 7 percent, we clearly need to think of new and better ways to use existing resources to help the jobless.

We should be asking ourselves:

Can we make the UI Program more than just a half year to year's subsistance for displaced workers and workers in declining industries?

Since many people in declining industries bounce in and out of UI year after year, can they be retrained or relocated through the UI system so that this cycle is broken?

The bill I am introducing today tries to provide increased flexibility—some increased personal choice—to help workers find a way out of declining industries, to find new careers, and to stay with firms temporarily in trouble.

Congress must consider the future of UI soon as the Federal supplemental compensation provisions expire this March. I hope that at that time some of the ideas contained in this bill can be enacted.●

H.R. 480

HON. G. WILLIAM WHITEHURST

OF VIRGINIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, January 28, 1985

● Mr. WHITEHURST. Mr. Speaker, as I have in previous Congresses, I have introduced legislation which would amend the United States Code to provide that the remarriage of a surviving spouse of a veteran after the age of 60 would not result in the termination of dependency and indemnity compensation. The bill number in this Congress is H.R. 480.

For the benefit of my colleagues, I am including at this point in the RECORD information which I have inserted in previous years, since the facts have not changed. The first item is a copy of the report sent to the chairman of the House Committee on Veterans' Affairs on May 18, 1978, by Max Cleland, who was at that time Administrator of the Veterans' Administration. He pointed out that the total cost for the fiscal years 1978 through 1983 would have been less than $10 million, and he indicated that the legislation had the administration's support.

The second item is an excerpt from the testimony before the Subcommittee on Compensation, Pension, Insurance and Memorial Affairs of the Veterans' Affairs Committee on April 30, 1980, by Max Beilke, legislative counsel for the National Association for Uniformed Services; NAUS also supported the provisions of my bill.

While the bill numbers have changed from Congress to Congress, there has been no change in the text of the legislation except that "widow" was changed to "surviving spouse."

H.R. 480 would bring the Veterans' Administration into line with the Social Security Administration, OPM, and the Department of Defense, and it seems to me to be a matter of simple equity to take this step to ensure fair and equitable treatment of surviving spouses of veterans, so that some fine elderly people will be permitted to live together in comfort and dignity—and legally married. I urge prompt and favorable action on this legislation.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

VETERANS' ADMINISTRATION, OFFICE OF ADMINISTRATOR OF VETERANS' AFFAIRS,
Washington, DC, May 18, 1978.

Hon. RAY ROBERTS,
Chairman, Committee on Veterans' Affairs, House of Representatives, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: We are pleased to respond to your request for a report on H.R. 1744, 95th Congress.

The bill would amend section 103 of title 38, United States Code, "to provide that remarriage of the widow of a veteran after age 60 shall not result in termination of dependency and indemnity compensation.

Prior to the enactment of Public Law 91-376, effective January 1, 1971, the remarriage of a widow(er) constituted a permanent bar to the payment of Veterans' Administration gratuitous benefits. The law (38 U.S.C. § 103(d), as amended by Public Law 91-376) allows the Veterans' Administration to restore those benefits when the spouse's remarriage terminates or is dissolved, absent fraud by either party or collusion. The veteran's spouse may therefore enter into a second marriage without fear of economic deprivation, should the second marriage prove to be short-lived. This provision of the current law proves especially benefical to older surviving spouses who tend to marry men or women of advanced years.

The purpose of H.R. 1744 is to extend the liberalization provided by Public Law 91-376 to the dependency and indemnity compenation program for surviving spouses.

When a surviving spouse of advanced age remarries, termination of dependency and indemnity compensation may impose severe financial hardship. The new spouse, similarly advanced in age, is generally preparing for or already retired. Such new spouse faces a reduction in income and may be unable, because of age or disablement, to augment it. The remarried, aged surviving spouse also in many instances is precluded from employment to supplement the loss of dependency and indemnity compensation. H.R. 1744 would provide remedial action to retain for surviving spouses, age 60 or over, entitlement to dependency and indemnity compensation at an economic level at least comparable to that which existed prior to the remarriage.

We observe that the bill employs the term "widow" of a veteran. We believe that, if further consideration is given to this measure, a technical correction may be required to change the term "widow" to "surviving spouse," in order to conform with other recent enactments attempting to eliminate any reference to the gender of a surviving spouse.

Assuming an effective date of October 1, 1978, the estimated 5-year costs of H.R. 1744, if enacted is as follows:

Fiscal year:	Cost (in thousands)
1979	$1,556
1980	1,646
1981	1,716
1982	1,801
1983	1,887

In view of the foregoing, the Veterans' Administration favors enactment of H.R. 1744.

This will also serve as a report on H.R. 2893, 95th Congress, an identical measure.

Advice has been received from the Office of Management and Budget that there is no objection to the presentation of this report from the standpoint of the Administration's program.

Sincerely,

MAX CLELAND,
Administrator.

EXCERPT FROM TESTIMONY BY MAX BEILKE

Eligibility to DIC terminates upon remarriage of the surviving spouse, but can be reinstated if that marriage is terminated. NAUS believes that it should not terminate if marriage takes place after the surviving spouse's 60th birthday. Current benefits to recipients of social security, military and civilian survivor benefit plans, and the Retired Serviceman's Family Protection Plan do not terminate if remarriage takes place after age 60. H.R. 809, introduced by Rep. G. William Whitehurst (Va.-2-R), would allow DIC recipients to remarry after age 60 without loss of benefits. H.R. 809 has 78 cosponsors and is a resubmission of H.R. 1744 on which the 95th Congress failed to take action. H.R. 1744 had the favorable endorsement of the Veterans Administration.

Senate Committee Print No. 14, 95th Congress, 2d Session, dated January 31, 1978 stated on page 146 that remarriage rate of DIC recipients occurred at a less than one percent rate. Of those that did remarry, 16 percent were over age 60. That computes out to less than 16 for every 10,000 DIC recipients. Those that remarried ranged in ages 60 to 93.

NAUS urges this subcommittee and the full Veterans' Affairs Committee to give consideration to H.R. 809.

NAUS has received several letters and telephone calls, as I'm sure you have also, from widows over age 60 desiring to remarry, but cannot afford the loss of DIC benefits. This leaves them only the choice of continuing to live alone, or "living in sin." We do not believe that either choice is desirable, either for the individuals involved or for society as a whole.●

NATIONAL TECHNOLOGY FOUNDATION ACT OF 1985

HON. GEORGE E. BROWN, JR.

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, January 28, 1985

● Mr. BROWN of California. Mr. Speaker, the bill I am introducing today establishing the National Technology Foundation corresponds, with only minor revisions, to H.R. 481, introduced in the 98th Congress. The issues that motivated me and my colleagues to reintroduce this bill have neither been resolved nor diminished through our past legislative efforts. These issues loom larger than ever as we begin the new year and the new session of Congress.

We cannot continue to accept the decline in our national competitive position in the world market. Our trade deficit at the end of the third quarter of 1984 was roughly $33 billion, and has been increasing steadily; this trend shows no sign of abating. The causes of our present economic difficulties are many and complex. Some of the problems have been developing for more than a decade, and some are the result of recent shortsighted policies. Fundamental changes have been taking place in the world economy, and we have been slow in responding to them. International trade is becoming an increasingly important part of the world economy. Our economic leadership in the past resulted in large part from our lead in technology and industrial innovation. Now other countries are realizing the important role that technological developments will play in the coming decades. Other nations, such as Japan and France, have been using targeted research and development plans to challenge the United States in markets of both mature industries and new high-technology industries. This fundamental change in the world economy has forced us to search for new approaches in both the short and the long term to ensure that the United States may remain competitive.

Three important areas that require novel approaches are our investment in human resources, investment in new technologies, and our rules for economic cooperation and competition. These areas have received considerable attention in past Congresses, including hearings on the crucial topics of innovation and productivity enhancement by the Subcommittee on Science, Research and Technology on which I served in the 98th Congress. Other committees and subcommittees have also held hearings on related issues; the Office of Technological Assessment [OTA] has produced a number of relevant reports.

Through all of this activity, it has become clear that current efforts by the Federal Government to provide technically trained workers, to facilitate the development and commercialization of advances produced through our basic research efforts, or to enhance cooperative arrangements with our international trading partners are fragmented and insufficient. One obvious consequence is the magnitude of the economic problem currently facing the Nation; another, fraught with significance for our future, is the possibility that the innovative developments we need now to avoid even more serious economic problems later may simply not be happening.

Mr. Speaker, the bill I am introducing today will consolidate in a single Federal agency the responsibility of technology-related programs, now scattered throughout the Federal Government. It is one of various alternative approaches suggested in bills on technology policy in the 98th Congress, several of which were reviewed in hearings held in June 1984 by the Subcommittee on Science, Research and Technology under the title "Federal Organization for Technological Innovation." There is not, as yet, a developed consensus on the best course of action to achieve the kinds of enhancement in innovative technology and productivity that the Nation needs; this bill to establish a National Technology Foundation provides a vehicle by which we can continue to focus the discussion of alternatives.

As we consider alternatives, it is important to note that the administration is reported to be considering two reorganization initiatives that would have a significant impact on support for technology. These initiatives involve the creation of two new Cabinet-level agencies: a Department of International Trade and Industry [DITI] and a Department of Science and Technology. We welcome these proposals as indications of administration concern and leadership. I know that many Members of Congress from both parties would participate in discussing the best means to solve the problems all of us recognize. If these ideas are formally brought before the 99th Congress, I know that they will be seriously considered by the Members and will help shape our own discussion of support for technology, as well as of many other issues.

SPECIFIC NEEDS ADDRESSED BY THE NATIONAL TECHNOLOGY FOUNDATION

Links between the generation of knowledge and its use need to be strengthened. The National Technology Foundation would help tie progress in basic scientific research to useful applications.

The National Technology Foundation is proposed as an independent agency with eight main branches dealing with, first, small business; second, institutional and manpower development; third, technology policy and analysis; fourth, intergovernmental technology; fifth, engineering; sixth, national—problem-focused—programs; seventh, the National Bureau of Standards; and eighth, the Patent and Trademark Office and the National Technical Information Service. The agency would have programs transferred from the National Science Foundation [NSF] and from the Department of Commerce.

The act establishing NTF incorporates the two main features of Public Law 96-480, passed with bipartisan support of the 96th Congress, by putting the Office of Industrial Technology functions of Public Law 96-480 into the technology policy and analysis branch of the Foundation, and placing the responsibility for support of centers for industrial technology in the institutional and manpower development branch.

The governance of the Foundation would be handled by a Director and a National Technology Board patterned in organization, though not in composition, after the National Science Board. Key functions of the Board would be to establish the policies of the Foundation and review the Foundation's budget and programs. The Director would have all powers not assigned to the Board, and would be assisted by a deputy and eight assistant directors, one for each branch.

The bill requires close coordination between the National Technology Foundation and other agencies, particularly the National Science Foundation and Department of Commerce. The NTF and the NSF are to have interlocking directorates.

Authorizations in the bill include sums for fiscal years 1986, $480 million; 1987, $670 million, and 1988, $875 million. In each year the eight branches, plus an other purposes category, each have a line item; each branch grows over the 3 years of the authorization. For further information about the bill, I refer you to my introductory statement for H.R. 481 in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of January 6, 1983.

SUMMARY

The concept of a National Technology Foundation grows out of a continuing search for means to enhance the Nation's productivity and competitiveness by the Subcommittee on Science, Research and Technology during the past three Congresses, as well as studies by other committees and subcommittees and by the Office of Technological Assessment. The consolidation and enhancement of existing fragmented programs in a National Technology Foundation is an alternative deserving careful consideration, especially now when we urgently need to revitalize the American economy.

Mr. Speaker, I welcome any comments on, and support for, this legislative effort.●

CIVIL RIGHTS RESTORATION ACT OF 1985—H.R. 700

HON. PETER W. RODINO, JR.

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, January 28, 1985

● Mr. RODINO. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to join with many of my distinguished colleagues in introducing the Civil Rights Restoration Act of 1985. This bill, which enjoys widespread bipartisan support, will literally restore our Nation's civil rights laws to the scope and effectiveness that existed before the Supreme Court severely narrowed them in the Grove City case last year.

As an original author of these civil rights laws, I know well that Congress intended them to be applied broadly. It is now our responsibility to close any loopholes and to preserve the full extent of their antidiscrimination provisions.

The Civil Rights Restoration Act of 1985 ensures that Federal money will not be granted to institutions that practice discrimination on the basis of sex, race, age, national origin, or physical handicap. It states specifically that when a program or activity of an institution receives Federal funds, then all the operations of that institution must comply with the civil rights laws.

Its message, simply put, is that the Federal Government will not, directly or indirectly, subsidize discrimination.

What is at stake, in the end, is the integrity of our civil rights laws. Indeed, these laws embody the promise of American democracy. That promise must not be undermined by a narrow interpretation of our laws.

The Judiciary Committee plans to act quickly on this legislation as a top priority. We look forward to its prompt enactment.●

TAXING SENIOR CITIZENS

HON. DENNY SMITH

OF OREGON

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, January 28, 1985

● Mr. DENNY SMITH. Mr. Speaker, I have been concerned about the massive budget deficits that threaten to destroy our economy. For several years now I have been pushing for a 1-year freeze on all Government spending. Such a freeze would save the Government $35 billion in 1986 alone, and would give us an opportunity to identify what long-term structural changes can be made to reduce Government spending and cut the deficit.

Deficit reduction should not be achieved, however, by filling the Treasury's coffers with taxes from senior citizens on fixed incomes. I have always been opposed to the taxation of Social Security benefits. Therefore, last week I introduced two bills concerning the taxes recently imposed on certain benefits.

The first bill, H.R. 709, is an outright repeal of the provisions of the 1983 Social Security Act Amendments that instituted taxation on up to one-half of the benefits received by individuals earning over $25,000 or couples earning over $32,000.

The new tax penalizes individuals for past, unalterable decisions concerning savings and investments. Hard-working individuals who were able to set aside funds for their "Golden Years" are now being hit with an unanticipated tax by the Federal Government. The Government should be encouraging self-sufficiency in retirement years, not discouraging it.

The budget will never be balanced by simply raising taxes. Tax increases have only fueled further spending increases. How many times has this body approved tax increases on the promise of further spending cuts? Yet we never see the spending cuts.

While I favor an outright repeal of the taxation on benefits—and will push for such legislation—something must be done to ensure that while such legislation is still on the books, it is not applied to lower income Social Security recipients.

Under current law, the income thresholds for taxation of Social Security benefits aren't indexed for inflation. In 1984, 9 percent of Social Security recipients faced an increased tax liability because of the new law. The Social Security Administration estimates that by 1990, 17 percent of all recipients will be affected by these tax provisions. I have, therefore, introduced H.R. 708, to index the income thresholds.

There is much talk in this Chamber about compassion for the elderly in our Nation. I ask my colleagues to join me in turning talk into action by eliminating the taxes on benefits that the elderly earned throughout their working years.●

NEED FOR A BIPARTISAN COMMISSION ON THE DEFICIT

HON. CECIL (CEC) HEFTEL

OF HAWAII

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, January 28, 1985

● Mr. HEFTEL of Hawaii. Mr. Speaker, balancing the Federal budget remains our Nation's highest priority. Unfortunately, balancing the budget has proven to be an elusive goal and future trends show an increasing rather than declining budget deficit. If we are to maintain our economic recovery on a steady course, these deficits must be controlled. Developing a consensus among the many competing interests we in the Congress face has made the task of responsible budgeting increasingly difficult.

Mr. Speaker, our Nation desperately needs a comprehensive budget plan that will guide our economy through a recovery which stands to be compromised if we delay further action on the deficit. I invite my colleagues to join me in cosponsoring the House resolution I have introduced urging the President to establish a bipartisan commission to formulate a deficit reduction plan.

There's recent precedent for such a body. In January 1983 a bipartisan commission presented a plan to solve the Social Security funding crisis. The solution required compromise by all interested parties. Democrats and Republicans alike supported its proposals knowing that they represented the best efforts of men and women of different political persuasions and great expertise. In the same bipartisan spirit and through similar means, we can deal with our growing deficits now.

Mr. Speaker, the urgency of our deficit problem does not allow us to postpone work on its solution. The Nation needs a sound, well-reasoned deficit reduction plan on the table at the earliest possible time. A bipartisan commission on the deficit will move us closer to the goal of a balanced Federal budget and I urge my colleagues to join me in this effort.●

TRIBUTE TO BENNY O. LARSEN, EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR OF GUIDE DOGS FOR THE BLIND, INC.

HON. TOM LANTOS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, January 28, 1985

● Mr. LANTOS. Mr. Speaker, I wish to pay tribute today to Mr. Benny Larsen, who has been called the "elder statesman of Guide Dog Schools." Mr. Larsen is retiring now, after 25 years of service to the blind as head of one of the finest facilities providing guide dogs to help the visually impaired.

There are few examples of dedication that can equal that of Benny Larson. He has devoted over a quarter of a century to Guide Dogs for the Blind, in San Rafael, CA, where he began as a trainer in 1958 and served as executive director from 1969 to 1985.

A native of Copenhagen, Denmark, Benny has always believed in service to others. He proved this during World War II as a member of the Danish Marines and through participation in the Danish underground resistance movement.

In 1958 Benny came to the United States with his wife, his young son and his dreams. He believed in the concept of America as the land to opportunity and determined that he would use that opportunity to help others.

For Benny Larsen, a lover of dogs and people, the most logical way to do that was by applying his vast knowledge of the dog world toward service to humans. He had trained guide dogs, police dogs and Government dogs in Denmark and, now, in his new country, Benny lent his talents and experience to a rapidly growing Guide Dog Program.

He became a California State-licensed instructor on January 5, 1959, and quickly rose through the ranks of the Guide Dog organization, from training supervisor, to assistant director, and finally, to executive director. His adopted country became his own when, on February 18, 1964, he became a naturalized American citizen.

Throughout the years his advice and expertise have been sought by Government agencies, service organizations for the blind, and those interested in animal behavior and training throughout the world. His sensitivity to animals and people has enabled him to bring out the greatest potential of those he served and who worked for him over the years.

A teacher, in the truest sense of the word, Benny Larsen's wise leadership has made Guide Dogs for the Blind one of the most highly respected service organizations for the blind anywhere in the world today. He has legitimized the role of the dog as a service partner to humans and he has influenced the ongoing development of the guide dog movement in a profound way.

Benny Larsen's mark on the guide dog community is one of dignified and compassionate service leadership, combining faith in man's best friend with belief in human potential.●

SUPPORT FOR THE REINTRODUCTION OF THE NATIONAL TECHNOLOGY FOUNDATION ACT

HON. DOUG WALGREN

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, January 28, 1985

● Mr. WALGREN. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to join Congressman GEORGE BROWN in the reintroduction of the National Technology Foundation Act. This legislation represents a partial but important answer to our mounting trade deficits. It also places the Federal Government in a position to be more helpful to American companies wishing to compete at home and abroad with products based on new technology.

The National Technology Foundation [NTF], called for by this legislation, would provide a governmental focal point for applied research and technology development. The National Bureau of Standards, the Office of Patents and Trademarks, portions of the National Science Foundation dealing with engineering, and various other governmental offices concerned with innovation in technology would be gathered together in one organization. Over a period of 3 years, major offices dealing with small business, institutional and manpower development, engineering, and national programs would be added. At that point we would have an independent Government agency whose primary purposes were to promote applied research and facilitate the use of Government research results by the private sector as new commercial products.

We have delayed much too long in setting up a technology foundation. Had the foundation been created when this bill was first introduced four Congresses ago, we would be well on the way to matching the efforts of Japanese and European governments in supporting technological innovation. Instead, the Japanese have recorded the largest favorable balance of trade in history while the United States registered the worst. I urge my colleagues to rally behind an idea that can make a real contribution to our economy in the future.●

INTERNATIONAL ADVISORY COMMISSION FOR THE CARIBBEAN REGION

HON. MERVYN M. DYMALLY

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, January 28, 1985

● Mr. DYMALLY. Mr. Speaker, I would like to call to the attention of my colleagues in the U.S. House of Representatives a matter of vital significance to the future of United States-Caribbean relations. For many years, the social, agricultural, educational and economic problems which have confronted the Caribbean region have not been sufficiently addressed by U.S. policy. The President's Caribbean Basin Initiative [CBI] has defined United States-Caribbean relations in business and strategic terms; however, a serious gap remains in the areas of development and infrastructure improvements. I am offering a vehicle to fill that gap.

As a former citizen of Trinidad and an interested American, I welcome the President's desire to solidify United States-Caribbean ties. Nevertheless, there is confusion in the Caribbean as to the best possible American-Caribbean relationship. The current development plans, offered by a variety of governments, development banks, and academics, sometimes contradict, or at best, complement each other. Indeed, there is no regional plan to assault the basic infrastructure problems of the islands.

Responding to the requests of a number of Caribbean government leaders, development experts, and others, I have introduced legislation to create an international commission. It would serve as the prime institution for promotion economic cooperation and development in the Caribbean, defining development plans, providing an international forum for Caribbean development issues, and offering expert advice to donor-aid countries, such as the United States. Consisting of the Caribbean region nations, the United States, and other interested countries, the commission would include delegates from the U.S. Congress in addition to an American commissioner. The U.S. representatives, as in the case of all other representatives, would report their findings to their respective governments for action.

Without question, this commission represents the type of cooperation and planning coordination that has been needed in the Caribbean for decades. It symbolizes the best possible approach in harmonious United States-Caribbean relations. And it is my honor and privilege to introduce a program that promises a peaceful path to the 21st century and beyond.●

THE 67TH ANNIVERSARY OF THE UKRAINIAN INDEPENDENCE PROCLAMATION

HON. SILVIO O. CONTE

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, January 28, 1985

● Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, the Soviet Union is made up of a number of diverse nationalities and ethnic groups. Each has a culture, identity and history which separates it from the rest of the Nation. No people have a stronger sense of national identity than the Ukrainians. They are proud, hard-working people, who have tried to maintain their own individuality and integrity in a system which tries to mold them into conformity. There are, however, people living in the Ukraine who will not be silenced by the repression of a system which ignores their individual rights. These men and women are willing to risk their lives and undergo harsh prison sentences for an ideal. The ideal is that all men and women should be allowed to live free of constraints on their individual rights.

Oleksiy Tykhy, Yuriy Lytvyn, Valery Marchenko, and Oleksiy Nikityn join the list of countless others who have paid the ultimate price for their belief in a better way of life. These brave people died during 1984 in Soviet prisons; their only crime was pursuing a policy contrary to the views of the Soviet leadership. On January 22, the Ukrainian Congress Committee of America commemorated the 67th anniversary of the proclamation of independence in Ukraine. The tragic deaths of these courageous individuals last year indicates that the commitment embodied in that proclamation burns on. In this regard, I recently sent a letter to Mr. Chernenko decrying the deaths of these brave people, and I also asked that his government make a new and lasting commitment to the Helsinki accords. The time has come for the Soviet Union to guarantee human rights to the people of the Ukraine and all members of its society.●

HON. SAMUEL S. STRATTON

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, January 28, 1985

● Mr. STRATTON. Mr. Speaker, January 22, 1985, marked the 67th anniversary of the declaration of independence by the Ukrainian Central Rada, the Parliament of the Ukrainian people. I am pleased to have this opportunity to rise in the House, as I have in previous years, to commemorate this anniversary and that brief, yet unforgotten period of freedom for the Ukrainian people, and to reaffirm my continued support and dedication to their fight to regain that freedom.

The Ukraine is one of a growing list of captive nations which has fallen, tragically and violently, under the control of the Soviet Union. The people of the captive nations have suffered severe deprivation. Not only have they been denied the right of self-determination, freedom of expression, and freedom of movement, but actual material well-being.

What happens under the Soviet regime, behind the Iron Curtain, is often obscured to those of us in the free world. News of our friends and families in captive lands is often kept from us, as we are currently reminded by the cloud of mystery that shrouds Afghanistan and that country's fight against Soviet invaders. An earlier, devastating example of this silence was the Ukrainian Famine of 1932–33, whereby the forced relocation and collectivization of the Ukrainian peasants and the confiscation and export of their grain caused a disastrous famine that claimed as many as 7 million lives. However, little is known about this famine, and of course, the Soviets deny the whole thing.

But progress was made last year in shedding light on this crime. Following on the heels of the 50th anniversary of the Ukrainian famine, Congress passed legislation, which I cosponsored, to establish a Commission on the Ukrainian Famine to study the causes and extent of this calamity. Congress appropriated $400,000 for the Commission and has required that a report be submitted to Congress in 2 years and be published for the public record. I supported this legislation from the start, and was glad to see it passed late last year. I look forward to the establishment of the Commission and wish them well in their study. I know it will not be an easy or a pleasant task, but it is our duty and our reponsibility to know and to pursue the truth.

We must know what happened during the Ukrainian famine, not only to record an honest history of the people of the Ukraine, but also to understand and perhaps fight its recurrence. Sadly, famine seems still to be the result, if not the partner, of totalitarianism. The Soviet-backed Marxist government of Ethiopia has shown little concern for the plight of the people of that country who are dying by the thousands. Americans and people of other free nations have responded vigorously and generously to the famine victims, yet the Ethiopian Government has even interfered with our humanitarian aid efforts.

So today I want to again commemorate the brief moment of independence for the Ukraine, and to rededicate myself to the fight for freedom and for a decent life for people of the Ukraine for all people.●

INFORMATION SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY ACT OF 1985

HON. GEORGE E. BROWN, JR.

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, January 28, 1985

● Mr. BROWN of California. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing the Information Science and Technology Act of 1985. Joining me as cosponsors of this bill are the chairman of the Committee on Science and Technology, DON FUQUA, and DOUG WALGREN, the chairman of the Subcommittee on Science, Research and Technology, in the 98th Congress. This proposed legislation is an updated version of a bill I introduced originally in the 97th Congress, H.R. 3137, and reintroduced in the 98th Congress as H.R. 480. The Subcommittee on Science, Research and Technology has held hearings on this bill, and the subcommittee's recommendations and an analysis of the hearings prepared by the Congressional Research Service [CRS] are available through the subcommittee.

Since I introduced this legislation, the computer and computer-based national information systems have come to pervade nearly every facet of our Nation's life—we can truly speak of the United States as an "information society." From cash registers and supermarket checkouts to 24-hour banking machines and electronic funds transfers; from memory-equipped telephones to microprocessor-controlled appliances from intelligent terminals, word processors and personal computers to supercomputers, robots and automated factories; and from bibliographic data bases to communications networks; computers and computer-controlled communications systems have converged in a conglomerate of technologies that are rapidly changing American habits of work, finances, education, and leisure. The information pipeline has become a mighty stream.

Information technology and policy issues have not gone unnoticed by Congress. At the request of various House and Senate committees, the Office of Technology Assessment [OTA] has completed or is conducting a variety of studies:

"Computer-Based National Information Systems: Technology and Public Issues," completed in September 1981;

"Radiofrequency Use and Management: Impacts from the World Administrative Radio Conference of 1979", completed in January 1982;

"Alternatives for a National Computerized Criminal History System," completed in October 1982;

"Informational Technology and American Education," completed in November 1982;

"Computerized Manufacturing Automation: Employment, Education and the Workplace," completed in April 1984;

"Effects of Information Technology on Financial Services Systems," completed in September 1984;

"Information Technology Research and Development: Critical Trends and Issues," due to be issued in February 1985;

"Intellectual Property Rights in an Age of Electronics and Information";

"Federal Government Information Technology: Congressional Oversight and Civil Liberties"; and

"Information and Communication Technologies and the Office."

In the 1st session of the 98th Congress alone, 255 bills were introduced dealing with this area, and over the entire 98th Congress 12 bills on this subject were enacted into law. And yet Congress—and, in fact, the Federal Government as a whole—continues to lack a coherent information policy, or even mechanisms for policy coordination and implementation.

Because of the rapid pace of developments in information science and technology, and because of the threats to our international competitive stance created by the development of supportive policies in the countries that are our most active trading partners, the likely consequences of our lack of a coherent policy in this area are highly negative. We must not risk losing our competitive edge, our leadership, in information science and technology; continued increases in productivity in all economic sectors depend on our continued ability to innovate, and information technology has been (and will continue to be) the source of our major innovations.

As hearings and studies on information policy over the last two Congresses have shown, however, we still lack a national consensus on whether we should have a national information policy, much less on what that policy should be and how it should be implemented. To develop such a national consensus, we need to establish a forum in which all the stakeholders can meet and articulate their needs and concerns. The Institute for Information Policy and Research, proposed in the bill I am introducing today, is one of several alternatives for such a forum. The Subcommittee on Science, Research and Technology will be evaluating this and other suggestions for means to attain a national information science and technology agenda. My purpose in reintroducing this bill in essentially unmodified form is to provide a vehicle for continued discussion.

I would like to include here an excerpt from a keynote address by Lewis M. Branscomb, vice president and chief scientist at IBM and the immediate past chairman of the National Science Board. This keynote address was delivered at a workshop held on April 14, 1983, under the sponsorship of the Numerical Data Advisory Board of the National Academy of Sciences, the House Committee on Science and Technology and the Congressional Research Service. This workshop was called "Improving R&D Productivity: The Federal Role." Dr. Branscomb's comments illustrate some of the bases for a national information policy, and are especially noteworthy because they are offered by a person with extensive experience in industry, government, and academia.

In his address, Dr. Branscomb outlined six elements of a national science and tech data policy:

1. Productivity of the research and development process, half of which is sustained with Federal funds, should be a major Federal concern. Agencies sustaining the science and technology infrastructure should be held accountable for increasing R&D productivity.

2. Funding of research to produce generally useful knowledge carries with it a responsibility, not only to insure publication of results, but also their evaluation and preparation in a form suitable for application and the assurance of public access at reasonable cost. Again, all agencies funding research should be held accountable.

3. The private sector should be encouraged to take an increasing, but not exclusive, role in the provision of access to evaluated data, but commercial companies cannot be expected to finance the depth of scholarship required for data analysis and evaluation. That must be viewed as the obligation of the sponsor of the original research. User fees for the allocated cost of access are appropriate for Government—provided information systems.

4. Unrestricted access to unclassified data, generated at public expense, is a cardinal requirement for a dynamic, high-technology economy. The desire to frustrate technical progress by hostile nations must not be allowed to impede the competitiveness of our own economy in its dependence on available scientific and technical data.

5. It is strongly in the U.S.' interest to make agreements with other nations, to share the costs and scarce skills for data evaluation and access. We should take the lead in this worldwide cooperative effort, as, indeed, we have done in the past. For, as the nation with the most innovative economy, most dependent upon being innovative in the future, we stand to gain the most from global cooperation.

6. The task of evaluating and preparing for application published scientific and technical data of general utility is a joint responsibility of user institutions in the private sector, private information vendors, professional associations and societies, and agencies funding, producing and using research. Some national body with Federal and private participation should monitor the adequacy of this science and technology information system and provide policy guidance to the Federal agencies and recommendations to the private sector.

Mr. Speaker, these remarks deal with only one aspect of the information science and technology policy issues, that of the organization of information; but the remarks apply with equal force to many of the issues facing us in our "information society." I ask my colleagues in Congress, as I have done before, to move quickly to address some of the important concerns brought upon us by the information revolution. At the very least, we must work together to establish a forum within which all the stakeholders can join a national debate. I look forward to working with other Members and other committees to meet the legislative challenge posed by these issues.

A national information policy will happen, whether we come together to bring it about or not; but without a framework for national discussion and coordination, it will be haphazard and self-contradictory and thus operate against the Nation's own best interests. I ask my colleagues again whether our Government, and this Congress in particular, can be foresighted enough to take a considered and coordinated approach to information science and technology. I continue to hope and believe that we will, and invite my colleagues to join with me and make that hope a reality.●

SENATE COMMITTEE MEETINGS

Title IV of Senate Resolution 4, agreed to by the Senate on February 4, 1977, calls for establishment of a system for a computerized schedule of all meetings and hearings of Senate committees, subcommittees, joint committees, and committees of conference. This title requires all such committees to notify the Office of the Senate Daily Digest—designated by the Rules Committee—of the time, place, and purpose of the meetings, when scheduled, and any cancellations or changes in the meetings as they occur.

As an additional procedure along with the computerization of this information, the Office of the Senate Daily Digest will prepare this information for printing in the Extensions of Remarks section of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD on Monday and Wednesday of each week.

Any changes in committee scheduling will be indicated by placement of an asterisk to the left of the name of the unit conducting such meetings.

Meetings scheduled for Tuesday, January 29, 1985, may be found in the Daily Digest of today's RECORD.

SENATE—Tuesday, January 29, 1985

(Legislative day of Monday, January 21, 1985)

The Senate met at 2 p.m., on the expiration of the recess, and was called to order by the President pro tempore [Mr. THURMOND].

PRAYER

The Chaplain, the Reverend Richard C. Halverson, D.D., offered the following prayer:

Let us pray.

Gracious God, Lord of Creation—as our eyes are made to see—our ears to hear—our fingers to touch and grip—our hearts are made to love You and one another. Save us from preoccupation with the material to the neglect of the spiritual. Forgive our secularism which ignores holiness—our earthiness which makes us indifferent to You, O God. Enable us to see that our relationship with You, our worship of You, our love for You are fundamental to authentic humanness. Grant us the grace to order our priorities, giving You preeminence in our lives so that rancor and alienation may be replaced by love, frustration by fulfillment. In the name of our Lord. Amen.

RECOGNITION OF THE ACTING MAJORITY LEADER

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The acting majority leader is recognized.

SENATE SCHEDULE

Mr. SIMPSON. I thank you, Mr. President pro tempore.

Under the special order, the two leaders have a period of 10 minutes each. There will be special orders for not to exceed 15 minutes each for Senators PROXMIRE and SPECTER.

Following the special orders just identified, there will be a period for the transaction of routine morning business not to extend beyond the hour of 3 p.m. with statements therein limited to 5 minutes each. Following the conclusion of morning business, the Senate will go into executive session to consider the nomination of James A. Baker, to be Secretary of the Treasury under a 2-hour time limitation. A rollcall vote is then expected on the nomination of Mr. Baker.

Mr. President, at this time I do not have any need for leadership time, and I note that none of my colleagues wishes a portion of that 10-minute period.

I reserve the remainder of that time, and I yield to the minority leader.

RECOGNITION OF THE MINORITY LEADER

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SYMMS). Under the previous order, the Democratic leader is recognized.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished assistant Republican leader.

SENATOR BAUCUS ON UNITED STATES-JAPAN TRADE

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, Senator MAX BAUCUS from Montana is known to his colleagues in the Senate—and the people of his State—as a leader in the effort to open the Japanese market to American goods. Senator BAUCUS shares my conviction that we must work to reduce the staggering trade imbalance between these two great nations. Last year alone, the United States experienced a trade shortfall with Japan that is estimated at $35 billion—the largest trade gap between any two nations in history.

I am pleased that Senator BAUCUS will be joining with Senator BENTSEN and the other members of the Democratic Trade Policy Working Group to examine this problem and suggest possible solutions.

Recently, MAX BAUCUS traveled to Japan to meet with Prime Minister Nakasone and other senior officials of the Japanese Government and business community to emphasize the importance of greater access for American goods. His remarks to Japanese business leaders provide an excellent statement of the problems and opportunities of United States-Japan trade. I encourage my colleagues to read Senator BAUCUS' thoughtful observations, and I ask unanimous consent that his speech of January 18, 1985 entitled "United States-Japanese Trade Relations: A View From the Senate," be printed in the RECORD in its entirety.

There being no objection, the speech was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

UNITED STATES-JAPANESE TRADE RELATIONS: A VIEW FROM THE SENATE

(By Senator Max Baucus)

INTRODUCTION

Watakushi wa Big Sky no Montana-Shuu kara kimashita Baucus jo-in gi-in de gozaimus. (I am Senator Baucus, from the "Big Sky" State of Montana.)

When someone from my state of Montana visits Japan, he quickly notices both differences and similarities.

First, the differences:

Japan has a population of 120 million people; Montana, though the same size, has only 800,000.

Japan was settled more than a thousand years ago; Montana became a state less than 100 years ago.

Japan's economy is based on manufacturing; Montana's is based on agriculture and the development of natural resources.

But the similarities are much more important. Montanans and Japanese are forward-looking people. We see our futures linked during what Ambassador Mansfield calls "The Coming Century of the Pacific."

That's why there are so many ties between Montana and Japan:

Some of these ties are political. Right now, a young Kumamoto bureaucrat is working in the Montana Governor's office. And next month, Ambassador Okawara will deliver the annual "Mansfield Lecture" at the University of Montana.

Some of these ties are cultural. Many of Japan's greatest pottery craftsmen have studied in Montana. And when Japan began participating in the "Friendship Force" citizen exchange program, the first trip was to Montana.

Some of these ties are economic. Mitsui has a major headquarters in Great Falls, Montana. And several joint ventures are planned or underway.

Because of the close ties between Montana and Japan, we hope, as a Montana newspaper recently wrote, to "cement . . . [a] Japanese-American friendship of an enduring kind."

I'm happy to report that the close relationship between Montana and Japan is a fair representation of the overall relationship between the United States and Japan. Our two countries are the world's largest trading partners; we exchanged over $80 billion worth of goods last year. And our alliance remains the foundation for peace and security in the Pacific Basin.

THE TRADE CRISIS

But there's another side to the coin. Despite the continued strength of the U.S.-Japanese relationship, there's danger ahead . . . for both our bilateral relationship and the overall international trading system.

The danger lies in America's huge trade deficit.

This deficit is a new development. For most of our history, America ran trade surpluses. In fact, beginning in 1893, we ran trade surpluses every year for three quarters of a century.

But, in the mid-1970's, this changed. Our surplus declined, then disappeared. We began running trade deficits.

In the past few years, these deficits have grown dramatically. When the U.S. economy recovered in 1983, we pulled other industrialized countries along. We imported huge quantities of goods from Japan, Germany, and others. As a result, these countries recovered from the recession. But America's trade deficit almost doubled, from $32 billion in 1982 to $58 billion in 1983.

Since then, our trade deficit has grown steadily larger, reaching $130 billion last year and perhaps $200 billion this year.

● This "bullet" symbol identifies statements or insertions which are not spoken by the Member on the floor.

These deficits are not just an abstract problem for economists. America's shift from being a net exporting nation to a net importing nation has cost millions of jobs, affecting virtually every state.

For example, Butte, Montana, was once the copper mining capital of the world. Today, every mine has closed. All 13,000 workers have lost their jobs to workers in Chile, Peru and Zaire. And Butte, once our proudest city, has hit hard times. Its population has declined from 100,000 to 30,000 people.

Butte, is not an isolated example. Hundreds of other communities, all across the United States, have suffered the same fate, whether they produce steel, autos, or some other product.

Americans are reacting with frustration and anger. Many of them believe America is being victimized by one-way free trade: acting the international "patsy."

A Montana cattle rancher expressed these feelings well. During a Finance Committee hearing about Japan's beef quota, she said that "there is something very wrong here. I can go to a Datsun dealer in Billings and buy a nice little pickup truck for an attractive price . . . But when it comes to offering my tasty Montana beef at a very competitive price to the Japanese worker who made the pickup truck, the Japanese Government says no. This just isn't fair."

Senators and Congressmen are hearing similar complaints day-after-day, covering industry-after-industry.

THE POLITICAL IMPACT

When the American people feel this strongly about something, their feelings are reflected in Washington. This means that the huge U.S. trade deficit has serious political ramifications.

Let me describe some of these ramifications, as we begin the second Reagan Administration and the 99th Congress.

On the surface, there's been little change.

In the Senate, the Republicans retain control, under moderate, practical leaders.

In the House, the Democrats retain control, and power is shifting to moderate leaders who emphasize economic growth.

President Reagan has been re-elected with broad popular support. He'll continue to pursue moderate economic expansion. He'll attempt to reduce the U.S. budget deficit, primarily by cutting spending.

On trade matters, the President will continue his free-trade policy. He'll emphasize our key bilateral relationships, as his recent meeting in Los Angeles with Prime Minister Nakasone showed. And he'll resist protectionism in Congress.

But the President's trade policy is only part of the story. In the second Reagan term, Congress will play an equally important role.

No matter how personally popular he is, the President is now a "lame duck." He cannot run for reelection. This reduces the power and leverage that he can exert over the Republican party, because many Republican leaders want to enhance their own political reputations and begin running to succeed President Reagan in 1988.

What's more, the Republicans risk losing the control of the Senate. Twenty-two of the 34 Senators running for reelection in 1986 are Republicans. Such vulnerability makes it likely that Republican Senators will follow policies oriented more toward their own state constituencies than toward the President's agenda.

Given this situation, President Reagan cannot dominate the policy debate like he did during his first term. He must work more closely with Congress, building consensus.

This has already begun to happen. A few weeks ago, the White House disclosed details of the President's 1986 budget proposal. It quickly became apparent that Congress would reject the proposal and draft its own. In response, the President signaled that he would acquiesce.

Trade issues will follow a similar pattern, with Congress playing a more active role than usual.

Therefore, it's important to recognize the trends in Congress, keeping in mind that, as an institution, Congress is responsive to public opinion.

As a member of the Senate Finance Committee, which has jurisdiction over trade issues, I want to describe four especially significant trends.

The first trend is a greater interest in international trade.

For a long time, trade issues were considered esoteric. Only a few key Senators got involved in them.

That's no longer true. During the last Congress, 809 trade bills were introduced—one-third more than during the previous Congress.

This shows that many Senators and Congressmen are becoming concerned about America's international trade position.

The second trend is increased frustration with foreign trade barriers. Many such barriers have existed for years, and have been the subject of extensive negotiations. But the flood of imports puts these barriers in a different light, making them powerful symbols of unfair trade.

A Japanese proverb says that the "sack of a man's patience is tied with a slip knot." Well, many Senators and Congressmen are losing their patience with foreign trade barriers, in Japan and elsewhere. As a result, Congress will monitor trade negotiations closely, demanding quick, clear progress.

The third trend is increased frustration with the multilateral trading system.

Since 1948, there's been a general consensus, in the U.S., that the multilateral trading system serves America's national interest. There's been broad Congressional support for the economic sacrifices necessary to maintain the system.

But with our trade deficit so high, many Americans are prepared to reconsider the basic utility of the multilateral trading system. Consequently, there are many proposals to amend our basic trade laws, including our "escape clause" and countervailing duty laws.

And there is a subtle shift from multilateralism to bilateralism. For example, in the trade act Congress passed last year, we did not extend the President's authority to negotiate multilateral trade agreements. But we did authorize him to negotiate bilateral "reciprocity" and to negotiate a specific "Free Trade Agreement" with Israel.

This may portend a general shift in emphasis, from multilateral negotiations to selective bilateral negotiations in which it's clear that each specific agreement will serve America's economic interest.

Finally, and perhaps most significantly, there's an increased willingness to consider dramatic, short-run solutions to the trade deficit problem. An example is an across-the-board import surcharge. Some major U.S. business groups have proposed such a surcharge. It will receive serious study, especially since it may be legal under the GATT provision permitting temporary measures to correct a severe balance of payments shortfall.

Don't misunderstand me. I'm not endorsing these trends. I'm just warning you about them, because they could endanger the U.S.-Japanese relationship.

But there's hope. To paraphrase the author, Charles Dickens, "this is a picture of the future as it could be, not as it must be." We can avert the danger. But it will take hard work by those of us, in both countries, who understand the importance of our relationship. We must rise to the challenges—the challenges for America, and the challenges for Japan.

THE CHALLENGES FOR AMERICA

What are the challenges for America?

In the sweep of history, nations rise and fall. There's no guarantee of continued success. This is as true of America as of any other country. To maintain our position in world affairs, we must put our own house in order.

Our first and most important task is reducing the federal budget deficit, which is increasing by $22 million an hour. I agree completely with the point some of my Japanese friends have made this week. An important cause of America's trade deficit is our budget deficit, which inflates the international value of the dollar to make imports cheaper and exports more expensive.

It won't be easy to reduce the budget deficit. It will take painful political choices. Many worthy spending programs will have to be cut or even eliminated. For example, Montana is a farm state. We face potential cuts in agricultural subsidies. I think Montana farmers may be willing to accept such cuts, but only as long as they know that the cuts are a part of a comprehensive program, of shared sacrifice, that brings the budget deficit under control.

Democrats and Republicans alike, who have supported various spending programs in the past, understand that cuts must be made. For example, I've joined with another Democratic Senator and two Republican Senators to propose a freeze on all Federal spending, saving $170 billion over three years. This freeze has attracted substantial bipartisan support. So have other similar proposals in the House and Senate. Overall, there are good signs that Congress will pass a major deficit reduction package this year. That should improve our trade position considerably—across all product lines.

America must also face a second challenge: increasing productivity and expanding worldwide markets of our products.

The economic world constantly changes. As it does, companies must adapt: to new consumer tastes, to new competition, and to new technology. If they don't adapt, they perish.

In this respect, we can continue to learn from Japan.

During my visit this week, I've been impressed by the sense of "meichi"—or corporate mission—that I saw at the Matsushita plant in Osaka. I've been impressed by the worker innovation I saw at the Toyota Plant in Nagoya, where a worker had suggested installing a small railcar to increase the mobility of his work station. And I've been impressed by the ability of Japanese companies to market their products all around the world, by adapting to local consumer tastes, marketing systems, and legal requirements.

American companies can adopt many of these practices. For example, Mr. Yamamoto of Toyota told me that Toyota's system of efficient automobile production has been "100% transferable" to the Toyota-GM plant in California. American companies can compete. But, in some cases, they simply must try harder.

Finally, America must face a third challenge, resisting protectionism.

With the trade deficit so high, Senators and Congressmen face great protectionist pressure. It will take a special effort to explain the importance of an open trading system and resist the pressure for short-term, protectionist solutions.

Many American political leaders are willing to make this effort, but only as long as we know that our trading partners share our commitment, and are prepared to meet their challenge.

THE CHALLENGE FOR JAPAN

What is the challenge for Japan?

At the risk of being presumptuous, let me present an American view.

The challenge for Japan is formidable: to assume a greater role supporting the international trading system, and, in particular, to open its markets wider to other countries' products.

Let me explain.

Forty years ago, it may have been appropriate for Japan to embrace the "Yoshida Doctrine" and become a kind of Asian Switzerland, concentrating on economic development and avoiding international political responsibility.

But the role and responsibilities of nations change. Today, Japan is not Switzerland. Rather, Japan is the world's second-leading economic power: with a projected growth rate higher than any other industrialized nation; producing more steel, cars, and robots than any other nation; and home to many of the world's largest corporations, including Toyota, Matsushita, and Mitsubishi.

Japan has achieved this powerful position largely because of the open post-war trading system, which enabled Japan to sell its fine products throughout the world, especially in the United States. For example, last year, Japan exported $138 billion worth of goods, which accounted for almost 10% of worldwide exports. In fact, it's no exaggeration to say that Japan has benefitted from the open trading system more than any other nation.

Now, that system is badly strained, by huge trade deficits and the political friction they create.

Many Americans see Japan as a major culprit. They see Japan's $35 billion bilateral surplus. They believe, with some justification, that Japan wants one-way free trade. It wants open markets for products in which Japan enjoys a comparative advantage, such as cars, steel, televisions, and VCRs. But it wants closed markets for products in which America enjoys a comparative advantage, such as processed forest products, beef, telecommunications equipment, satellites, pharmaceuticals, and medical equipment.

Let me give you an example.

Half of the income in Western Montana comes from forest products, such as plywood, laminated lumber, and kraft linerboard.

Japan is an attractive market for these products. In fact, in some recent years there have been more housing starts in Japan than in the United States.

U.S. companies have been working hard to sell in Japan. They've opened Tokyo offices. They've learned the language. And they've changed some of their manufacturing standards, by doing things like adding a special tint to the color of kraft linerboard (which has been done by a company in Missoula, Montana).

U.S. forest products companies are selling more than $1 billion worth of forest products in Japan each year. They should be selling even more. But they're blocked by Japan's two-tier tariff system. Japan permits logs to be imported freely, but subjects processed products to tariffs as high as 20%. As a result, many processing jobs that could be in Missoula, Montana are protected in Sapporo or Osaka, Japan.

This two-tier tariff system reduces potential U.S. sales by more than $500 million a year. Granted, that's only a small part of our bilateral trade deficit. But, to the forest products industry and to the workers in Montana and elsewhere whose livelihood depends on that industry, it's a very significant amount.

This is only one example. You've all heard many more.

So what's my point?

Given the stake Japan has in the open trading system, and the friction Japan's trade barriers create, Japan must assume a political role equal to its economic and cultural roles.

Japan has already begun to do so in some areas, by increasing defense expenditures and providing aid to developing nations. And Japan has invested heavily overseas, thereby strengthening economic ties.

But I respectfully submit that that's not enough. The trading system is under great strain. And Japan, which has a trade surplus with every industrialized nation, should assume a greater political role maintaining public support for that system.

It's not enough to call for a new GATT round. Japan must lead, and assume some of the sacrifices leadership demands. As the Keidanren itself has said, "At this critical juncture Japan must proceed in opening its markets in a thorough manner."

This won't be easy. As a public servant, I understand the political problems that market liberalization can cause. I've met with Japanese ranchers and lumbermen. I know how strongly they feel.

But you can't have it both ways. You can't ask the American people and the American government to overcome domestic political pressure, unless the Japanese people and the Japanese government are willing to do the same, by opening Japan's markets and helping the affected Japanese industries adjust to economic change.

In this regard, I was delighted that Prime Minister Nakasone agreed, two weeks ago, to make "further market opening efforts," especially in the key sectors of forest products, telecommunications equipment, medical equipment, and pharmaceuticals.

I know that Congress will watch these negotiations carefully. If they are concluded quickly, and result in substantially increased U.S. sales in all four sectors, it would be a major step in the right direction. It would benefit producers and consumers in both our countries. But, more important, it would benefit generations to come, around the world, by strengthening the international trading system for the critical tests ahead.

But, let me repeat. Both of our countries must meet their respective challenges. America, as well as Japan. If either of us fails, trade tensions will increase and our relationship could deteriorate dramatically.

We can't afford to let that happen.

CONCLUSION

In conclusion, let me say how much I have enjoyed your hospitality.

The Kezai Koho Center, and especially my good friend, Mr. Kurisaka, have been gracious hosts and good teachers. I have learned a lot about Japan.

This is my third visit. Each time, I become more convinced that, as President Reagan said, "There is no relationship more important than that between the United States and Japan."

And I become more convinced of the simple wisdom of the Montana rancher I mentioned before.

She testified before the Finance Committee during the negotiations over Japan's beef quota. As you know, those negotiations sometimes were acrimonious.

But there was no acrimony in her message. She understood the fundamental importance of the special relationship between the United States and Japan. She said, "Let us grow together. Let us use trade to benefit our producers as well as our consumers. Let us settle our problems as friends."

Arigatoo Gozaimashita (Thank you).

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I yield 5 minutes of my time to the distinguished Senator from Ohio [Mr. GLENN].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio is recognized.

Mr. GLENN. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished minority leader.

THE REMARKS OF MICHAEL BURCH CONCERNING SENATOR DOLE

Mr. GLENN. Mr. President, in the past few days, the debate over how much this country should spend on defense has taken an ugly turn. I am specifically referring to a remark attributed to Mr. Michael Burch, chief spokesman for Secretary of Defense Weinberger. According to Mr. Burch—and I quote—"Secretary Weinberger feels that those who hope for success in bringing down the defense budget really mean success in weakening the security of the country."

Mr. President, that kind of charge does more than merely revive the rhetorical ghosts of McCarthyism. It impairs political cooperation, it further politicizes an important policy debate, and it further polarizes those who—on both sides of the aisle—are working hard and in good faith to find a way of reducing the monstrous budget deficits that are threatening the economic security—and yes, even the national security—of our Nation.

Indeed, Mr. President, let us remember that the comment made by Secretary Weinberger's chief spokesman occurred on the very same day that the distinguished majority leader of this body, Senator DOLE, expressed his growing frustration over the administration's seeming unwillingness to compromise in any way on the issue of defense spending.

Now the majority leader is a Republican and I, of course, am a Democrat. We have often disagreed in the past, and we will often disagree in the future. But no matter how often we disagree, there is one thing that should never be debated, and never questioned here; that is, the patriotism we share for this Nation.

I served for 23 years in the U.S. Marine Corps, and I fought in two wars for America. Senator DOLE's wartime sacrifice was far greater than mine, and he has the scars and disabilities that go along with his war-time service, even to this day. His sacrifices were greater than mine, but others in this Chamber, and in the House of Representatives, also have distinguished records of service to this country—and we all deserve better than to have our motives and our loyalty challenged by officials in the Reagan Defense Department simply because we may not agree with their assessment of how much money the Pentagon needs in 1986.

This is a very complex subject. We can start off with "What is the foreign policy of this country? What is the defense policy that will back it up? What kind of R&D do we need? What kind of arms controls impinges on these decisions? How about burden sharing from our allies?" These are all issues that come into play, and play a very major role in what goes into our defense budget.

Mr. President, I have not yet decided what level of defense spending I will support for the next fiscal year. I want to carefully review the budget in light of all of the matters which I just mentioned. I want to review the budget the administration sends forward as well as the specific weapons systems that the administration wants to fund. I also want to analyze what impact unbridled budget deficits will have on our long-term economic health and national security. But in the meantime, let me point out that over the past 4 years this Congress and this country have spent approximately $1 trillion on defense. That hardly qualifies as unilateral disarmament. I can further assure you that no one in this body has or will consciously seek to "weaken the security of this country," as Mr. Burch suggested.

At some point, Mr. President, I will come to a decision about next year's defense spending—as will each and every Member of this body. When we do, I hope we will do so without fear of having our motivations, and even our loyalty, challenged by President Reagan's Defense Secretary. The glue that holds a democracy together, Mr. President, is a recognition that there is indeed such a thing as a loyal opposition—with emphasis on the "loyal." I think it is time Secretary Weinberger and his staff showed that they understand and respect that concept. Accordingly, I call on the Secretary to retract the statement made on his behalf and to apologize for impugning the motives of those who disagree with him, and in particular the majority leader of the U.S. Senate.

I yield the floor.

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Ohio yield briefly?

Mr. GLENN. I yield.

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, I congratulate my good friend from Ohio on that statement. He is 100 percent right. I do not know of anyone in this body nor in the other body who does not agree that we need an increase. However, the talk is only about how much.

What the Secretary of Defense is calling for is more than many of us in the Senate would like to increase it to. No one that I have talked to has proposed that we cut it. We simply disagree, perhaps, on the MX; we disagree, perhaps, on the strategic defense initiative. We may disagree on the B-1. We want a strong military force.

This kind of charge that is made by a Defense official certainly demeans the dignity of the Secretary of Defense, and demeans Members of this body.

I think the Senator from Ohio has made an excellent statement in protest of it.

Mr. GLENN. I thank the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's 10 minutes have expired.

Mr. GLENN. Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, how much time do I have remaining?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The minority leader has 4 minutes remaining.

Mr. BYRD. I thank the Chair.

THE MAJORITY LEADER HERALDED

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, in November, the distinguished Senators of the majority had a difficult task. From among several outstanding candidates, the Republican Senators had to elect a new leader to succeed Senator Howard M. Baker, who retired from the Senate at the end of the 98th Congress.

Faced with an admirable array of choices, however, our colleagues of the majority made a felicitous decision in electing Senator ROBERT DOLE of Kansas to lead them in the 99th Congress. Senator DOLE came to his new duties with a wide background in national affairs, as a Member of the House of Representatives, the chairman of the National Republican Committee, the Republican Vice-Presidential candidate in 1976, and as chairman of the Senate Finance Committee, to name some of his past responsibilities. Noted for his wit and practical intellect as well as his experience, Senator DOLE was greeted with broad approval and applause on being chosen majority leader.

Senator DOLE has disappointed neither his friends nor the prophets. Nor do I think he will disappoint them. In the short weeks of this session of Congress, he has proved to be the able leader his Republican colleagues hoped he would be and the fair and wise statesman that those of us who have worked with him from both sides of the aisle knew he would be.

For the February issue of the Washingtonian magazine, Jack Germond and Jules Witcover have written a thorough and penetrating article on the distinguished majority leader. I request that this article on Senator DOLE be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

HERE'S BOB!

(By Jack W. Germond and Jules Witcover)

Bob Dole may have a little of Bob Hope in him, but he is also a very shrewd political leader. Can his wit and power take him to the White House?

Bob Hope—who is the Bob Dole of stage, screen, and television—reportedly once said that the formula for a successful act is to stride up to the microphone and bowl over the audience with two lightning-fast minutes of one-liners.

And so, ladies and gentlemen, let's have a big round of applause for the new Senate Majority Leader—Bob Dole!

Running for re-election to the Senate in 1974, when asked whether he would like Watergate-embattled President Richard Nixon to come to Kansas to campaign for him, Dole said, "I'd settle for a fly-over by Air Force One."

At a Texas reception referring to the state's diminutive senator: "I once got a standing ovation from John Tower, but I didn't know the difference."

About the procrastination of his predecessor as Senate Republican Leader: "If Howard Baker had been working on the Declaration of Independence, we'd still be speaking with British accents."

In 1976, when asked how he took his defeat as President Gerald Ford's running mate: "On election night, I slept like a baby; every two hours, I woke up and cried."

In 1978, commenting on Jimmy Carter's penchant for gaffes: "When the last Pope was elected, he sent him a telegram that read, "Congratulations. Please give my best to the missus.'"

In 1980, speaking of one of his opponents for the Republican presidential nomination: "George Bush says he's never been a part of the problem in the Senate. Well, he tried to be—twice—but he lost both times in Texas."

In 1983, introducing his spouse, Elizabeth, at her Senate confirmation hearing to be Secretary of Transportation: "I regret that I have only one wife to give for my country's infrastructure."

As chairman of the Senate Finance Committee during discussion of a proposal to end the home-mortgage tax deduction: "Take it easy on that. Four realtors just fainted in the back of the room."

At the 1983 Gridiron Dinner, describing former President Carter, Ford, and Nixon: "See no evil, hear no evil, and-evil."

There is no doubt that Bob Dole can lay 'em in the aisles. But the question is: Can he get his now-expanded audience to take him seriously—as Senate Majority Leader and, potentially, as a candidate in 1988 for the Republican presidential nomination?

A decade ago, the question itself might well have had 'em in the aisles. Then, Dole was not only regarded as the Senate's funniest member, he was also seen as a slashing, driven partisan in the mold of Richard Nixon himself—so much so that when Nixon chose him in 1971 to be Republican national chairman, succeeding the big and affable Rogers Morton, a While House aide said Nixon had "replaced a St. Bernard with a hungry Doberman pinscher."

Not since the days of the two McCarthys from the Midwest—Joe of Wisconsin and Gene of Minnesota—had the Senate had such a verbal executioner. Joe was best known for his sobriquets for fellow senators such as "Sanctimonious Stu" Symington and "Stillborn" Pell. Gene, when he heard that Republican presidential hopeful Governor George Romney had said he was brainwashed in Vietnam, observed that he'd thought "a light rinse" might have done the job. Similarly, Dole's humor wasn't always appreciated in the Senate because it so often came at the expense of others.

As the party's national chairman, Dole was tough. The 1972 Democratic presidential nominee, George McGovern, later lamented that Dole "used to eat me for breakfast," and he was far from the only Democrat to feel Dole's bite. Dole acknowledges today that he was "very partisan" in the post but, he says, "I assumed it went with the territory." Dole quickly won the label of "hatchet man," and it stuck even after he got booted as chairman following the 1972 election—to make room, he says, for George Bush, who wanted out as United Nations ambassador.

For all his partisan efforts, Dole was never appreciated by the henchmen around Nixon, and in the inaugural parade of January 1973, he recalls, he was shunted to a rear car.

When President Gerald Ford picked Bob Dole as his running mate in 1976, the assumption was that he had won the job because he was such an experienced and effective ax-wielder. That view was reinforced in his debate with the Democratic vice-presidential nominee, Walter Mondale. Dole was his most acerbic—first trying to wisecrack his way through, then ranting at "Democrat wars"—one of which, he said, was World War II.

Many Republicans blamed the narrow loss of the Ford-Dole ticket to Carter-Mondale on Dole's performance that night, though Ford himself credited Dole with holding the farm belt as well as the more conservative wing of the party. While Ford was campaigning from the Rose Garden, Dole observed later, he was assigned to "the briar patch" in the traditional running mate's role of attacking the opposition and trying to be a lightning rod for the presidential candidate.

Later, he told dinner audiences: "I'll never forget the Dole-Mondale debate—and don't think I haven't tried. I won't say how we did, but halfway through the debate, three empty chairs got up and walked out. . . . President Ford was supposed to take the high road, and I was supposed to go for the jugular. And I did—my own."

In the wake of the Ford-Dole defeat, he recalls, Nixon called and warned him, "Now it's scapegoating time." But Dole weathered the criticism, and today he says of that 1976 defeat, "I'm sort of the survivor. Carter's gone, Ford's gone, Mondale's gone. I'm still here."

After the 1976 campaign, Bob and Elizabeth Dole sat down together and watched television tapes of the debate with Mondale as well as other campaign performances. Whether or not that exercise led him to blunt the point of his oratorical spear, he did seem to wield it with more discipline thereafter. His humor had always had a self-deprecating style, and this aspect increasingly dominated—to the relief of his colleagues.

As Dole approached 1980 and his first try for the GOP presidential nomination, he already had put much of the criticism for harshness behind him. "As long as you turn it on yourself, you're all right," he says now. "But you get on a roll sometimes," he adds with a wry grin, "and your judgment leaves you. I try not to be a free spirit so much anymore."

In competition with Ronald Reagan on the 1980 campaign trail, neither Dole nor any of the other Republican candidates was a fair match. He still led the league in one-liners, but he never achieved much political identification outside Washington.

As a long-time member of the minority party in the Senate, he never had much opportunity to demonstrate legislative effectiveness and political leadership. Dole ran poorly in the Iowa caucuses and New Hampshire primary and then got out of the race.

The success of Reagan in 1980, and of a host of Republican Senate candidates, unexpectedly gave Dole the chance to strut his stuff. The ousting of twelve Democratic senators in the 1980 election put the Republicans in control of the Senate for the first time since the Eisenhower sweep of 1952, and Dole suddenly found himself—as they say in this town—"the influential chairman of the powerful Senate Finance Committee."

Overnight, the spotlight was on Dole as the new President proceeded to act with a vengeance on his campaign pledge to "drain the swamp"—including sharp tax cuts, whose enactment came under purview of the Finance Committee. Dole's performance in navigating the tax cuts, the cornerstone of Reaganomics, through his committee and the Senate at once marked him as a master legislator and—to the surprise of those who still perceived him as the ruthless hatchet man—as a deft conciliator.

These talents received continued exposure and drew continuing praise through 1982 and 1983, as the Reagan formula for prosperity first plunged the country into recession and then embarked on recovery. In August 1982, Dole took the lead away from a reluctant President and shaped and pushed through the Senate a tax increase of just under $100 billion that, with bipartisan support, temporarily saved Reagan's bacon. "If we hadn't had the 1982 bill," he muses now, "what would the deficit be today?"

The rescue operation was not without political cost to Dole, who came under fire from supply-siders who labeled him with that worst of all epithets in the Republican lexicon—a (gasp!) liberal.

But Dole did not back off. In an article in the Washington Post, he defended himself by noting his 94 percent rating in the Congressional Quarterly in support of party positions and 84 percent in support of Reagan in 1981.

Citing Henry Adams's observation that "practical politics consists of ignoring the facts," Dole wrote, "We Republicans have a responsibility to lead, to legislate effectively, and to keep the public interest always before us as our ultimate objective. We live up to that responsibility by confronting problems squarely, by standing firmly on our principles, and by reaching out through consensus to forge a partnership with those presumably 'non-political' politicians who do not ignore the facts. . . . We are not making a U-turn; we are merely adjusting the route to keep from going off the road. . . . I am not a liberal. Neither am I a lemming."

In addition to shaping the 1982 bailout, Dole played a leading role in salvaging Reagan's position in the 1983 bipartisan compromise on Social Security and that year's "down payment" on deficit reduction. In four years as chairman of the Finance Committee, Dole established himself not only as an effective legislator and conciliator within the Senate, but as a cooperative but independent representative of Senate Republicans in dealing with the President of their own party.

He swallowed the Reagan formula in these years, but not hook, line, and sinker. Moreover, rather than go to the wall with his differences, he used his legislative skills to shape the finished products more to his liking without causing a serious rupture in his relations with the White House.

Nevertheless, Dole's ambitions to be Senate Majority Leader did not get any visible helping hand from 1600 Pennsylvania Avenue. Rather, the White House hunkered down during the intense electioneering for the late-November balloting that led to Dole's narrow election over the Senate assistant Majority Leader, Ted Stevens of Alaska. In the end, in fact, a belief among his colleagues that Dole would protect the Senate's prerogatives while carrying the President's mail on Capitol Hill was a major factor in his election.

Now, unsurprisingly, there is nothing but praise coming from the White House about the choice. Outgoing White House chief of staff James Baker predicts Dole will be "an extremely successful Majority Leader, as perhaps the very best legislative tactician and strategist in the Senate. We found that to be the case in the first four years, during his tenure as chairman of the Finance Committee. And contrary to what people may say about his independence, while he felt free to question the President on some things, when the President decided, Bob was with him more times than not."

Senators on both sides of the aisle, and especially those who have served on the Finance Committee with him, also predict that Dole will be an effective Senate leader. Republican John Chafee of Rhode Island says Dole "has an excellent capacity for bringing people together and touching all bases so people won't be surprised. He makes sure you get your day in court." Chafee says Dole's sense of humor will stand him in good stead because it has softened and because it is natural and not programmed. "His wit is not into the class-clown area by any means," he says. "He's not always groping for the gag, as some people do."

Democrat George Mitchell of Maine says that Dole, while not regarded with the affection in which retired Majority Leader Howard Baker was held, is seen as "very able, intelligent, and articulate—aggressive and ambitious in the good sense of those words." And Democrat Bill Bradley of New Jersey calls him "a strong leader, fair and knowledgeable, who understands compromise and how to deal across the aisle.

On the far right, Dole remains anathema to many. Representative Newt Gingrich of Georgia, in a stinging letter late last year to budget director David Stockman, referred derisively to Dole as "the tax collector for the welfare state." Dole has been a particular champion of the food-stamp program and of programs for the handicapped, but he cannot fairly be accused of being an apostle of the federal handout. He is the founder of the nonprofit Dole Foundation in Kansas that helps train and employ the disabled in the private sector.

Gingrich says he was "angry" when he wrote the letter and that it wasn't intended for publication. And Dole's observations right after his election as Majority Leader that he would take a look at a budget freeze, Gingrich says, suggested that he was "backing off tax increases"—death to supply-siders such as Gingrich, who say economic growth in "the Opportunity Society" will solve the deficit dilemma.

Others on the right are not so hopeful about Dole. Conservative master fundraiser Richard Viguerie calls Dole "Mr. Tax-Increaser" and says he is no conservative. "Would you say," he asks, "that someone George McGovern has said 'has grown' can be considered a conservative?" Dole, for his part, observes, "I can't be all bad. Viguerie's against me."

The opposition to Dole on the right, where he once seemed to sit very comfortably, is only one roadblock in a run for the 1988 Republican presidential nomination from the post of Senate Republican leader. Dole, in keeping with protocol, is not saying he will be a presidential candidate again. For one thing, he faces re-election to the Senate in 1986. His wife, Elizabeth, says they have not even talked about it, choosing to focus on the challenge of the Senate leadership for now.

But assuming he wants to shoot for the White House in 1988, some Senate colleagues and others doubt the wisdom of seeking the presidency while carrying the burdens of party leadership in the Senate. One reason for Howard Baker's decision to quit not only the Majority Leader's post but the Senate itself was that he was convinced that his unsuccessful 1980 effort to run for President—he was only Minority Leader then—was handicapped by his heavy duties on Capitol Hill. Baker insists that this reason was not his prime consideration in leaving the Senate, though he admits few seem to believe him. "Principal for me is that eighteen years is long enough," he says, "and if I'm ever going to do anything else, whether it's political or non-political, now is the time to do it."

Dole himself, when he was faring poorly in the 1980 presidential race, expressed reservations about seeking the presidency from the Senate. "I guess it's hard to give two jobs 100 percent," he said then. "Maybe I've been too cautious. You can't generate any money if you're not out there. Maybe I'm my own worst enemy. It's so strange, but my biggest asset seems to have become my biggest liability—my job." If that observation was valid five years ago, it would seem even more so now, with Dole's greatly increased Senate responsibilities.

There is, at the same time, an up side to the situation. For one thing, Dole, as the former Finance Committee chairman and present Majority Leader, ought to have a much easier job raising money for a presidential campaign than he had in 1979 and 1980. For another, as Majority Leader for at least the next two years, he will be much more influential—and hence likely to draw much more media attention—than was Baker as Minority Leader in 1979 and 1980. Dole will be seen coming out of the White House so often in the next two years that he'll look as if he has set up premature residency.

The realities of politics may also work in Dole's favor. As matters stand now, the chances seem good that he will have to surrender his Majority Leader post and slip down to Minority Leader in 1987. Of the 34 Senate seats up in 1986, 22 are held by Republicans and only 12 by Democrats, so the odds favor the Democrats' regaining control. By that time, Dole should have obtained his biggest publicity boost from being Majority Leader, and the somewhat lesser duties of Minority Leader might make it easier for him to focus on another presidential bid.

Dole says his first priority politically will be to retain GOP control of the Senate. His own political-action committee, Campaign America, already has $500,000 in the till that will go primarily for the re-election of Republican senators—and, not incidentally, the storing away of political IOUs.

Dole's observation upon being elected Majority Leader that holding on to the Senate was number-one with him and that Senate Republicans would support Reagan "when we can" raised some eyebrows at the time, hinting as it did at the famous Dole independent streak. On that point, Howard Baker says, "He has one fundamental question to decide, the same question I had. I had to decide whether to be a Bob Taft or a Bill Knowland. Bob Taft [as Majority Leader] decided to support President Eisenhower, and he did it with great grace and skill. Knowland tried to be President himself. He lost the Senate, got himself defeated, and damaged Eisenhower. I read with great interest the columns and newspaper accounts about how independent the Senate may be [under Dole], and that's all well and good. The Senate is an independent body. But it's also going to be part of the team, and the leader has to be the point man, and I rather expect Dole will come down on that side."

Baker says he and Dole have discussed the matter of running for President from the Majority Leader's post, "and we've acknowledged one of us is making a mistake." Baker points out that the job has "built-in pitfalls" that go beyond the possibility of differing with the President on specific votes and being tied down to the Senate. The Majority Leader, he says, "has the necessity of dealing with the other fellows' issues every day and leaving precious little time for talking about your own positions and issues."

Concerning the possibility of a conflict between Dole's role as Majority Leader advancing a Republican President's legislative goals and the need of a presidential hopeful to demonstrate independence, Jim Baker says the White House isn't worried. "It's not easy to run for President from the majority leadership," he says. "I think that's one reason Howard Baker got out. I don't see Bob using that office to maintain an independent posture from the President. The best way to be a presidential candidate is to be a good Majority Leader, and to be a good Majority Leader he will want to work with the President."

Dole says that while "1988 is probably remote for me," he doesn't agree with Howard Baker that being Majority Leader would be detrimental in seeking the White House. He says he knows he will have to walk a fine line between working with Reagan and defending his own and the Senate's independence, but he notes his strong record of support for the President over the last four years and says he sees no reason it can't be continued while retaining independence. "I can't serve the Senate and be a lap dog," he says bluntly. And Bill Bradley, who himself is being mentioned as a 1988 presidential prospect on the Democratic side, says, "There ought to be a moratorium on talking about everybody's presidential ambitions for at least eighteen months."

Finally, there is what one of Bob Dole's colleagues calls his "extraordinary energy and stamina." Lean and fit at 61, he has been a whirlwind of activity not only as chairman of the Finance Committee but in taking leadship roles on legislation in his other two committee assignments before becoming Majority Leader—on Agriculture and Judiciary—and on the Senate floor.

Elizabeth Dole says her husband's being Majority Leader won't change their lives all that much because he's always on the go anyway. Another presidential campaign would only be in keeping with the all-out pace that has been his lifestyle for years.

Four years is a long time, and a lot can happen to clarify whether it will make sense for Bob Dole to try one more time for the White House in 1988. He has long since demonstrated that he has the sense of humor to be a very popular President, and in moving up to Senate Majority Leader he has shown he has the legislative and conciliatory talents to lift him to the vanguard of Capitol Hill operatives. But as a national figure able to draw the kind of support required for election to national office, he remains a question mark, with his 1976 and 1980 setbacks marked up against him.

Like Howard Baker before him, Bob Dole has succeeded far more inside the Beltway than outside it. One of his critics, Viguerie, observes that Dole's quick wit and independence have made him a special favorite of the news media in Washington without giving him a comparable national constituency. "Try taking it into Iowa, New Hampshire, and Florida [early caucus and primary states]," he says. "News-media popularity is capital you can't spend there, and it has a short shelf life." In fact, Viguerie insists, such popularity is a negative nowadays. "It's inconceivable now that anyone who has the support of the national media is going to get the Republican nomination," he argues.

For now, Bob Dole is riding high, and he doesn't have to resort to Bob Hope one-liners to get attention. He used to get a laugh by asking Republican audiences, "Can you hear me on the left? I know you can hear me on the right." Now when Bob Dole, Majority Leader of the United States, speaks, even E.F. Hutton listens. Especially E.F. Hutton.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. BYRD. I have a little time remaining, Mr. President. Would either of my colleagues on this side of the aisle, Mr. GORE or Mr. SIMON—or Mr. ROCKEFELLER—wish to have some time?

Mr. PROXMIRE. If the Senator has no requests for the remainder, I will be happy to have it.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I yield the remainder of my time to the Senator from Wisconsin.

RECOGNITION OF SENATOR PROXMIRE

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. PROXMIRE] is recognized for not to exceed 15 minutes plus the remaining time of the minority leader.

WHY JASTROW, BRZEZINSKI, AND KAMPELMAN ARE WRONG ON "STAR WARS"

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, on Sunday, January 27, in the New York Times magazine, three distinguished experts called for the Congress to move ahead with the strategic defense initiative or "Star Wars." The three experts represent an impressive combination of experience and scientific competence. Dr. Zbigniew Brzezinski headed the National Security Council under President Carter. He obviously qualifies as a competent professional in policies designed to meet the Soviet military and foreign policy threat. Robert Jastrow is one of the Nation's most eminent scientists, highly respected both in the academic community and for his distinguished work in both civilian and military space programs. Max Kampelman has just been appointed as the head of the arms control negotiating team that will meet with Soviet negotiators in March. Before Congress moves to fund or refuses to fund what may become the most critical and possibly the most expensive weapons program facing our Government, we should certainly listen to the case these experts make for moving ahead.

What this trio of experts proposes is not what the President has been talking about. The President has called for an antimissile program that would defend our cities as well as our retaliatory capacity. The President's vision of SDI and, indeed, that of Secretary of Defense Weinberger, has been the creation of a series of antimissile shields that would provide perfect or near perfect protection for American cities and citizens from a Soviet nuclear attack.

On the other hand, the expert scenario is far more limited. It would make no attempt to shield our cities from attack. It would not, in the initial stage they advance as their primary objective, even fully defend our deterrent. It would rely on a "two-tiered" system costing $60 billion to provide a "point defense" of enough of our retaliatory capacity that the Russians would be discouraged from inititating a preemptive first strike. These experts propose to deploy such a system in about 10 years at an annual cost of about $6 billion per year. By early in the next century, the Congress would have the option of deploying a four-tiered system that would make Soviet penetration to destroy our retaliatory capacity "just about nil." That is the way they put it. Presumably, another $40 or $50 billion of deployment would provide this final protection.

What is wrong with this proposition? Has it not reduced the threat of a trillion-dollar program to a small fraction of that? Is it not more practical to confine protection to our deterrent than to try to protect the enormous area of American major cities? Does not the ABM Treaty already permit a single antimissile system for each country? Have not the Russians already deployed such a system around Moscow? And, have we not planned the possibility of such deployment around an American missile base? We could renounce the treaty or we could seek to modify it to permit an SDI point defense. Why not?

Here's why not: First, the proposal would direct us to plan to nullify an arms control treaty the Senate ratified by a smashing 88-to-2 vote. Second, the diminution or the total nullification of the prospect of a Russian preemptive strike would add nothing to our present deterrent posture. Right now, today, this minute, our country has an invulnerable nuclear deterrent that would survive any conceivable preemptive attack by the U.S.S.R. Unlike the Soviet Union, we have only 25 percent of our deterrent invulnerable stationary land-based deployment that the $60 billion point defense would protect.

A full 50 percent of our deterrent is in submarines, much of that is at sea—moving invisibly underwater at all times. Another 25 percent is in bombers, much of which is either in the air or able to be in the air within minutes. We know this. The Soviets know it. As the Secretary of the Navy has testified, we are constantly improving the invulnerability of our deterrent. The SDI proposed by Brzezinski, Jastrow, and Kampelman adds very little, certainly nothing near the cost of violating the 1972 ABM Arms Control Treaty, or spending upward of $60 billion.

Mr. President, the Reagan administration and the three eminent experts who support the SDI have one immense psychological argument on their side. It is this: If SDI will not work, if it's such a turkey, such a fiasco, why are the Russians so agitated about it? Why has it seemed to be the single biggest force in bringing them back to the arms control bagaining table? What is the answer?

The answer is that this is a beautiful ploy for the Russians. What a made-to-order basis for splitting the Americans and their NATO allies. An SDI system is designed to do what? To protect America from a Russian nuclear attack. It is not designed to protect NATO, not Europe, but America.

If such a system did work, where would that leave our NATO partners? Here we hunker down behind our shield of Star Wars. What does Western Europe do? Star Wars probably would not work to defend America, but it certainly, obviously, would not work to defend Europe. An ICBM designed for America and launched from Russia would travel thousands of miles for as long as 30 minutes at a very high trajectory. SDI might stop some of those missiles. But a Russian missile aimed at Rome or Paris or London? It would take about 5 minutes. Trajectory? Almost none. It is wham bam, goody-bye man. So our European friends do not like it, and the Russians nestle right up to them by opposing it too.

Second, the Russians do not like Star Wars for another reason. It makes them change their very costly stationary land-based ICBM deterrent. The cost would probably not be as great for them as Star Wars is for us, but it would be very great. They would have to shift their deterrent to submarines and bombers, to cruise missiles, and possibly state-directed terrorists. Sure, it would cost them a-plenty. It would be draining for a Russian economy that is far weaker than the American economy. So they do not want to have to make the change. But, if necessary, make it they would. And we would find ourselves in no better position to defend our country, no more secure or safer than before. The nuclear arms race would go on, rushing ahead, out of control, constantly threatening to destroy the relative stalemate that has kept a superpower peace for the past 30 years. Mr. President, the best hope for peace is to stop this arms race cold and stop it now. At this moment, neither superpower can win a nuclear war no matter how big a preemptive strike it launches. We have a balance between the two superpowers. Let us freeze it and keep it.

I ask unanimous consent that the article to which I have referred in the Sunday, January 27, New York Times' magazine be printed in the Record.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DEFENSE IN SPACE IS NOT "STAR WARS"

(By Zbigniew Brzezinski, Robert Jastrow, Max M. Kampelman)

Faith moves mountains. When it is in eternal religious values, faith is an indispensable strength of the human spirit. When it is directed toward political choices, it is often an excuse for an analytic paralysis.

Regrettably, our national debate over President Reagan's suggestion that the country develop a strategic defense against a Soviet nuclear attack is taking on a theological dimension that has no place in a realistic search for a path out of the world's dilemma. The idea of basing our security on the ability to defend ourselves deserves serious consideration. Certainly, the role of strategic defense was a major issue in the recent dialogue in Geneva between United States Secretary of State George P. Shultz and Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei A. Gromyko on new arms-control negotiations.

For many years, our search for security has been restricted to designing offensive weapons to deter aggression through fear of reprisals. We must not abandon nuclear deterrence until we are convinced that a better means is at hand. But we cannot deny that, for both the Soviet Union and the United States, the costs, insecurities and tensions surrounding this search for newer, more effective and more accurate nuclear missiles produce a profound unease that in itself undermines stability.

The conventional view is that stability in the nuclear age is based on two contradictory pursuits: the acquisition of increasingly efficient nuclear weapons and the negotiation of limits and reductions in such weapons. The United States is diligently pursuing both objectives, but the complexity of arriving at effectual arms-control agreements is becoming apparent as more precise and mobile weapons, with multiple warheads, appear on both sides. Unlike ours, moreover, many Soviet missile silos are reloadable, and thus the number of silos does not indicate the number of missiles, further complicating verification.

We must never ignore the reality that the overwhelming majority of the Soviet strategic forces is composed of primarily first-strike weaponry. And given the large numbers of first-strike Soviet SS-17, -18 and -19 land-based missiles, no responsible American leader can make decisions about security needs without acknowledging that a Soviet first strike can become a practical option.

The Russians could strike us first by firing the reloadable portion of their nuclear arsenal at our missiles, the Strategic Air Command and nuclear submarine bases, and if the surviving American forces (essentially nuclear submarines) were to respond, the Russians could immediately counter by attacking our cities with missiles from nonreloadable silos and, a few hours later, with whatever of their first-strike reloadable weapons had survived our counterattack. They are set up for launching three salvos to our one.

To us, this catastrophic exchange is unthinkable. But, with the strong probability that the American response would be badly crippled at the outset by a Soviet strike, some Russian leader could someday well consider such a potential cost bearable in the light of the resulting "victory." Furthermore, such an analysis might well anticipate that an American President, knowing that a strike against our cities would inevitably follow our response to a Soviet first strike, might choose to avoid such a catastrophe by making important political concessions. No responsible American President can permit this country to have to live under such a threat, not to speak of the hypothetical danger of having to choose either annihilation or submission to nuclear blackmail. Hence the understandable and continual drive for more effective offensive missiles to provide greater deterrence.

The result is that weapons technology is shaping an increasingly precarious American-Soviet strategic relationship. For this reason, we urge serious consideration be given to whether some form of Strategic Defense Initiative (S.D.I.) might not be stabilizing, enhancing a deterrence and even helpful to arms control. To that end, we address the major issues in strategic defense from three points of view:

(1) The technical: Is a defense against missiles technically and budgetarily feasible?

(2) The strategic: Is a defense against missiles strategically desirable? Does it enhance or diminish stability? Does it enhance or diminish the prospects for arms control and a nuclear-weapons build-down?

(3) The political: What are the political implications of strategic defense for our own country and for our relations with our allies? What are the implications for the larger dimensions of our relationship with the Soviet Union? How do we seek the needed domestic consensus on a viable strategy?

A great deal has been written about the state of missile-defense technology. Some experts say the technology sought is unattainable, others that it is merely unattainable in this generation. Yet the promise of the Strategic Defense Initiative is real. Some of the technologies are mature and unexotic. Their deployment around the end of this decade would involve mainly engineering development. Technically, these vital defenses could be in place at this moment were it not for the constraints accepted by the United States in its adherence to the antiballistic missile treaty of 1972.

With development and some additional research, we can now construct and deploy a two-layer or double-screen defense, which can be in place by the early 1990's at a cost we estimate to be somewhere in the neighborhood of $60 billion. A conservative estimate of the effectiveness of each layer would be 70 percent. The combined effectiveness of the two layers would be over 90 percent: Less than one Soviet warhead in 10 would reach its target—more than sufficient to discourage Soviet leaders from any thought of achieving a successful first strike.

The first layer in the two-layer defense system—the "boost-phase" defense—would go into effect as a Soviet first-strike missile, or "booster," carrying multiple warheads rises above the atmosphere at the beginning of its trajectory. This boost-phase defense—based on interception and destruction by nonnuclear projectiles—would depend on satellites for the surveillance of the Soviet missile field and the tracking of missiles as they rise from their silos. These operations could only be carried out from space platforms orbiting over the Soviet Union. Because they are weightless in orbit, such platforms could be protected against attack by heavy armor, onboard weapons and maneuverability.

After the booster has burned out and fallen away, the warheads are through space on their way to the United States. The second layer of the defense—the terminal defense—comes into play as the warheads descend. Interception would be at considerable altitude, above the atmosphere if possible. This second phase requires further engineering, already under way, because interception above the atmosphere makes it difficult to discriminate between real warheads and decoys. In the interim, interception can take place in the atmosphere, where differences in air drag separate warheads from decoys. In either event, destruction of the warheads would take place at sufficiently high altitudes, above 100,000 feet, so that there would be no ground damage from warheads designed to explode when approached by an intercepting missile.

Of the two layers in the defense, the boost phase is by far the most important. It would prevent the Russians from concentrating their warheads on such high-priority targets as the national-command authority (the chain of command, beginning with the President, for ordering a nuclear strike), key intercontinental-ballistic missile silos or the Trident submarine pens, because they could not predict which booster and which warheads would escape destruction and get through.

This fact is important. Simply a so-called "point defense" of our missile silos, it has been suggested, would be sufficient to restore much of the credibility of our land-based deterrent, now compromised by 6,000 Soviet ICBM warheads. It is particularly necessary to protect the 550 silos containing our Minuteman III ICBM's, of which 300 have the highly precise Mark 12A warheads. These are the only missiles in the possession of the United States with the combination of yield and accuracy required to destroy hardened Soviet military sites and the 1,500 hardened bunkers that would shelter the Soviet leadership. But their very importance to us illustrates the difficulty of a point defense, because the value of the silos to us means they will be among the highest-priority targets in any Soviet first strike. The Russians can overwhelm any point defense we place around those silos, if they wish to do so, by allocating large numbers of warheads to these critical targets. But if we include a boost-phase defense to destroy their warheads at the time of firing, their objective becomes enormously more difficult to accomplish.

The boost-phase defense has still another advantage. It could effectively contend with the menace of the Soviet SS-18's, monster missiles twice the size of the 97.5-ton MX. Each SS-18 carries 10 warheads, but probably could be loaded with up to 30. The Russians could thus add thousands of ICBM warheads to their arsenal at relatively modest cost. With numbers like that, the costs favor the Russians. But a boost-phase defense can eliminate all a missile's warheads at one time—an effective response to the SS-18 problem.

The likely technology for an early use of the boost-phase defense would use "smart" nonnuclear projectiles that home in on the target, using radar or heat waves, and destroy it on impact. The technology is close at hand and need not wait for the availability of the more devastating but less mature technologies of the laser, the neutral particle beam or the electromagnetic rail gun. The interceptor rocket for this early boost-phase defense could be derived from air-defense interceptors that will soon be available, or the technology of antisatellite missiles (ASAT) launched from F-15 aircraft. These rockets could weigh about 500 pounds, the nonnuclear supersonic projectiles about 10 pounds.

Interceptor rockets would be stored in pods on satellites and fired from space. The tracking information needed to aim the rockets would also be acquired from satellites orbiting over the Soviet missile fields. The so-called "space weapons" of strategic defense are indispensable for the crucial boost-phase defense. To eliminate them would destroy the usefulness of the defense.

We estimate that the cost of establishing such a boost-phase defense by the early 1990's would be roughly $45 billion. That price tag includes 100 satellites, each holding 150 interceptors—sufficient to counter a mass Soviet attack from all their 1,400 silos; plus four geosynchronous satellites and 10 low-altitude satellites dedicated to surveillance and tracking; plus the cost of facilities for ground-control communications and battle management.

The technology used for the terminal defense could be a small, nonnuclear homing interceptor with a heat-seeking sensor, which would be launched by a rocket weighing one to two tons and costing a few million dollars each. Interception would take place above the atmosphere, if possible, to give wider "area" protection to the terrain below. These heat-seeking interceptors can be available for deployment in about five years if a decision is reached to follow that course. One concept for this technology was tested successfully last June by the Defense Department, when an intercepting missile zeroed in on an oncoming warhead at an altitude of 100 miles and destroyed it.

The technology for a terminal defense within the atmosphere would be somewhat different, but would probably also depend on heat-seeking missiles. The cost of this terminal layer of defense would be about $15 billion and include $10 billion for 5,000 interceptors, plus $5 billion for 10 aircraft carrying instruments for tracking of the Soviet warheads.

The estimated $60 billion for this two-layer defense is a ball-park figure, of course. However, even with its uncertainties, it is surely an affordable outlay for protecting our country from a nuclear first strike.

To be sure, the above is not an attractive option to those who place all their eggs in the arms-control basket and underestimate the immense difficulty of attaining an effective and truly verifiable pact. It is also not appealing to those wedded to the idea that it is best to assure survival by simply maintaining the perilous balance of terror between the United States and the Soviet Union. We favor energetically pursuing arms-control negotiations and seeking to achieve credible deterrence, but these options by themselves are unfortunately not as likely to provide a more secure future as the alternative strategy of mutual security combining defense against missiles with retaliatory offense.

The simplest and most appealing option, quite naturally, is comprehensive arms control. Large reductions in both launchers and warheads, as well as effective restrictions on surreptitious deployment or qualitative improvements, would enhance nuclear stability and produce greater mutual confidence. It would, if properly negotiated and effectively monitored, enhance mutual survival.

How likely is such a future? Some progress in arms control is probably possible, but genuinely effective arms control would require that: (1) there be a restraint imposed on qualitative weapons enhancement; (2) mobile systems, relatively easy to deploy secretly, be subject to some form of direct verification; (3) a method be devised for distinguishing nuclear-armed and nonnuclear cruise missiles, and (4) monitoring arrangements be devised for preventing surreptitious development, testing and deployment of new systems. So far, the Soviet record of compliance with the SALT I and SALT II accords is sufficiently troubling to warrant skepticism regarding the likelihood of implementing any such complex and far-reaching agreement.

Moreover, such an agreement would have to recognize that it is no longer possible to limit space-based systems without imposing a simultaneous limit, along the above lines, an terrestrially deployed systems, which present the greater threat to survival. After all, the space-based defenses include no weapons of mass destruction and no nuclear weapons. And it should be some cause for concern to note the Soviet insistence on prohibiting space-based defensive systems, the only method now available to inhibit the frist-strike use of land-based Soviet offensive systems.

Finally, a comprehensive and genuinely verifiable agreement, limiting both qualitatively and quantitatively the respective strategic forces, on earth and in space, will require a much more felicitous political climate than currently exists. Negotiations may lead to such improvement, but in the setting of intense and profound geopolitical rivalry, how realistic is it to expect in the near future accommodation sufficient to generate the political will essential for a genuine breakthrough in arms-control negotiations? The mere mentions of Afghanistan, Nicaragua, Sakharov and Soviet violations of the humanitarian provisions of the Helsinki Final Act dramatize the depths of the problem. There may be no direct negotiating linkage between these acts of Soviet misconduct and arms control, but their political interaction is evident.

This is why there is currently such an emphasis on maintaining peace via the doctrine of deterrence based on mutual assured destruction, called MAD. But what does this mean in an age when weapons are becoming incredibly precise, mobile and difficult to count? In the absence of a miraculous breakthrough in arms control, the only possible protection within the framework of the deterrence approach is to stockpile more offensive systems. This is in part what we are doing. But how many of such systems will be needed in the likely conditions of the next decade? If Soviet strategic forces continue to grow both quantitatively and qualitatively, our country will have to deploy, at enormous cost, probably no fewer than 1,500 to 2,000 mobile Midgetmen to preserve deterrence. How will they be deployed? Where? And at what cost? And will the Soviet Union and the United States be more or less secure with the deployment of such precise weaponry capable of effective preemption? The Soviet answer is clear: The Russians are busy enhancing the survivability of their leadership and of their key facilities by hardening, dispersal and deception.

This second traditional alternative, mutual assured destruction, cannot be an acceptable, long-run option, although it is a necessary policy in the absence of an alternative, given the dynamics of weapons technology. Thus, a new third option, the Strategy of Mutual Security, must be explored as preferable. The combination of defense against space missiles with retaliatory offense in reserve enhances deterrence.

And it does not compromise stability, even if only the United States were initially to have such a strategic defense. The deployment of the systems described above would not give us absolute protection from Soviet retaliation against a possible first strike by us, a reasonable though misplaced Soviet concern. Furthermore, the Russians know we are not deploying first-strike counterforce systems in sufficient numbers to make a first strike by us feasible. In any case, one can be quite certain that the Russians will also be moving to acquire an enhanced strategic defense, even if they do not accept President Reagan's offer to share ours. Indeed, they are doing so now and have been for some time.

As our strategic space-defense initiative expands incrementally, it should be realistically possible to scale down our offensive forces. Such a transition, first of the United States and eventually of the Soviet Union, into a genuinely defensive posture, with neither side posing a first-strike threat to the other, would not only be stabilizing but it would also be most helpful to the pursuit of more far-reaching arms-control agreements. Strategic defense would compensate for the inevitable difficulties of verification and for the absence of genuine trust by permitting some risk-taking in such agreements. This is another reason why strategic defense should not be traded in the forthcoming negotiations in return for promises that can be broken at any time.

No significant public policy can be carried out in a democracy without being fully discussed and accepted by the broad polity. Nor can an interested public be expected to resolve disputes among experts as to questions of technical feasibility. The current debate over President Reagan's initiative for a strategic defense program suffers from that conflict among scientists. It is important to clarify this issue.

We can begin a two-tiered strategic defense that would protect command structure as well as our missiles and silos and thus discourage any thoughts by the Soviet military that a first-strike effort would be effective. Some within the scientific community minimize the importance of this technical feasibility and emphasize instead the view that it is scientifically impossible today to provide a strategic defense that will protect our cities. Such a broad defense of populations is today not feasible, but it is prudent for our society to keep in mind the rising tide of technical and scientific advances so rapidly overwhelming the 20th century.

The "impossible" is a concept we should use with great hesitation. It is foolhardy to predict the timing of innovations. We are persuaded that the laws of physics do not in any way prevent the technical requirements of a defensive shield that would protect populations as well as weapons. A total shield should remain our ultimate objective, but there is every reason for us to explore transitional defenses, particularly because the one we have discussed would serve to deter the dangers of a first strike. Defenses against ballastic missiles can be effective without being "perfect," and the technology for this is nearly in hand.

Society must also not forget that ever since the beginning of the scientific age, the organized scientific community has not had a particularly good record of predicting developments that were not part of the common wisdom of the day. In 1926, for example, A. W. Bickerton, a British scientist, said it was scientifically impossible to send a rocket to the moon. In the weapons field, United States Adm. William D. Leahy told President Harry S. Truman in 1945: "That [atomic] bomb will never go off, and I speak as an expert in explosives." And Dr. Vannevar Bush, who directed the Government's World War II science effort, said after the war that he rejected the talk "about a 3,000-mile rocket shot from one continent to the other carrying an atomic bomb . . . and we can leave that out of our thinking." In the strategic area, as late as 1965, the capable Secretary of Defense Robert S. McNamara wrote: "There is no indication that the Soviets are seeking to develop a strategic force as large as our own."

Our debate and our discussion, furthermore, must not ignore what the Russians, who have always understood the need for defenses, are doing in space. They have spent more on strategic defensive forces since the antiballistic missile (ABM) treaty was signed in 1972 than on strategic offensive forces. Their antisatellite program began nearly two decades ago. The Soviet military is now working aggressively on a nationwide missile-defense system; and it now appears ready to deploy a system capable of defending the country not only against aircraft, but also many types of ballistic missiles. Clearly, the Soviet work in strategic defense has taken place in spite of ABM treaty provisions. The large radar installation in central Siberia expressly violates that treaty with us. Yet the planning for it must have begun many years ago.

The recent Geneva meeting must be considered a major productive result of President Reagan's March 1983 speech announcing that we would begin developing a strategic defense initiative. We are reminded that in 1967 President Lyndon B. Johnson proposed to Prime Minister Aleksei N. Kosygin a ban on ABM's, which was flatly rejected. In 1969, President Nixon proposed to the Congress that our country begin such an ABM program, because the Russians showed little desire to join us in prohibiting such weapons. Shortly after Congress approved that program, the Russians embraced the idea of an ABM treaty. Had our Government not announced its S.D.I. program, we might still be in the cold storage of the Soviet freeze precipitated by their walking out of the Geneva negotiations.

Arms control has been said to be at a dead end, and the stalemate has reflected an impasse in thought and in conception. Our present policy requires both us and the Soviet Union to rely on a theory of mutual annihilation based on a strategic balance of offensive weapons. The American approach has been to depend on deterrence alone and not on defending ourselves from Soviet offensive weapons, while the Russians have made it clear by their actions that they intend to defend themselves against our missiles. In any event, what is clear is that mankind must find ways of lifting itself out of this balance of terror. Mutual assured destruction must be replaced by mutual assured survival. Our safety cannot depend on our having no defense against missiles. The proper role of government is to protect the country from aggression, not merely avenge it. It is astounding that a President should be faulted for seeking a formula and an approach that will protect us from the continual threats and terrors coming from the volatile vagaries of aventurism and miscalculation.

Even if a perfect defense of our population should be impossible to achieve—and none of us can be certain of that—the leaders of our Government have a responsibility to seek defense alternatives designed to complicate and frustrate aggressi BAD MAG TAPE on by our adversaries. The very injection of doubt into their calculations strengthens the prospect of hesitation and deterrence. It may not be possible to destroy the world's ballistic missiles, but if we can return them to the status of a retaliatory deterrent rather than a pre-emptive strike we will have reduced the need for the existing large arsenal and thereby the threat of war.

The argument has been made that the S.D.I. is politically harmful because our North Atlantic Treaty Organization allies have not received the initiative with any enthusiasm. Their skepticism is an understandable initial reaction. First of all, our allies were taken by surprise by the President's March proposal of a Strategic Defense Initiative. At times, secret discussions are necessary, but doubtless allied cooperation will be forthcoming in direct proportion to timely and honest consultation. Furthermore, European politisal leaders feel under great pressure from an activist peace movement that emphasizes traditional arms-control negotiations as a major objective. A new approach, which the Russians critize as hostile, is, therefore, looked upon as troubling, regardless of its merit.

As to the substance of the initiative, coupling our national security interest with that of our allies is a foundation of NATO defense. Any tendency toward decoupling produces great concern on their part. Western European leaders look upon all security proposals with that criterion in mind. Should America technically succeed in providing a shield against missiles, Europeans wonder whether they would then not be left in an exposed position, facing a superior Soviet conventional military force.

The concerns may be understandable, but will diminish with time and discussion. First of all, President Reagan's call for strategic defense brought the Russians back to the Geneva negotiating table. More important, however, it will become increasingly evident to our friends, as some of the confusion about the technology dissipates, that the ability of the United States to protect its missiles immeasurably strengthens our power to deter and thereby serves to protect our allies. Indeed, such a system is expected to be at least as effective against the SS-20's aimed at western Europe as it is against ICBM's. Finally, a development pulling the world away from the precipice of nuclear terror goes far to help create an encouraging atmosphere for dialogue and agreement, a vital prerequisite for peace.

In light of the above, we reach two basic conclusions:

(1) Developing a stabilizing, limited two-tier strategic defense capability is desirable and called for by the likely strategic conditions immediately ahead. Such a deployment would be helpful both in the military and in the political dimensions. It is a proper response to the challenge posed by political uncertainties and the dynamics of weapons development. The two-layered defense described here can be deployed by the early 1990's. Americans will rest easier when that limited defense is in place, for it will mean that the prospect of a Soviet first strike is almost nil.

(2) A three- or four-layer defense, using such advanced technologies as the laser now under investigation in the research phase of the Strategic Defense Initiative, may become a reality by the end of the century. If this research shows an advanced system to be practical, its deployment may well boost the efficiency of our defense to a level so close to perfection as to signal a final end to the era of nuclear ballistic missiles. A research program offering such enormous potential gains in our security must be pursued, in spite of the fact that a successful outcome cannot be assured at this juncture.

The current debate is necessary. There are many questions, technical and political, ahead of us. For the debate to be constructive, however, we must overcome the tendency to politicize it on a partisan basis. Our objectives should be to find a way out of the current maze of world terror. The President's initiative toward that end is a major contribution to arms control and stability. The aim of making nuclear weapons impotent and obsolete should be encouraged and not savaged.

WILL YOU REALLY BE ABLE TO COUNT ON YOUR FRIENDLY JAPANESE BANKER?

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, the new President of Citibank—the biggest bank in the world—plans to leapfrog the Federal laws that insulate our local banking institutions from an invasion by the huge banks in New York and California. He may do it. He has a lot going for him. If he succeeds, American banking and American small communities will never be the same again. American banking is unique in the world. Only in America do we have thousands of commercial banks—in fact, 15,000—that are largely locally owned and serve local communities. But even those commercial banks constitute only a part of the credit available to the American economy in this credit economy of ours. We have another additional 25,000 financial institutions, largely locally owned—savings and loans and credit unions. These institutions too are now empowered by law to make most loans required by Americans.

So what is so special about all this? Mr. President, there is plenty special about the role these locally owned, small institutions play in this country. In most every other large country in the world—you name it, Canada, the United Kingdom, West Germany, France, Italy, the Scandinavian countries—a very few big banks, usually only four or five, do literally 90 percent of the banking business. Oh, sure, there are a few small banks here and there that handle some specialty or provide some credit. But a few big banks dominate the credit business in the vast majority of countries. The United States is the rare exception.

Is this good or bad for the United States? Well, I like it. I think most Americans, if they know about our country's unique distinction, like it too. American small business can work in our thousands of communities with an owner who lives in the community, a person he knows often from growing up with him, an owner who has made the community his community, a place where he was born, lives, works and, when he dies, will lie in the local cemetery with everyone else. But suppose the local business man turns out to be a success and a big one. He needs big financing. He outgrows the bank. Then what? Then the local bank has an easy, available answer. The small local banker has a big correspondent bank in the State's major city, another even larger correspondent bank in the nearest big money center; for example, Chicago, Atlanta, New York, or San Francisco. This works very well. The biggest banks in this country are already big enough to finance anything—whether the borrower is the biggest corporation or a foreign country. Our biggest banks are as big as they come. But our country is so vast that, unlike every other country on Earth, our 10 biggest banks do not do 90 percent of the banking business but only about 30 percent.

This country has the best capital markets in the world. We also have locally owned banks in thousands of American communities. It is a great system, but we are about to lose it. In the past 20 years, there has been a spectacular invasion of local banking by bank holding companies. Almost all of this has been within States. In Wisconsin, for instance, the largest banks—headquartered in Milwaukee—have used their holding company to extend ownership into communities throughout the State. In some parts of the country—notably New England—interstate regional pacts have permitted banks to extend their holding companies into neighboring States. This country has moved a long way toward centralized banking. Locally owned banks are beginning to lose ground.

Now Mr. Reed and National City, armed with some very big advances in technology, are about to crash through in a way that will knock out thousands of local banks and begin to make local banking appear to be technologically obsolete. How will Reed do it? He will do it with a credit card that permits holders to borrow money for mortgages, student loans, auto loans, and even business working capital loans on their National City Bank credit card. They can also invest their savings, that is, make deposits. They can buy certificates of deposit and even make ordinary savings deposits through their Citibank credit card. It is quite a convenience. It certainly violates the spirit, and possibly the letter, of Federal laws that prohibit branch banking across State lines. And what does it do to your local banker? It threatens to take away the very heart of his business. After all, bankers are in business to make loans, just as farmers are in the business of growing crops and doctors in the business of healing people who become ill. If National City takes the banking business out of the hands of the Farmers & Merchants Bank of Richland Center, WI, that little local bank has had it. Needless to say, if the Jim Browns who live in Richland Center decide to deposit their savings through their credit card with National City instead of the F&M Bank in Richland Center, the local bank will have nothing to lend. So is this a life and death struggle for local banking? You bet it is.

Mr. President, on Saturday, January 26, the New York Times, in a remarkable article by Nicholas Kristof, documented how this amazing credit technology has made banking not just a national instead of a local business but is increasingly making it an international operation. Borrowing, lending, and investing can now be accomplished instantaneously between New York and Tokyo with telephones, teletypes, and computers that can bring such a transaction together as quickly as if the depositor or borrower were right across the street from the bank. As Mr. Kristof points out, Japanese investors are buying U.S. securities by the billions—so are United Kingdom investors and investors from all over the world. Foreigners are, in fact, underwriting much of our colossal deficit. In the process they are holding down our interest rates and pushing up their own. The international credit market surely makes our own monetary policy far more difficult. After all, how can the Federal Reserve control our money supply when American borrowers can easily and quickly tap funds from other countries. Difficult as this becomes for the U.S. Federal Reserve Bank, it is almost impossible for central banks in foreign countries. Our economy is so big that the Fed can limit credit in this country even if borrowers do get much of their credit abroad. But how about the monetary policy of a country like England or France or West Germany? France, in fact, tried a few years back to stimulate its economy with an easy monetary and fiscal policy but was frustrated because the attempted stimulus simply spilled over into other countries and produced a run on the franc that increased inflation. The New York Times article reports that:

> Experts say that a dozen odd financial houses from the United States, Japan, and Europe—those equipped with capital and innovation—will come to dominate the business.

That is business lending. A manager of Brown Bros., Harriman predicts:

> What I think we'll see over about the next 10 years is the development of world-class institutions, with headquarters in three or four cities.

A Miss McFadden of the New York Mercantile Exchange is reported to have said: "It's tremendously exciting. And to a certain extent we're all pioneers."

The reaction of this Senator is "Whoa, take it easy. Slow down." All this may be exciting for some of the biggies on Wall Street. But back in Wisconsin, whether you are a banker or local businessman who depends on local banks, it is very threatening. If a few big banking firms in Tokyo, Paris, London, and New York control the credit that constitutes the lifeblood of business, what happens to our thousands of American communities that now rely on local bankers who are born in the community, live in the community, and die in the community? Will the big banking house in Tokyo really have that kind of concern? Does the American small businessman want to rely on his friendly Japanese banker for the credit that constitutes his lifeblood?

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the article by Nicholas Kristof from the Saturday, January 26, edition of the New York Times be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WORLD FINANCIAL CURBS EASED BY TECHNOLOGY AND IDEOLOGY

(By Nicholas D. Kristof)

From Tokyo's gleaming business district to the hectic trading rooms of Wall Street, a wave of financial deregulation is sweeping business centers.

Spurred by a spreading free-market ideology and by advances in global communications, restrictions that had curbed and cosseted financial markets are being dismantled.

Interest rates are being freed from government regulation. Withholding taxes are being eliminated on the foreign purchase of domestic securities. Domestic financial markets are being opened to foreigners. Financial institutions are being allowed to enter new business.

ERODING ECONOMIC BOUNDARIES

As these changes gather momentum, they are eroding economic boundaries, providing new opportunities for international investment but also frustrating national economic policies and provoking competition among the world's largest financial houses.

"As the world gets smaller," said David J.P. Meachim, a managing director of Merrill Lynch Capital Markets, "the major financial centers are trying to cope with the need of companies to raise money around the world and the desire of investors to invest in foreign securities. All of these things, going on at the same time, are increasingly connecting the capital markets."

To be sure, the internationalization of markets, as it is called, has precedents. As far back as the 13th century, Florentine banks financed England's wars. And since the 1960's, the explosion of American dollars abroad and then the growth of other currencies held outside national borders have given risen to the vast Eurodollar and Eurocurrency markets for international finance.

What is new is the extent to which markets are being further internationalized by the dismantling of domestic financial regulations.

U.S. OWNERSHIP OF FOREIGN STOCKS

"In a much more internationalized world, the U.S. institutional investors are becoming truly more interested in international investing, on a more opportunistic, long-term, planned basis," said Yves-André Istel, a managing director of the First Boston Corporation. "As an example, we believe there is probably $10 billion to $12 billion in non-U.S. equities owned by U.S. institutional investors, up from $1 billion to $2 billion five or ten years ago."

The deregulation trend has been gathering force for more than a decade. In 1973 foreign currency markets abandoned fixed exchange rates and moved to floating rates set by market forces. In 1975, the United States abolished fixed stock commissions and then, as a deregulatory philosophy took hold, proceeded to dismantle restrictions on interest rates.

A more permissive attitude was adopted toward the activities of financial institutions, and the distinctions betwen banking and brokerage and other financial services began to blur. Last summer Washington ended the withholding tax on interest paid to foreign holders of bonds.

AMERICAN INSPIRATION

Other countries, inspired by the invigorated American economy, seemed determined not to be left behind. In some cases, such as Japan, countries were prodded by the United States to open up their closed financial systems to international competition. Among the manifold results are these:

The London Stock Exchange agreed two years ago to adopt major changes, including an end to fixed commissions by the end of 1986. New competition will be injected by allowing stockbrokers to hold shares for themselves, instead of just trading stock for others. And foreigners will be allowed a much greater role, already setting off a wave of purchases of stakes in British financial houses by American institutions.

Last May the Japanese Government agreed under pressure from the United States to liberalize its financial markets. The first fruit of this is the Euroyen market, which since Dec. 1 has allowed American and European countries to raise yen outside of Japan. Foreign companies are expected to join the Tokyo stock exchange, although none has been able to join so far, and some of the $375 billion in postal savings accounts and $60 billion in pension funds probably will be invested abroad. Interest rates also will probably be deregulated in home markets.

Canada is dramatically relaxing its rules on foreign investment. "Canada is open for business again," its new Prime Minister, Brian Mulroney, declared in proposing abolition in most cases of the complex review procedures that had stymied foreigners who wished to establish businesses in Canada.

There are other examples as well.

Australia's Labor Party Government, elected in March 1983, has ended exchange controls and allowed foreign banks to compete in domestic markets. South Korea is making it easier for foreigners to invest there. China last year issued its first public stock offering since the Communists took over in 1949 and a stock market is being planned for Zhuhai in southern China, near Macao. And last year Norway, Sweden and Portugal became the last of the 24 members of the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development to admit foreign banks into their domestic markets, at least under some circumstances.

IMPACT OF TECHNOLOGY

What brought about these changes? Analysts say technology, especially in communications, was the principal factor. Computer screens and telephones can link New York almost as easily with Tokyo as with Chicago. In addition, more sophisticated investors began to look for better returns abroad, while high interest costs drove companies that wanted to borrow to the Euromarkets.

"What you have is massive financial flows, such as you haven't had at any time in our history," said William C. Freund, chief economist of the New York Stock Exchange.

"What you have is developments in technology with microprocessing and satellites that make it possible to access markets all over the world. And then you also have in many countries a trend toward financial deregulation."

In addition, the changes created their own momentum. Britain, in particular felt that its financial district would have to modernize to remain a significant world business center. The United States repealed its withholding tax so that it could help entice foreigners to finance the Federal budget deficit, and to compete for funds France and West Germany said they would repeal theirs.

Political pressures were also a factor, especially in Japan, where the Government agreed to free its financial markets after long negotiations with the United States. Washington had pushed for these measures largely to strengthen the yen and reduce the United States trade deficit. Many experts believe, however, that the effect of the deregulation at least for several years will be a flow of capital from Japan—weakening the yen further and aggravating the trade deficit.

The intellectual underpinning for deregulation came with the return to vogue of market economics. Conservative governments are in office in the United States, Britain, Japan, West Germany, Canada and elsewhere, while Socialist governments in France, Spain and Australia have adopted fairly conservative economic policies.

The trend is less clear among developing countries. For example, the Cairo stock exchange—the oldest in the third world—is gaining vigor but is far from integrating with markets in any other country. Some disenchantment with deregulation arises in developing countries because of its ill effects.

"In Latin America, the deregulation has really been catastrophic," said Rudiger Dornbusch, Ford International Professor of Economics at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology. The combination of heavy government borrowing and deregulation, he added, has pushed interest rates so high that they strangle the economy.

Even in industrialized countries, deregulation may have pernicious consequences for economic policy. Jeffrey A. Frankel, and economics professor who has just completed a monograph on the Japanese liberalization for the Institute of International Economics in Washington, said that one of the Japanese concerns was that creation of a pool of Euroyen would hamper control of the money supply. For the same reason, West Germany has been reluctant to internationalize its currency.

EFFECT ON INTEREST RATES

But the problem is not merely one of controlling the money supply. As funds become fickle, willing to fly abroad at the drop of an interest rate, they tug interest rates up and down. For example, when rates rose in the United States a year ago, European countries found that, to keep savings at home, they had to raise their rates, too.

The other arm of economic policy, a fiscal stimulus by deficit spending, also becomes more complex in an integrated world. For example, a stimulative economic policy failed in France in 1981 and 1982, when its neighbors were retrenching. President François Mitterrand has to abandon the policy because it was ineffective—much of the stimulus spilled over into other countries—and provoked a run on the franc that increase inflation and threatened national honor.

On the other hand, countries may find it easier to finance their budget deficits with foreign capital than with local capital. The United States, of course, is financing its record budget deficit in part with foreign savings. And Sweden last summer made the largest debt offering in history—$1.5 billion—which would have been very difficult for the country itself to absorb. Even the European Economic Community chose to borrow last month not in Europe, but in the United States. That bond issue, denominated in a mix of currencies called the European Currency Unit, was the first public debt issue in America in a currency other than dollars.

Many experts say the contagion of innovation and deregulation in the bond markets is spreading to stock markets. Among the signs that point in that direction are the offering of stocks in different countries, the listing of foreign companies on stock exchanges, the prospect of allowing foreigners to join exchanges, the increasing diversification of portfolios by investing in equities in different countries and the linking of trading floors.

In the largest stock sale in history, for example, the British national telephone company was sold eight weeks ago to investors not only in Britain but also in Japan, Canada and the United States. And American companies have been rushing to London to be listed on the London Stock Exchange, while American brokerage houses hope eventually to join the exchange. Meanwhile Japanese traders have been dealing in such stocks as the International Business Machines Corporation, which are now listed on the Tokyo Stock Exchange.

"International deregulation of the equity world is probably what will happen next, and the British are probably leading the way," said Roy C. Smith, a general partner of Goldman, Sachs & Company. Mr. Smith returned in September from four years of running the investment bank's rapidly expanding London office.

John J. Phelan Jr., chairman of the New York Stock Exchange, is pushing for 24-hour trading—which to a very limited degree already exists informally—and he has tried to lure foreign companies to be listed on the Big Board.

Meanwhile, the American Stock Exchange is studying a link with the Toronto Stock Exchange, and the Chicago Mercantile Exchange has already established one with the Singapore Monetary Exchange. Rosemary T. McFadden, president of the New York Mercantile Exchange, said the Merc was considering links with exchanges in London and Singapore.

Some experts say that the trading floors themselves will disappear as trades are made by telephone or computer instead of in person.

CORPORATE BENEFITS

Among the beneficiaries of the deregulation are corporations, which will be able to raise money more flexibly and probably more cheaply than in the past. Instead of simply issuing bonds or shares, for example, they can raise yen in Europe and then swap them into dollars or another currency. The result is that they pay slightly less interest than they would otherwise.

"More options are available to corporate treasurers," said W. Allen Harrison, assistant treasurer of the Exxon Corporation, "and last year a record number of American companies went abroad to European and other markets." Corporations issued $180.3 billion in bonds in the Euromarkets in the first 11 months of 1984, compared with only $47.9 billion in Eurobonds in all of 1983, according to Saloman Brothers estimates.

This new and complex business is a delight for many investment banks. Experts say that a dozen-odd financial houses from the United States, Japan and Europe—those equipped with capital and innovation—will come to dominate the business even more than they do now.

"What I think we'll see over about the next 10 years is the development of world-class financial institutions, with headquarters in three or four cities," said Lawrence A. Veit, a manager of Brown Brothers Harriman.

No one can guess all the possibilities, and past predictions about economic integration are not reassuring. For example, a best-selling book published in 1910, "The Great Illusion," argued that increased interdependence among economies and rising military costs made another major European war impossible. But the uncertainty about the future is one reason why many financial players find the times so exhilarating.

"It's tremendously exciting," Miss McFadden of the New York Mercantile Exchange said. "And to a certain extent, we're all pioneers. In 10 years, I think we'll be looking back at how we're doing this, and we'll think it was primitive."

GRIPPING TELEVISION IS NOT ENOUGH

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, "Playing for Time," a movie depicting the atrocities of a Nazi death camp, aired on ABC the 9th and 10th of January. The movie is one of many concerned with the horrors of the period. Our society teems with literature of the Holocaust. Nazi Germany's attempted elimination of the Jews stands at the apex of genocidal acts through history.

Apparently, exposure to the plight of the Jews has numbed some to the brutal reality of the world outside. It has led others to conclude that it must not happen again. Unfortunately, publicity and condemnation of the Holocaust has not expunged genocide from current events.

Anyone would agree that genocide is the most heinous of acts. But cultural assumptions do not suffice. Our record on human rights is not enough. Publicity is not enough. Condemnation is not enough. We must ratify the Genocide Treaty in order to proclaim through law our serious opposition to such barbarous campaigns.

Doubtless, participation in the convention can only underline our determination. Ratification would be a preliminary step to constitutionally consistent legislation. Accordingly, our advice and consent is the very least we can offer by stating that we will be bound by the most fundamental principles of human rights.

Furthermore, when the United States becomes party to the convention, its position in foreign affairs will be vastly improved. First, our current status makes us obvious and vulnerable targets beneath the eye of members. How can we point the finger of human rights when we ourselves cannot even resolve to ratify the Genocide Convention?

Second, becoming party to the convention will enable us to encourage others to join. The greater the number of members, the lesser likelihood of genocidal campaigns.

Experts state that the treaty is within the bounds of our Constitution and does not override the authority of that Constitution. Its ratification is a gesture essential to our credibility as a proponent of human rights.

WIDESPREAD EDITORIAL OPPOSITION TO THE MEESE NOMINATION

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, is the nomination of Edwin Meese to be Attorney General of the United States opposed mainly by a vocal band of critics situated inside the beltway? Far from it. Through the good efforts of Common Cause, the determined and dedicated citizens lobby of 250,000 strong, Senators and the Nation as a whole are learning of the widespread editorial opposition to the selection of Mr. Meese to head the Justice Department.

Publications from coast to coast—over 50 in number, to date—are denouncing the Meese nomination for what it is: A total disaster and a gross insult to the American people. Thanks to Common Cause, it is clear that strong voices in every section of our country are speaking out against Mr. Meese and asking the U.S. Senate to do its duty and reject this uniquely ill-suited nominee.

As the Senate Judiciary Committee begins its hearings on the Meese nomination, I hope that my colleagues will review these expressions of outrage and concern.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a sampling of the editorial views to which I have been referring be printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Chicago Tribune, Dec. 29, 1984]

APPOINTING A CRONY-GENERAL

According to Archibald Cox, the former special prosecutor in the Watergate case, presidential counselor Edwin Meese has shown "utter insensitivity to ethical standards" and therefore should not be confirmed as U.S. attorney general. His reasons seem more complicated than they need be. Mr. Meese should not be attorney general simply because he is a bad choice for the job.

Mr. Cox made his comments at a press conference on findings by another special prosecutor—this one a court-appointed investigator who looked into charges that Mr. Meese had violated federal laws. The conclusion was that he had not. He was charged with nominating or supporting for federal jobs several persons with whom he'd had financial dealings; Jacob Stein, the independent counsel, did not dispute that, but found that these actions did not add up to criminal wrongdoing. Mr. Stein did not comment on the ethical questions involved or Mr. Meese's overall fitness for the post.

Ethics is just what concerned Mr. Cox and Common Cause, the public-interest group he now heads. And it has become the principal focus of attention in the Meese appointment.

But this is not the only argument against Mr. Meese, or even the main one. Let us pretend that Mr. Meese had never tried to wrangle federal jobs for people who had done him financial favors—that he was a model of rectitude admired by all. That does not change the fact that he is unqualified for the post.

Mr. Meese has some background in law; he was deputy district attorney of California's Alameda County, and formerly directed the Center for Criminal Justice Policy and Management at the University of San Diego school of law. But this country abounds in better legal scholars and constitutional experts; Mr. Meese is primarily a businessman, and his role in the administration has been that of a planner and organizational troubleshooter. He was nominated for the sole reason that President Reagan likes him and seems unaware that any other qualification is needed.

If the appointment goes through, it will be an unabashed admission that the federal government is being run on the buddy system. To be the nation's top legal officer under this administration, one apparently needs only to be a booming, jovial fellow whose political views coincide with the President's. But that isn't nearly enough.

[From the Los Angeles Times, Dec. 31, 1984]

MEESE: THE WRONG MAN

Last February President Reagan nominated his longtime associate and counselor, Edwin Meese III, as attorney general. Late next month the Senate Judiciary Committee is expected to hold confirmation hearings on that nomination. This will be the second time around for Meese and the committee, the first hearings having been suspended earlier this year so that an independent counsel could investigate allegations of criminal wrongdoing by the nominee.

The counsel, Jacob A. Stein, a respected Washington lawyer, concluded last September that there was no evidence to support criminal prosecution of Meese on any of the 11 charges raised against him. But Stein said that he would leave it to others to determine whether Meese had adhered to the standards of ethics and propriety that his White House position required and that his potential role at the head of the Justice Department demands.

The ethical questions regarding Meese for the most part involve money and patronage. In half a dozen cases Meese arranged federal jobs for people who had either directly or, through the institutions that they served, indirectly helped the Meese family financially. These favors included cash loans—among them an interest-free loan of $15,000 to Meese's wife that he failed to disclose, as the law requires.

An additional favor to Meese came from the Army, which at his request approved a highly irregular transfer from the retired to the ready reserve. That move opened the way for Meese to enjoy more exalted rank and the benefits that accompany it. The Army later acknowledged the impropriety of the transfer, and Meese withdrew to the retired reserve. But he retained the promotion and benefits that he received as a result of the unwarranted move.

There may indeed be nothing illegal about a government official conferring public rewards on those who have done him private favors, but, unproscribed or not, such actions are ethically indefensible. They are particularly so for a person who seeks to become the nation's chief law-enforcement officer. The Senate, in the view of many of its leaders, has no taste for continuing the fight over the Meese nomination, and his confirmation as attorney general for now seems assured. But Senate approval will neither answer nor eradicate the questions that have been raised about proper behavior. An ethical blind spot is a major infirmity in an attorney general. In our view it is a disqualifying one.

[From the Cleveland (OH) Plain Dealer, Dec. 31, 1984]

EDWIN MEESE, REDUX

Early in the new year White House counselor Edwin Meese III is expected to appear before the Senate Judiciary Committee in his second effort to win confirmation as attorney general. He should not be confirmed.

Ethical questions regarding Meese's personal financial dealings, which caused the committee to suspend 1983's confirmation proceedings, remain. The fact that the five-month investigation by special prosecutor Jacob A. Stein could find no basis for prosecuting the president's lawyer for violating criminal law does not mean that Meese is fit to serve as the nation's chief law enforcement officer.

Nor did the Stein report attempt to address that issue. The special prosecutor specifically pointed out that he was making no comment on Meese's ethics or the propriety of his conduct.

He wasn't required to. Nor was there any need to. It was plainly improper for Meese to have helped people who lent him money get government jobs—before or after the exchange of funds. Since he did, ignoring the ethical considerations involved with such behavior, there is no putting aside the concern that at attorney general, Meese might be less than effective as a watchman responsible for pursuing the impropriety of others.

There is further discomfort in Meese's engineering for himself a promotion to the rank of colonel in the Army reserve when he lacked the formal training requirements—which were waived in lieu of something called "constructive educational credit." Presumably he was awarded such credit for his White House work experience with the commander-in-chief. In any event, the man who assigned the credit—the chief of the Army reserve, was recommended for a second term. By the new reserve colonel and counselor to the president, Edwin Meese III.

If the attorney general of the United States should be a person whose credentials should be above reproach—and that is what the job demands—then Meese is the wrong individual for the post. His casualness with ethical standards places a disagreeable scent in the public nostril. He does not deserve Senate confirmation.

[From the Beaumont (TX) Enterprise, Dec. 22, 1984]

REAGAN SHOULD LIFT MEESE NOMINATION

America's top law enforcment officer never should have to prove his innocence of charges that he misused his position or influence.

Yet, that is what presidential counselor Edwin Meese III—President Reagan's choice to be the nation's new attorney general—has been forced to do.

Despite being cleared of criminal wrongdoing by an investigation into whether he improperly obtained government jobs for friends, Meese is no more qualified to join the Cabinet now than he was when the questions first arose.

The citizens public interest lobby Common Cause, certainly no friend of the Reagan administration, has issued a report of its own that condemns the Meese nomination. Common Cause chairman Archibald Cox, the former Watergate special prosecutor, said the group's study reveals Meese's "utter insensitivity to ethical standards critical to confidence in government."

Meese's nomination came under fire last year when an investigation looked into allegations that his wife spent government money for personal use and charges that Meese used his influence in the administration to win favors for friends. But just last September, a special prosecutor who investigated Meese said he found "no basis . . . for the bringing of a prosecution against Mr. Meese for the violation of a federal criminal statute."

However, the prosecutor did not deny that Meese did the things for which he was investigated. He said only that he saw no grounds for prosecution.

All right, Meese is not a criminal.

But that does not automatically qualify him to be attorney general of the United States.

Too many questions remain from the investigation into Meese's conduct for him to serve in a post that requires absolute trust.

Characteristically, the president has vowed to stick with his nominee and says he will present his name to the Senate once more for consideration. He should, however, withdraw his good friend's name.

The president surely can find someone with impeccable professional and ethical qualifications. Ed Meese simply does not fit that description.

[From Newsday, Dec. 21, 1984]

MEESE IS UNFIT TO BE ATTORNEY GENERAL

Archibald Cox and Common Cause, the nonpartisan citizens' lobby he heads, are doing the nation a favor by continuing to address the issue of Edwin Meese's fitness to serve as attorney general.

In a letter sent this week to all senators, Cox said a special prosecutor's report showed that Meese was "blind to the ethical standards and obligations required of a public official." Cox understands those requisites; he was the first Watergate prosecutor and was fired for being too effective.

Last spring, the Senate postponed action on Meese's nomination to succeed William French Smith after a number of charges surfaced. They were subsequently investigated by a special prosecutor, Jacob Stein, who concluded that there was not enough evidence to support a prosecution for violations of federal criminal law. President Ronald Reagan has said he intends to renominate his counselor and old friend, early next year.

Yet Meese and his family were repeatedly the objects of extraordinary financial largesse from friends and acquaintances, several of whom later landed federal jobs. There were also allegations of filing false financial disclosure statements, illegally accepting gifts and insider stock trading.

In response to the special prosecutor's queries, Meese often said he couldn't remember events or actions. As Cox noted, Stein's report "reflects a man who is not merely occasionally forgetful, but rather, if taken at his word, suffers from frequent lapses of memory concerning conversations, documents and events bearing upon the integrity of his conduct."

Last fall, Meese and Reagan hailed Stein's report as proof of Meese's total exoneration. But it's considerably less than that. Stein refused to comment on the appropriateness or ethics of Meese's actions or his fitness for office. But he noted rather pointedly, "There is sufficient interest in those other issues to support an expectation that they will not remain unexplored . . . " Common Cause now seeks to insure that they won't.

Not being indictable is surely an insufficient qualification for the nation's top law enforcement job. As we have said before, Reagan would be wise to look for another nominee. Better yet, Meese should withdraw of his own accord.

[From the Charlotte Observer, Jan. 2, 1985]

IS MEESE FIT? ETHICAL QUESTIONS REMAIN

Apparently Edwin Meese's nomination as U.S. Attorney General will sail through the Senate next month, now that a court-appointed independent counsel has found him unindictable for criminal misconduct.

In other words, Mr. Meese is not a crook. Never mind that he has shown almost no sensitivity for the questions of ethics, integrity and propriety that ought to concern the nation's top law enforcement officer. Apparently his loyalty to the president is sufficient qualification to get him into the attorney general's office.

Last year's confirmation hearings were aborted when questions arose about Mr. Meese's propensity for making rashly insensitive remarks about civil libertarians (among others) and for helping people get federal jobs after they helped bail him out of financial crises.

After a five-month probe of the favoritism charges, independent counsel Jacob Stein reported in September that he had found "no basis" for "the bringing of a prosecution against Mr. Meese for violation of a criminal statute." Mr. Stein took pains to point out, however, that he made "no comment on Mr. Meese's ethics and the propriety of his conduct or an evaluation of (his) fitness for office."

The president nevertheless hailed the report as a "gratifying" vindication of his old friend. N.C. Sen. John East, a judiciary committee member, said it reaffirmed his view of Mr. Meese as "a man of character and integrity." And Sen. Robert Dole, the new majority leader, pledged to move swiftly on the nomination. "I think we've held Ed Meese hostage long enough," Sen. Dole said.

The only fly in the ointment at this point is Archibald Cox, chairman of Common Cause and former Watergate special prosecutor. Mr. Cox has lately been pointing out that the Senate will be shirking its responsibility if it does not examine the ethical questions raised—but not resolved—by the Stein report.

". . . It is not enough for an attorney general to have a little ticket saying, 'we find no basis . . . for the bringing of a (criminal) prosecution.' Lack of evidence of violation of criminal statutes is one thing," said Mr. Cox. "Compliance with the ethical requirements of high office is quite another."

We concur with Mr. Cox and admire his perseverance. But we fear his eloquent defense of integrity will be drowned out by the pro-Meese chorus, led by a president whose standards for cabinet members have set a new low.

MEESE: THE AWFUL APPOINTMENT THAT SIMPLY WON'T GO AWAY

As soon as Bob Dole was crowned king of the Senate, he started showing signs of a strange ailment.

His mind goes blank whenever Edwin Meese III, friend of the president and financial finagler extraordinaire, is discussed. It may be catching; Meese's problem also involves memory lapse.

One of Dole's first promises as Majority Leader was to push for a vote on Meese's appointment as attorney general. Given his powerful position, if Dole wants a vote he'll get a vote.

And he'll probably get Meese confirmed which would be an insulting disregard of the job description for the attorney general. He or she is supposed to be the nation's top law enforcement officer.

It's reasonable to expect high standards of conduct from anyone in that post. That's why we choke at the thought of Meese.

Soon after President Reagan nominated him, allegations about Meese's financial sleights of hand began surfacing. A special prosecutor was appointed but, on Sept. 20, he decided there was "no basis" under federal law for prosecuting Meese.

Sen. Dole sees that as complete exoneration. "I think we've held Ed Meese hostage long enough," he said Sunday.

Poor Ed Meese. There he is, chained to his White House desk and forced to stay in a $60,000-plus job when he could be having fun as the nation's top cop.

Meese was clearly legally, it's true, but he certainly wasn't cleared ethically. The special prosecutor didn't say Meese did nothing wrong—nothing as clearcut as that. He chose his terminology carefully. The prosecutor found "no substantial evidence of any motive" to conceal questionable financial deals. Meese's explanations for omissions were "credible," prosecutor Jacob Stein said.

We'd call that a less than wholehearted exoneration—with good reason. Consider one of several accusations against Meese: He "forgot" to report a $15,000 interest-free loan to his wife from an old friend, Edwin Thomas. Later, Thomas, his wife and son got federal jobs. All just coincidences, the special prosecutor assures us.

Right. We're expected to believe a man with serious financial difficulties stemming from problems selling his California home would forget a loan amounting to one-fourth of his salary. And we're expected to believe he forgot or overlooked other financial favors from powerful people.

Dole accepts all this with blind faith—or he has forgotten Meese's past.

Senators should give the nominee the benefit of doubt legally. He's entitled to that. Then they should consider if his conduct meets the high ethical standards required of an attorney general.

On that count, Meese is entitled to no such benefit of doubt.

[From the New Republic, Jan. 21, 1985]

WHAT A MEESE!

By last spring it had become clear that Ed Meese couldn't be confirmed as Attorney General as long as suspicions remained about why so many of his financial benefactors had obtained government jobs. So Mr. Meese did a smart thing. He asked the Justice Department to appoint an independent counsel to decide whether or not to indict him—thus shifting public attention from the question of his fitness to be Attorney General to the question of his criminality. Last September Independent Counsel Jacob Stein decided that, on balance, Mr. Meese was not a criminal. President Reagan hailed the report as conclusive proof that the charges against Mr. Meese were "baseless." He demanded that the Senate swiftly confirm his friend. Most Senators seem eager to go along with this post post-Watergate mentality: if you're not indicted, you're a Boy Scout.

Well, we hate to be the only bluenoses in town, but we still have our doubts about Mr. Meese's qualifications. Mr. Stein himself emphasized that he could not meet a request from Mr. Meese's lawyers to dispel charges of "moral turpitude" against Mr. Meese. And the Stein report makes it clear that its conclusion doesn't mean there was no evidence of criminal conduct. The report depended also on "prosecutorial discretion"—subjective judgments about the severity of Mr. Meese's offenses and how difficult it would be to gain a conviction. Indeed, far from finding that the charges against Mr. Meese were baseless, the Stein report introduces damning new evidence, some of which is at odds with testimony given during Mr. Meese's confirmation hearings. (Scandal connoisseurs who want to learn more should consult articles by Christopher Hitchens in the December 29-January 5 issue of The Nation and Julie Kosterlitz in the January-February Common Cause.)

Mr. Meese, who always had to struggle to keep up with his wealthy California friends, invited trouble in the first place by living beyond his means. Then he relied on the kindness of those friends (and even strangers) to bail him out. Mr. Stein couldn't prove beyond a reasonable doubt that Mr. Meese knew his financial angels wanted government jobs—largely because Mr. Meese couldn't recall dozens of crucial events and documents. But it's hard to believe that Mr. Meese wasn't aware of what they were after.

Take the case of Thomas Barrack. In the summer of 1982, the Meeses wanted desperately to sell their San Diego home. Not only was their bank about to foreclose on the place, but they were also behind in payments on their $250,000 home in suburban Virginia. At the request of Mr. Meese's friend, Pendleton James, who had just stepped down as White House personnel chief, Mr. Barrack (whom Mr. Meese barely knew) came to the rescue. By September 1, Mr. Barrack had arranged a complicated sale which involved shelling out $83,000 of his own money.

Mr. Barrack then set about looking for a federal job. At Mr. Meese's confirmation hearings, Mr. Barrack said he never met with Mr. Meese during this job hunt. But the Stein report shows that Mr. Meese and Mr. Barrack met no fewer than four times that fall. After a meeting in Washington on September 8, Mr. Barrack sent Mr. Meese a letter thanking him for his "counsel and encouragement." On November 9 the Meeses had dinner in Georgetown; earlier that day Mr. Barrack had met with two cabinet officers about possible jobs. (Pendleton James was supposed to be there too, but had to cancel at the last minute. He asked Mrs. Meese if she and her husband would recognize Mr. Barrack. Mrs. Meese replied, "Oh, we'll recognize him. He'll be the one with a halo around his head.") Mr. Meese and his wife stayed at Mr. Barrack's California ranch over the Thanksgiving holiday, by which time James Watt had created a job for Mr. Barrack at the Interior Department. And on December 2 Mr. Barrack showed up at Mr. Meese's birthday party; the day before, he had started working for Mr. Watt. But Mr. Meese is not a curious man. He claims he didn't ask about Mr. Barrack's job hunt on any of these occasions. Yet another murky series of events centers on the $10,000 Mr. Meese received from the Presidential Transition Trust in November 1980. Mr. Meese testified to the Senate Judiciary Committee that the money was a "consulting fee." According to the Stein report, however, the $10,000 check was marked "moving expenses" when Mr. Meese cashed it on November 22. Later the check stubs were changed to read "consulting fees." Why the switch? No one remembers exactly. But Peter McPherson, a lawyer who headed the Transition Trust, testified to Mr. Stein that he told Mr. Meese in early December that it was illegal to use the trust's money for moving expenses. According to Mr. McPherson, Mr. Meese told him to drop the matter—but didn't mention that he'd already cashed a check for moving expenses. Also, fellow White House aide Michael Deaver told Mr. Stein that Mr. Meese said he'd try to find a source of cash to help Mr. Deaver make the move east, but later told him that "the lawyers" wouldn't permit it.

The only thing Mr. Meese claims to remember about all this is that he heard—somewhere—that there would be a "problem" with being paid moving expenses, and ordered the checks changed. Is Mr. Meese saying that he changed the records, but doesn't know why? (He never submitted a bill for consulting.) In a particularly generous bit of prosecutorial discretion, Mr. Stein came up with an innocent explanation. "Mr. Meese . . . did substantial work for [the Trust] . . . and thus was entitled to compensation for his services. Despite questions as to who authorized the changes . . . the records of the Trust were changed to reflect the revised purpose of the checks as consulting fees. On the basis of the above, we do not believe a violation . . . by Mr. Meese could be established."

We could go on and on. At a meeting on November 8, 1982, Mr. Meese and a San Francisco accountant, John McKean, agreed to defer $12,000 in interest payments Mr. Meese owed Mr. McKean. At the same meeting the two discussed extending Mr. McKean's appointment on the Postal Board of Governors. But Mr. Meese insists "there was never any connection in his mind" between the two matters. Contrary to what Mr. Meese implied at his confirmation hearings, the Secretary of the Army warned Mr. Meese—in a memo and a phone call—that it would at the very least create a bad appearance to grant Mr. Meese's request for a highly unusual (and highly lucrative) promotion in the Army Reserve. Mr. Meese took the promotion anyway. He claims not to remember the memo, even though the Stein investigators tried to refresh his memory by showing him a copy which he himself had mailed back to the Secretary. (Interestingly enough, the Stein report is silent on the question of whether Mr. Meese remembers the phone call.)

But you get the picture. The Stein report goes on for 400 pages and one searches in vain for signs that Mr. Meese ever thought of calling a halt to the monkey business being conducted on his behalf. He may not have done anything provably criminal, but his behavior was hardly what we'd expect from the nation's highest law enforcement officer. Mr. Meese's nomination comes up again at the end of this month, and the Administration wants a no-muss, no-fuss confirmation. The Senate shouldn't go along.

[From the New York Times, Dec. 20, 1984]

QUESTIONS FOR MR. MEESE

To be cleared of criminal suspicion is a relief but not a qualification for high office. Yet when a court-appointed independent counsel found no basis for indicting Edwin Meese in September, President Reagan saw the judgment as "vindication" of his nomination to be Attorney General. Now Robert Dole, the new Senate majority leader, says Mr. Meese, having endured Judiciary Committee grilling and a six-month special investigation, merits swift confirmation next month.

That skips an important step, as a new report by Common Cause makes clear. Before confirming Mr. Meese, the Senate needs to confront the ethical questions raised but not resolved in the report of the special counsel, Jacob Stein. It was beyond Mr. Stein's mandate to state an opinion of Mr. Meese's fitness for the highest law enforcement office. But the facts recited in his report call for analysis by the Senate.

Of chief concern are a number of financial favors for Mr. Meese around the time that, as the President's counselor, he helped his benefactors get Federal jobs. The Stein investigation uncovered no evil motive, or even conscious pattern in those favors. But Mr. Meese needs finally to explain why he sees no connections between favors received and extended, and why he senses no ethical danger in those transactions.

For example, Mr. Meese's promotion to colonel in the Army Reserve, though in no sense criminal, was highly irregular. Lacking the educational requirements, he was given "constructive educational credit" and the promotion—and then recommended an unusual second term for the chief of army reserves who had awarded that credit. Mr. Meese's well-based intercession, with the Secretaries of the Army and Defense, was successful.

Curiously, Mr. Meese couldn't recall either a memorandum or telephone call from former Secretary of the Army John Marsh advising that it would be better for him to wait a year for a more regular-seeming promotion. Such forgetfulness ran through Mr. Meese's Senate testimony and also his responses to Mr. Stein.

An Attorney General needs a good memory and a sharp eye for impropriety. The office helps set an administration's moral tone. The Senate cannot responsibly confirm Mr. Meese without getting better answers to the questions of ethics and appearances that his case raises.

[From the St. Louis Post-Dispatch, Dec. 23, 1984]

NO VINDICATION ON CHARACTER

Should Edwin Meese, the White House counselor, be confirmed as attorney general? Breaking its tradition of never having opposed a Cabinet-level nomination, the respected and nonpartisan citizens' lobby, Common Cause, says No. The reasoning behind that unusual judgment is solid and deserves the most serious consideration by the Senate, which must confirm President Reagan's selection.

Common Cause based its conclusion on the report, issued in September, by Special Prosecutor Jacob Stein, who investigated a wide assortment of charges of wrongdoing that had been leveled against Mr. Meese. Chief among these were allegations that Mr. Meese had improperly helped put persons who had assisted him financially into high positions in the Reagan administration and that he had failed to report, as required, a $15,000 interest-free loan to his wife. Both Mr. Meese and the president say that the prosecutor's finding, which absolved Mr. Meese of criminal behavior, has vindicated him. But Archibald Cox, Common Cause chairman and the first Watergate special prosecutor, says the report does no such thing.

To understand why, it is important to keep clear the exact purpose and intent of Mr. Stein's report. That is the only way to appreciate the significance of what it said and what it did not. A special prosecutor's only charge is to determine whether cause exists for criminal action against a high federal official. He has no mandate—and indeed it would be inappropriate for him to assume one—for any other investigation into that official. Hence, the question of Mr. Meese's fitness for attorney general was beyond Mr. Stein's charter. Properly, it was left unaddressed in the report.

Mr. Stein found no evidence that Mr. Meese had engaged in crimes, such as bribery, which had been suggested by the apparent quid pro quo of financial help for him, and federal jobs for his benefactors. But the 385 pages of the Stein report constitute a deep reservoir of facts—about loans to Mr. Meese and other matters—that ought to be deeply disturbing to those who must vote on his confirmation.

Was it good judgment to accept the money and then assist the lenders to obtain federal positions? Was it ethical for Mr. Meese to redesignate a $10,000 payment from a Reagan presidential transition trust from "moving expenses" to "consulting fees"—after learning that the former might well have been a violation of criminal law? Was it proper for Mr. Meese to recommend a second term as chief of Army Reserves to the officer who made possible his promotion to reserve colonel, although Mr. Meese lacked the former educational requirements for the rank?

The criminal possibilities in those questions have been answered by the special prosecutor. But the issues of judgment, ethics, and sensitivity to propriety—in short, the question of character—remain unsettled. The nation's highest law enforcement officer must have impeccable credentials on these matters; and here, the verdict of the Stein report has not vindicated Mr. Meese.

RECOGNITION OF SENATOR SPECTER

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senator from Pennsylvania is recognized.

S. 301—COMPREHENSIVE COAL BILL

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, today I am introducing a comprehensive coal bill to expand production and consumption of coal to revive this vital industry and expedite our national progress toward energy self-sufficiency.

This country is sitting on an estimated 4 trillion tons of coal, enough to assure U.S. energy independence for centuries to come. Yet, while coal comprises more than 80 percent of America's fossil fuel resources, it supplies only 23 percent of the Nation's energy.

Even with record production and consumption levels for 1984, that figure is projected to reach only 27 percent by 1995.

This valuable domestic resource is vastly underutilized, and as a result, we have failed to achieve the energy independence that is so vital for our national security and economic well-being. We must redouble our efforts to expand the market for coal, and this legislation is designed to do just that through a variety of measures.

By the end of 1984, it appeared as though the coal industry was beginning to recover from the economic slump which had seriously threatened it for the last several years. Record production and consumption figures raised hope for a revitalization that would benefit not only those in the coal industry, but all Americans. However, as we move into 1985, there are indications that this optimism should be tempered. Most experts point out that the 1984 surge in production and consumption is somewhat misleading because much of it was spurred by customers stockpiling coal in anticipation of a possible mine workers' strike. Since there was no strike, most analysts expect both production and sales to fall from present levels as customers use their large reserves.

Even a full economic recovery will not return the coal industry to the prosperity it once enjoyed. Demand for electricity, the largest use for coal by a factor of three, is done and will remain relatively low due to conservation. Exports are down because the cost of inland transportation makes American coal practically noncompetitive in the world marketplace. In fact, certain domestic coal markets are in danger of being lost to low-cost imports.

Economists predict that eastern coal production will total only 553 million tons, an increase over 1983 levels, but still below 1982 levels. Exports are expected to fall from 87 million tons to 60 million tons, a 31-percent decrease.

Over the long term, a number of problems could prevent coal from ever assuming its logical role as the fuel of choice for industry and utilities. In some instances, coal-fired facilities may be required to add expensive air quality control equipment. This would prevent many facilities from ever converting to coal from other fuel sources such as imported oil and natural gas. Another factor clouding the future of coal use is the faltering synthetic fuels industry. Due to the current low world price for oil and our domestic surplus of natural gas, synthetic fuels projects are finding that potential markets are closed to them.

My bill seeks to solve these problems and strengthen the coal industry so that our Nation's energy goals can be realized. It is imperative, both in the terms of national security and improving the domestic economy, that coal production and consumption increase substantially.

The legislation makes a number of adjustments to the tax laws. These changes should encourage private sector initiatives that will result in a more competitive coal industry.

COAL CONVERSION TAX CREDIT—SECTION 1 OF THE BILL

Section 1 extends for 10 years the 10-percent tax credit for fuel-fired facilties that convert to coal. This credit has been instrumental in making conversions to coal possible. While coal is usually a cheaper fuel to burn, there are large capital outlays associated with converting from a different fuel source. The tax credit lessens this burden.

A report issued at my request by the United States General Accounting Office in June 1984, described the status of, and outlook for, the coal conversion program administered by the Economic Regulatory Administration under the Industrial Fuel Use Act of 1978 [FUA]. The FUA was enacted as part of the National Energy Act to expand coal use to replace oil imports and declining production of domestic oil and gas.

In its review, GAO found that, as of May 1984, 45 of the 79 boilers in the program either were converted or were expected to be converted by 1988, and 34 were not going to be converted or decisions to convert had been deferred indefinitely. The status of the 79 boilers is summarized below. The following table identifies each of the boilers and compares their conversion status as reported in September 1981, to their status in May 1984.

SUMMARY OF THE STATUS OF 79 BOILERS INCLUDED IN ERA'S REGULATORY PROGRAM

Status of boilers	Number of boilers—
	September 1981	May 1984
Converted	13	23
Plan to convert by 1988	38	22
Opposed to conservation	15	(1)
Undecided	13	(2)
Not converting		24
Deferred indefinitely		10
Total	79	79

[1] Of the 15 boilers which were opposed to conversion in September 1981, 12 are not converting; 1 is scheduled for conversion by 1988; and 2 are deferred indefinitely.

[2] Of the 13 boilers which were undecided in September 1981, 10 are not converting; 2 are scheduled for conversion by 1988; and 1 is deferred indefinitely.

After the program became voluntary in August 1981, companies voluntarily submitted plans to ERA on the possible conversion to coal use of an additional 55 boilers. Thirteen of these boilers are scheduled for conversion by 1989.

GAO also obtained information from EIA [Energy Information Administration] and NERC [North American Electric Reliability Council] on the outlook for the use of coal as boiler fuel by electric utilities. EIA projects coal use in new and existing boilers by 1995. NERC's projections go to 1992 but only include coal use in existing boilers.

EIA has projected that by 1995, coal-fired generation in both new and existing electric utility powerplants will account for 55 percent of the total kilowatt hours of electricity generated in the United States. EIA also projected that nuclear power would account for 19 percent of the kilowatt hours generated; oil and gas, below 18 percent; and hydroelectric, less than 10 percent. In addition, NERC's latest report on electric power supply and demand had projected that by 1992, coal use in existing electric utility powerplants will account for about 54 percent of the total kilowatt hours of electricity generated. NERC also projected that nuclear power would account for about 24 percent of the kilowatt hours generated; oil and gas, below 12 percent; and hydroelectric, less than 9 percent.

While I was gratified by the optimistic projections from EIA and NERC, and by the four additional boilers included in the converted or plan to convert categories, I am concerned about the number of boilers in the program that are not converting or are deferred indefinitely. In its 1981 report, GAO noted that about 350,000 barrels of oil per day could be saved if all 80 units then in the program converted. While this figure would be altered as circumstances have changed, it is clear that significant coal conversions would reduce our dependence on unstable foreign sources of energy and improve the economic outlook for coal-producing regions. Section 1 of my bill is designed to encourage and expedite such conversions.

SECTION 2: 1-YEAR AMORTIZATION FOR POLLUTION CONTROL EQUIPMENT

In conjunction with the tax credit for conversions, my bill provides for a 1-year amortization for pollution control equipment. The current law, enacted in 1981, permits a 5-year amortization. The 1-year period better reflects the needs of those who burn coal and would promote protection of the environment.

A significant cost of converting to coal is the cost of installing pollution control equipment. Usually a combination of coal-washing houses and smokestack scrubbers are required to meet air quality standards. These are expensive modifications. It has been estimated that to reduce sulfur emissions by 50 percent, a $10 billion investment in pollution control equipment would have to be made. Allowing companies to amortize these costs over 1 year will ease this significant impediment to burning coal.

SECTION 3: INCREASED TAX CREDIT FOR NEW MINING EQUIPMENT

In conjunction with the previously discussed tax incentives, the third part of my bill gives favorable treatment for purchases of new coal mining equipment. As the 1984 statistics and projections through 1995 reveal, the demand for coal is increasing and producers must be able to meet this increase. To do this, the industry needs to maintain state-of-the-art machinery. Also, in order to remain competitive in the world market, the mine operator will have to be able to produce coal at a cost that is comparable to or better than the cost in any other country.

My bill ensures that American coal production will remain efficient by increasing the investment tax credit for the purchase of mining equipment from 10 percent to the new level of 15 percent. While not an overly profound increase, it is enough to make the purchase of advanced technology equipment an economic reality.

Many coal producers have been forced to file for bankruptcy or otherwise leave the business. Easing the tax burden will permit those companies that were strong enough to survive the recession to replenish their mining equipment.

SECTION 4: INCREASED CREDIT FOR COAL RESEARCH

The fourth part of my bill provides tax incentives to private industry for the research and development of coal-related technologies. Federal money for research and development of coal-related technologies has been reduced across the board. The private sector is ill equipped to increase its share of research: It is expensive and time consuming. Clearly there is a need for continued research in the coal industry.

Certain limited tax credits for research were passed into law 2 years ago, but these provisions are not sufficient to address the needs of the coal industry. This bill increases the credit for research into coal-related technology to 50 percent. Without this change, many research projects will be discontinued before the intended benefits are realized.

A number of important technologies are currently being developed. These include fluidized bed combustion, magnethydrodynamic technology and new methods for converting coal to combustible liquid form. All of this work is important and should be encouraged.

The work being done on nonpolluting methods for burning coal is especially important. Development of this technology could lead to huge savings for boilers using coal because less expensive equipment will be necessary at the smokestack. The clean burning of coal is a new frontier with great promise. Simple adjustments to the Tax Code would provide adequate incentives for research and development by the private sector. This legislation could complement the Clean Coal Technology Reserve Program that was enacted in the last Congress.

SECTION 5: CONVERSION OF FEDERAL FACILITIES

Another part of my bill requires that the executive branch, under the direction of the Secretary of Energy, use its best efforts to convert major Federal fuel-fired facilities to coal. These efforts need to be continued and more Federal facilities converted to coal.

Work in this direction was begun under Executive Order 12217, issued in June 1980, which required each Federal agency to survey its electric powerplants and fuel-burning facilities and prepare plans for converting those facilities capable of using coal and other alternate fuels. This order was revoked on August 11, 1983, and my bill is designed to renew this important effort.

As in private conversions, the use of domestic coal at Federal facilities would help relieve our Nation's excessive dependence on foreign oil, and would provide a much lower cost source of fuel to the Government which will translate into long-term savings. A Department of Defense report to Congress, for example, identified 12 facilities at which the capital costs of conversion would be recovered in less than 5 years. After that, the fuel savings would go directly into the Treasury.

SECTION 6: REPEAL OF 15 PERCENT REDUCTION IN DEPLETION ALLOWANCE

Next, the bill I introduce today will repeal the 15-percent reduction in the percentage depletion for coal and iron ore.

This effort began when, under the Tax Equity and Fiscal Responsibility Act of 1982, the allowable percentage depletion deduction for both coal and iron ore was to be reduced by 15 percent. Originally the reduction was scheduled to go into effect beginning in 1983. However, after an extensive battle, we were able to delay the effective date to January 1, 1984.

During consideration of the Deficit Reduction Act of 1984, action was then taken to increase the alternative minimum tax on preference items from 15 to 20 percent—percentage depletion for coal is 1 of 12 preference items. I argued strongly against the proposal, and successfully introduced an amendment to retain the 15-percent reduction, saving the coal industry approximately $50 million over the next 3 years. Ultimately, the tax writing committee of the Congress agreed, and coal and iron ore percentage depletion were excepted from the increase.

With this legislation today, I am renewing my effort to repeal the 15-percent reduction.

Taken together, these efforts will help the coal industry get back on its feet. They will encourage increased use of coal without harming other segments of America's economy. The only losers in this equation are the foreign oil exporting countries. With sufficient political will, we can reduce our Nation's dependence on imported oil and come much closer to realizing our goal of energy self-sufficiency in the United States.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the text of the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 301

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. INCREASE IN ENERGY INVESTMENT TAX CREDIT FOR COAL MINING EQUIPMENT AND CONVERSIONS TO COAL.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Subparagraph (A) of section 46(b)(2) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to energy percentage) is amended by adding at the end of the table thereof the following:

"(viii) Conversions to Coal Fuel.—Property described in section 48(1)(3)(A)(iv).	10 percent	Jan. 1, 1985.	Dec. 31, 1993
"(ix) Coal Mining Equipment.—Property described in section 48(1)(3)(A)(x).	5 percent	Jan. 1, 1985.	Dec. 31, 1993".

(b) DEFINITIONS.—

(1) CONVERSIONS TO COAL FUEL.—Clause (iv) of section 48(1)(3)(A) of such Code (relating to alternative energy property) is amended to read as follows:

"(iv) equipment designed to modify existing equipment which uses oil or natural gas as a fuel or as feedstock so that such equipment will use coal as a fuel or feedstock.".

(2) COAL MINING EQUIPMENT.—Subparagraph (A) of section 48(1)(3) of such Code is amended—

(A) by striking out "and" at the end of clause (viii),

(B) by striking out the period at the end of clause (ix) and inserting in lieu thereof ", and", and

(C) by adding at the end thereof the following new clause:

"(x) equipment used for mining coal.".

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to periods beginning after December 31, 1984, under rules similar to the rules under section 48(m) of such Code.

SEC. 2. AMORTIZATION FOR POLLUTION CONTROL EQUIPMENT.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 169 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to amortization of pollution control facilities) is amended by redesignating subsection (j) as subsection (k) and inserting after subsection (i) the following new subsection:

"(j) FACILITIES USED IN CONNECTION WITH PLANTS FUELED BY COAL.—In the case of a certified pollution control facility used in connection with a plant that uses coal as a principal fuel, if the taxpayer elects the application of this subsection (at such time and in such manner as the Secretary may prescribe)—

"(1) subsection (a) shall be applied—

"(A) by substituting '12-month period' for '60-month period', and

"(B) by substituting '12 months' for '60 months',

"(2) subsection (b) shall be applied by substituting '12-month period' for '60-month period', and

"(3) subsection (f)(2) shall not apply.".

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendment made by this section shall apply to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1984.

SEC. 3. TAX INCENTIVES FOR COAL RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Subsection (a) of section 30 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to credit for increasing research activities) is amended to read as follows:

"(a) GENERAL RULE.—There shall be allowed as a credit against the tax imposed by this chapter for the taxable year an amount equal to:

"(1) 50 percent of the excess (if any) of the qualified research expenses for activities relating to coal mining or burning and to controlling pollutants caused by the burning of coal for the taxable year, over the base period research expenses for such activities; and

"(2) 25 percent of the excess (if any) of the qualified research expenses for all other activities for the taxable year, over the base period research expenses for such activities.".

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendment made by this section shall apply to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1985.

SEC. 4. FEDERAL CONVERSION REQUIREMENTS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Subtitle E of title VII of the Powerplant and Industrial Fuel Use Act of 1978 (42 U.S.C. 8301 et seq.) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

SEC. 748. FEDERAL CONVERSION REQUIREMENTS.

"(a) SURVEY.—Each Federal agency shall survey its electric powerplants and major fuel-burning installations in order to identify those that could result in substantial savings if converted to coal. The results of the survey shall be reexamined and updated every 5 years. The results of the surveys shall be transmitted to the Secretary. The Secretary shall establish guidelines for accomplishing the survey.

"(b) ANNUAL PLANTS.—Each Federal agency shall submit to the Director of the Office of Management and Budget, through the Secretary, an annual plan, including cost estimates, for the conversion of electric powerplants and major fuel-burning installations to coal. The Secretary shall establish guidelines for developing such plans.

"(c) OTHER REGULATIONS.—The plan shall be submitted in accordance with any other instructions that the Director of the Office of Management and Budget may issue.

"(d) PRESIDENTIAL REPORTS.—The Secretary shall prepare for the President's consideration and transmittal to the Congress the report required by section 403(c) of this Act.".

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—The table of sections for such Act is amended by adding after the item relating to section 747 the following new item:

"Sec. 748. Federal conversion requirements.".

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendment made by this section shall apply beginning after December 31, 1985.

SEC. 5. COAL AND IRON ORE DEPLETION ALLOWANCE.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Subsection (a) of section 291 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to 20-percent reduction in certain preference items) is amended by striking out paragraph (2) and redesignating paragraphs (3), (4), and (5) as paragraphs (2), (3), and (4), respectively.

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—

(1) Paragraph (1) of section 291(c) of such Code (relating to special rules involving pollution control facilities) is amended by striking out "subsection (a)(5)" and inserting in lieu thereof "subsection (a)(4)".

(2) Paragraph (1) of section 57(b) of such Code (relating to application with section 291) is amended to read as follows:

"(1) IN GENERAL.—In the case of any item of tax preference of a corporation described in paragraph (4) or (7) of subsection (a), only 59% percent of the amount of such item of tax preference (determined without regard to this subsection) shall be taken into account as an item of tax preference.".

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall take effect as if included in the amendments made by section 204 of the Tax Equity and Fiscal Responsibility Act of 1982.

ROUTINE MORNING BUSINESS

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, there will now be a period for the transaction of routine morning business, not to extend beyond 3 p.m., with statements therein limited to 5 minutes each.

AGRICULTURAL CRISIS VIGIL

Mr. BOREN. Mr. President, for some time, several Members of the Senate have been talking about the crisis in American agriculture. Regretfully, our words have been unheeded by the administration and by Congress, in general. We now face a critical national emergency in agriculture and still most of the Nation remains unaware of the wave of tragedy that appears ready to cascade across America's heartland. As an article on the front page of the Washington Post Sunday said:

> The great farm shakeout that many have predicted since 1981 appears to be at hand, with no clear sense of how far the ripples of failure will reach into the national economy or of how rural America will be reshaped.

Unfortunately, too many people in this country believe that the health of the agricultural economy does not affect them personally. Yet, history has provided us with a great lesson if we would but consult it. For those who have not seen my statements over the past few years. I will repeat here the lesson that history teaches.

It was the collapse of the agricultural economy, leading to dispersal sales of land and equipment, which signaled the beginning of the Great Depression. At that time, there was a domino effect from the collapse of agriculture which brought this country virtually to an economic standstill. As more and more farm land was forced on the market, land values and equity for everyone fell drastically. As land values fell, more and more banks were unable to remain in operation. As banks failed, more and more businesses were placed in jeopardy. As should be apparent, Mr. President, a failure in agriculture has a tremendous effect that ripples throughout the economy.

Despite history, there are many who believe that this will not happen again because not as many people are dependent upon agriculture for the main support. However, the economic health of this country as a whole remains very much dependent upon the health of the agricultural sector. Agriculture remains the backbone of this country.

The Nation's biggest industry is agriculture, with farm assets totaling over $1,050 billion and representing approximately 70 percent of the capital assets of all manufacturing corporations in the United States. Not only is agriculture the biggest industry, it is the Nation's largest employer, with 22 million people working in some phase of agriculture or refinement of agricultural products. Farming, alone, has as many workers as the work forces of transportation, the steel industry, and the automobile industry combined. Approximately 1 out of 5 jobs in private enterprise is generated directly by agriculture. Agriculture, alone, generates about 20 percent of the gross national product.

The agricultural sector uses output from more than 80 percent of the other basic industries in the United States. Farmers are the fourth largest customer of the finance and insurance industry and the fourth largest user of real estate and rental services. Farmers annually spend over $10 billion for farm tractors and other motor vehicles, machinery, and equipment. This, alone, provides jobs for about 150,000 employees in the auto industry. Farming also uses more petroleum than any other single industry with annual expenditures for fuel, lubricants, and maintenance for machinery and motor vehicles used in the farm business amounting to $15.4 billion. Each year, farmers purchase $21.4 billion for feed and seed and $9 billion for fertilizer and lime. Farmers use 360 million pounds of rubber each year. Farmers annually purchase 6½ million tons of steel in the form of farm machinery, trucks, cars, fencing, and building materials. From the use of steel products alone, 40,000 jobs in the steel industry are created by agriculture.

Agricultural exports, alone, have a considerable impact upon the economy. In 1984, the overall trade deficit was reduced by the $19 billion in the agricultural account where we had a surplus. For every $1 billion in agricultural exports, 35,000 jobs are created. Each dollar of agricultural export stimulate an additional $1.05 of output in the U.S. economy. About 70 percent of this additional economic activity accrues to nonfarm sectors of the economy.

Mr. President, agriculture is critically important in our Nation's economy. A thriving agricultural economy means a thriving American economy. A depressed agricultural economy translates into a depressed American economy. For the past few years, several of us have tried to warn Congress and the administration about the ultimate effects of the agricultural crisis. But even our words were unheeded. Too many thought the problem would just go away, would take care of itself. Regretfully, that is not the way it has worked out. There is, and has been, a crisis in American agriculture for the past 4 years. Today, the crisis has spread to the banking industry, just as it did over 50 years ago. Today, we not only have a crisis in agriculture, we have a crisis in the banking sector as well.

Over the past 5 years, we have seen an increase in farm bankruptcies and forced liquidations of over 200 percent. During the decade of the seventies, 21 percent of the farmers in my home State of Oklahoma went out of business. For the same period, the number of farms in Iowa were decreased by 12,000. For Nebraska, there were 8,000 fewer farms in 1980 than in 1970. So what, some may say. Secretary Block has made the comment that this is not an unusual trend, that it has been happening for the past 50 years. Yes, farm numbers have declined steadily over the past 50 years. However, right now, we are experiencing a time where the number of farmers going out of business in 1 year is equivalent to or greater than the number of farmers that went out of business during the entire decade of the seventies. According to the Washington Post article in this past Sunday's paper, it is estimated that 17,000 farmers in Iowa out of a total of 113,000 in that State will be out of business by the end of the next few months. Compare this to the numbers cited above. This tremendous increase in foreclosures, bankruptcies, and liquidations have placed in jeopardy more than 130 Iowa banks according to this article. The Post article also talks about the problems the State of Nebraska is experiencing. It is estimated that 6,300 farmers in that State will go out of business this year, compared to the 8,000 figure for the entire decade of the seventies. Of 40 banks that have failed nationally in the past 6 months, more than half had large agricultural portfolios.

Mr. President, the situation we are confronting in agriculture constitutes a critical national emergency. This is not true merely from the standpoint of the farmer, but also from the standpoint of every citizen in this country. I do not believe the American people will allow the impending agricultural collapse to happen if they are aware of the ramifications, if they are aware of the facts. For the past 6 years, I have done everything I have known to provide these facts to the general public. Yet, repeatedly over that time period, I felt as though no one were listening, as though the press in our large cities did not care to report what was happening to the backbone of this Nation. Finally, Mr. President, we are beginning to see some interest in the agricultural crisis. Right now, three movies are playing at theaters across America telling of the plight of the American farmer. Two stories, by the very able Ward Sinclair, about the crisis in agriculture were carried on the front page of the Washington Post in the last 2 days. I commend Mr. Sinclair for his diligence. These two articles are excellent and should be read by every American, and particularly by every Member of this Congress. I ask unanimous consent that the text of these two articles be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See exhibit 1.)

Mr. BOREN. Mr. President, we do have a crisis and the American people need to be aware that the crisis is threatening the entire structure of rural America and placing in jeopardy the American economy as a whole. In an effort to bring national attention to the problem, I am, today, beginning a "vigil" in the Senate. Every day, I intend to make a speech on the Senate floor outlining the problems in American agriculture, and concentrating on a different sector of that industry.

I hope that other Senate colleagues will join me. Hopefully, with constant effort and thoughtful reflection, we can arrive at a solution that will put American agriculture back on its feet. Emergency action will not wait. Action on the credit front must be taken now.

Unless the emergency is confronted now, the questions of the long-range solution of the agricultural problem will become moot.

I yield the floor.

EXHIBIT 1

FARM FAILURES THREATEN TO RESHAPE RURAL U.S.—LONG-PREDICTED CRISIS SEEMS AT HAND

(By Ward Sinclair)

DES MOINES, IOWA.—All across the winter-blitzed Midwest, the clouds of a massive agricultural economic crisis are quickly taking shape, threatening to throw thousands of farmers out of business and send country banks and businesses toppling.

The Great Farm Shakeout that many have predicted since 1981 appears to be at hand, with no clear sense of how far the ripples of failure will reach into the national economy or of how rural America will be reshaped.

The fears and frustrations of farmers, public officials and businessmen, whose cries for emergency federal credit assistance show little sign of being heeded, are compounded by a feeling that Washington isn't listening and doesn't care.

On Friday, for example, as Iowa Gov. Terry Branstad was saying that he saw a bit more sympathy developing in the Reagan administration, newspapers were quoting Agriculture Secretary John R. Block as saying, "The circuits are overloaded [and] this is a time to tough it out."

Officials and economists in Iowa and Nebraska say the next two months are critical to agriculture, with 1984 notes coming due and farmers going to lenders seeking credit to put in their new crops. Thousands will not get it, leaving them in foreclosure or bankruptcy, and leaving their heavily leveraged farm-supply creditors in the lurch.

More ominously, Iowa State University economist Neil Harl said last week, at least 40 percent of the farmers in the North Central region—Minnesota to Missouri, Ohio to Kansas—have such burdensome debt that they are "on a conveyor belt, headed down . . . headed toward insolvency" in the next several years.

Those farmers are in jeopardy, Harl explained, because their debt loans are growing rapidly while the value of their assets, such as land and tractors, is dropping steadily. Only a surge in farm prices or a sharp interest-rate drop will help them, and few economists foresee either.

Harl added, "The next 70 days are vital because the decisions are going to be made on who gets credit. We are going to go through a terribly stressful period. . . . We must use this time creatively. We know times are stern in Washington, but we do believe we have to have some federal assistance to avoid the devastation. If, at least, we don't keep interest payments current, then lenders are going to go down the tubes also."

In Washington, farm-state legislators are pressuring the administration to quickly come up with additional credit and loan guarantees to help the battered farm sector through the growing storm. Senate Majority Leader Robert J. Dole (R-Kan.) and others want a presidential task force to tackle the problem.

Whatever is done must be done swiftly, officials here say. In Iowa, the nation's No. 2 farm-income state, economists say that as many as 17,000 of the 113,000 farmers will go under by late spring as their applications for 1985 operating money are rejected. More than 130 banks in Iowa are listed by the state as having "more than normal problems" and 48 of them are on a Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. "problem list."

In neighboring Nebraska, where about two of every five jobs are related to agriculture and where six country banks and two farm-credit banks have failed since Labor Day, at least 10 percent of the 63,000 farmers are expected to shut down for lack of operating credit.

"The problem is at the crisis stage," Nebraska banking commissioner Roger Beverage said. "There sure as hell is no economic recovery in Nebraska and it spills into all we do on Main Street . . . It is a parade of horribles. The people in Washington have to realize this is not a joke. This is a depression."

The story is similar all around the Midwest, the fertile bread basket that produces the bulk of the wheat, corn and soybeans that feed the nation and bring in billions of export dollars.

The reasons for the crunch of 1985 are many, but they can be boiled down this way: Low farm prices, continuing high interest rates, plummeting land and machinery values that rose beyond worth in the inflationary 1970s, a strong dollar that has depressed exports and overproduction of basic goods.

A key culprit is the interest rate that has stayed high as inflation cooled. Illinois farmers, for instance, have paid more than $1 billion in interest in each of the last two years, compared with $430 million in 1977. Nebraska farmers, with the sixth largest debt load in the country, have paid more than $1 billion in interest in each of the last three years, compared with $50 million in 1960.

"High real interest rates and rising debt loads have combined in the 1980s to sap the strength of the Illinois farm economy," said John White Jr., president of the Illinois Farm Bureau. "Lower interest rates could help bring profit back to the farms."

But, added Iowa Gov. Branstad, "It is a lot more than just the farmers. We are talking about businesses on Main Street. President Reagan's debt-restructuring program hasn't worked and it appears that the Office of Management and Budget has blocked the key elements to make it work . . . The downward spiral is speeding up and it has deteriorated even further in the last few months."

Both Branstad and Harl, in separate interviews, described their alarm after meeting last week with OMB Director David A. Stockman. Both said that Stockman lectured them and Block about the administration's determination not to provide a bailout for a localized problem.

These and other Washington reports have ignited bipartisan fears that the administration has decided to pull the plug on an industry that it believes has more procedures and more production capacity than it needs.

In Nebraska last week, farmer-rancher Tom Vickers, also a state senator, said, "The Nebraska economy has been on a downhill slide for a number of years. We're about to see a disaster this state hasn't seen since the 1930s. Farmers and bankers are going to go under, and what happens here affects the whole nation."

The state legislature quickly passed a Vickers resolution calling on the legislatures of nine nearby farm states to send a delegation to Washington next month to try once more to deliver the call for help. Several states already have joined Vickers' campaign.

Bruce Johnson, an economist at the University of Nebraska, added that "literally half of the state's agricultural wealth has been lost since 1981. This ripples up through financial institutions. When you aggregate the loss, how many banks does it take to affect national institutions? Crisis is not too strong a word to use for what is happening out here."

The numbers generate strong fears. William Nichol, the Republican speaker of the state legislature, said, "I am frightened and never have been frightened before—and I lived through the Great Depression. Nothing is of any value and there doesn't seem to be anything to change it. I see nothing but deterioration in the months ahead."

"It's scary, sure it is," added GOP state Sen. Rod Johnson, 27, a farmer who chairs the legislative agriculture committee, "and we're not sure the federal government understands what is happening. I think Ronald Reagan owes the farmers something."

Adding to the current mix, many rural banks and farms of the farmer-run farm credit system have started to tighten the screws on borrowers who are not delinquent on loans, insisting that they sell land and equipment on a market where such commodities are going at firesale prices—if a buyer can be found.

"Some banks are notorious on this," said the Rev. David Ostendorf, Midwest director of Rural America. "People are then forced to go to the Farmers Home Administration or elsewhere to seek credit—and those systems are struggling already. People are being dumped every day, and it's outrageous."

As the tension and the frustration build, farmers have begun to band together to draw attention to their plight. A St. Paul, Minn., rally last week drew 10,000 protesters. Another in Sioux City attracted more than 4,000. Farmers fill the state capitol building here daily, lobbying their legislators, and they're planning a major rally for Des Moines next month.

The Iowa Farm Unity Coalition, a family farm advocacy organization that has operated an informational telephone hot-line for farmers since late 1982, also is stepping up its efforts to publicize the crisis. This week, for example, it will attempt to stop another forced sale of farm machinery—a practice that has become increasingly common throughout the region.

The coalition also is promoting a campaign to force Branstad to declare a moratorium on loan foreclosures. The Iowa legislature has passed a resolution that could lead to declaration by the governor of an economic emergency and possibly a moratorium. Branstad has appointed a committee to study the idea.

"People out here have begun to realize that the whole house will topple if we do not take steps very soon," said Ostendorf, who also is a coalition official. "The question is whether we can act fast enough and get a response from Washington. It will mean a massive amount of money for debt restructuring and it will mean a new federal-state relationship in debt handling."

"We wouldn't have been in this situation if public officials had taken the appropriate steps three years ago. It could have been avoided if the politicians had listened," Ostendorf said. "Now they're reaching for the panic button and we're into crisis management once again."

WRIGHT HITS REAGAN, DENIES CONGRESS CULPABLE ON DEFICIT—PRESIDENT TO RECEIVE FARM STATUS REPORT

(By Ward Sinclair)

Agriculture Secretary John R. Block said yesterday that he plans to brief President Reagan, perhaps this week, on the deteriorating economy of the Farm Belt, but he warned that there is "no new grandiose scheme to save the day."

The secretary, responding to farm-state complaints the administration has turned its back on thousands of farmers so strapped they may not be able to get loans for spring planting, agreed there is a "serious problem" in the agricultural economy but said rural America should not look entirely to Washington for solutions.

Block added that the farm financial situation "has heated up" since he last briefed Reagan about a month ago. Some banks are in trouble as well as farmers. But, Block continued, "I don't want farmers to think all of the answers are here in Washington . . . . It is a big problem and everyone has to work on it."

Meanwhile yesterday, an official of the Independent Bankers Association of America, which represents about 4,100 country banks, said an expanded federal loan guarantee program would be the quickest and easiest way to deal with the growing credit crisis in the farm belt.

"In the final analysis," Weldon Barton said, "it is a question of whether the Republican senators who represent those areas, particularly those who face reelection in 1986, become committed to taking significant action to alleviate this situation. That's basically where the initiative is going to have to come from."

A group of Republican senators has called on Reagan to form a presidential task force to look at the farm-credit situation, but Barton said yesterday that "there is little demonstrated need for more study. . . . Time is very short."

Barton charged that the administration's farm debt restructuring package, announced by the president six weeks before the November election, had been made "unworkable" by adding conditions that were not attractive to country bankers.

Under the Reagan plan, the banks must agree to forgive at least 10 percent of a loan to a farmer to have the transaction guaranteed by the federal government. They are not going along with that plan, Barton said, because "many have reached their bottom line on ability to absorb loan losses . . . and we are having an escalated degree of farm-bank failures."

"We don't mind some saving of face," the IABA official continued, "but we hope there is some way the administration could disentangle itself from the forgiveness feature and provide loan guarantee authority, expanded in a way that would be workable."

Barton said that of 40 banks that failed since last June 15, 22 were farm banks, lenders with at least of one-fourth of their portfolios in farm loans, in rural communities.

"What this says is that during the last six months, a larger number of agricultural banks were reaching the bottom. . . . Now we have a situation in the farm belt with several hundred agricultural banks that have reached the limit in their ability to absorb losses from farm loans," Barton said.

In other activities related to the farm economic crunch:

An unusual coalition that includes the American Farm Bureau Federation, the National Farmers Organization and the Grange—often at odds—plans to mount a lobbying effort here this week to pressure the administration and Congress to move more rapidly in dealing with the credit issue * * *.

GILLIS LONG: LAWMAKER

Mr. MATSUNAGA. Mr. President, in the death of Representative Gillis Long the Congress has lost a distinguished Member, the State of Louisiana a respected leader, and his family a wise and loving father—while I have lost a dear friend.

Gillis and I were both elected to the House of Representatives for the first time in 1962, and formed the "88th Club," where we discovered our common background. We both had been wounded in infantry battle in Europe during World War II Army service, and, after postwar public service—his gained as an officer at the Nuremberg war trials—we had both enrolled in law school, graduating in 1951. Gillis brought to the 88th Congress more familiarity with the ways of the Hill than I did because he had been a staff counsel in both Chambers. I soon recognized his personal quality so valuable in a lawmaker—a wide ranging, inquiring mind combined with an even temperament and a talent for cultivating friendships.

He supported the Democratic leadership in his first term in enlarging the size of the Rules Committee, for which he paid a political price in his next election, but he returned again in 1972 and it was with much joy that we welcomed him back to the House. Shortly thereafter, Gillis was assigned to the Rules Committee, where his leadership was soon recognized. That leadership was grounded in a masterly understanding of procedure, a keen appreciation for the concerns of his colleagues, and an intellectual curiosity that enabled him to track and guide negotiations of great complexity. He brought that curiosity to play in his role as a member of the Joint Economic Committee over the last 12 years, especially in regard to such subjects as Japan-United States trade, world energy supplies and the institutional vehicles for global commerce.

His colleagues appreciated his qualities as was evidenced by his election as chairman of the Democratic caucus, where he proved himself to be both innovative and fair minded in matters both great and small.

On behalf of my wife and myself, I offer sincerest condolences to our dear friend, his beloved widow, Catherine, and their son and daughter. Gillis Long will be sorely missed, not only among his House colleagues, but by Senators also.

YOSHIO OKAWARA: WORLD-CLASS DIPLOMAT

Mr. MATSUNAGA. Mr. President, if diplomacy is an art, the medium of its expression should speak to a country's citizenry, not merely to its officialdom. No one appreciates this fact of interchange between democracies more than Yoshio Okawara, Japan's Ambassador to Washington and a painter of harmonious interpretations across a wide canvass.

I bring Ambassador Okawara's qualities to the attention of my colleagues for he will soon be taking leave of us in order to return to his homeland after an assignment here in Washington of 5 years. He arrived at a time of no little tension between our two nations and he has gained a reputation for adroit insight, in addition to professional tact, in working out some of the diverse problems giving rise to them. With persistence and an acute sense of timing he has resolved most effectively difficult negotiations. A flawless command of both English and his native tongue, a wide range of friends throughout the country, and a depth of knowledge about our country and its institutions: All these attributes have enabled him to perform his mission with great skill. Perhaps his strongest forte is his ability as an educator—a communicator and interpreter—for two nations, one to the other. A recent newspaper feature story speaks of his "barnstorming" travels to address all manner of groups across our country regarding his own and the warmth of his reception in most of his journeys.

I know I speak for many of my colleagues when I say how much he and his charming wife, Mitsuko, will be missed here in Washington. In order to gain an appreciation of the service he has rendered, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to insert into the RECORD an article appearing in the Wall Street Journal of January 2, 1985, by staff reporter Eduardo Lachica entitled "Exemplary Envoy: Japanese Ambassador to U.S. Wins Friends, Helps Put Out Fires."

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

EXEMPLARY ENVOY—JAPANESE AMBASSADOR TO U.S. WINS FRIENDS, HELPS PUT OUT FIRES—OKAWARA SEES NATIONS' TIES "CLEARLY ON THE UPSWING" DESPITE DISCORD ON TRADE—PLANNING FOR TODAY'S TALKS

(By Eduardo Lachica)

SAN ANTONIO, TX.—Yoshio Okawara, the Japanese ambassador to the U.S., was overwhelmed by his welcome here. Mayor Henry Cisneros introduced him to business leaders as a "world-class diplomat" who helped steer U.S.-Japan ties safely through a period of trade tensions. A Catholic nun opened a luncheon in his honor with a blessing in flawless Japanese.

More touching yet, the city council invited the ambassador to witness the renaming of an old public garden built by a Japanese immigrant family with stunted pines and golden carp imported from their homeland. After Pearl Harbor, the city had discharged the Japanese groundskeepers, hired a Chinese couple to take their place and renamed the Japanese creation the "Chinese Sunken Garden."

"It took us 43 years to repair that injustice, but it's now called by its proper name—the Japanese Tea Garden," says Van Archer, a council member. "Heck, there's nothing Chinese about it."

Such changes of heart convince Ambassador Okawara that he is winning his campaign to increase U.S. appreciation of Japan. "When I took this post in April 1980, the U.S. economy was at its lowest ebb in years, and Japanese-bashing was one way some Americans gave vent to their frustrations," he recalls. Not only were U.S. manufacturers and unions disturbed by Japanese imports, but also "we were blamed for buying oil from Iran while it held American hostages," he says. In addition, "we were criticized for enjoying a free security ride while enlarging our trade surpluses."

The 65-year-old career diplomat helped put out some of those fires by settling a succession of nettlesome trade issues and getting Japan's side of the story to grass-roots America. Like many successful diplomats, Mr. Okawara realizes that the corridors of influence stretch far beyond the State Department. He promotes his nation's interests on Capitol Hill and Main Street and spends about half his time on the road.

Mr. Okawara says he feels "pretty good" about the current state of the relationship. "It's clearly on the upswing." Some Japanese business interests complain that he gives away too much in negotiating with the U.S., but such criticism is the price every successful intermediary pays. "Any ambassador Japan sends here has to be a conservator of a strategic relationship that accounts for a quarter of the world's trade and a third of its output of goods and services," says William Sherman, the deputy assistant secretary of state for Asian and Pacific affairs. "Yoshio is one of the very best."

TODAY'S MEETING

The preparations for today's meeting between President Reagan and Prime Minister Yasuhiro Nakasone probably will turn out to be Mr. Okawara's last major assignment before his anticipated retirement in March. The meeting isn't expected to generate any problems for Mr. Okawara, despite Japan's $33 billion trade surplus with the U.S. Mr. Reagan recently rejected staff recommendations that he press Mr. Nakasone on trade. He called the prime minister a "very good friend" who has been "most cooperative" on trade issues.

Mr. Okawara, a slender six-footer with gray-streaked hair, looks and acts like a diplomat. But his strongest resource is 16 years' experience in U.S. affairs, including two previous stints in Washington.

Mr. Okawara's ancestral roots in Gumma, an alpine prefecture in central Japan, and his clannish ties with two other influential Gumma natives, former Prime Minister Takeo Fukuda and the incumbent, Mr. Nakasone, also help. Prime Minister Nakasone has told Mr. Okawara to call him directly if he needs to.

THE BEEF DISPUTE

All these assets came in handy last April during talks over renewing Japanese quotas for U.S. beef. "In dollar terms, the issue was insignificant compared to the size of the U.S. trade deficit, but beef arouses passions in both countries. It was the hardest problem I've had to handle," Ambassador Okawara says.

The Japanese agriculture minister had given up, canceled a news conference at the Watergate Hotel and packed to go home. Then, the ambassador, who had been just a silent observer in the talks, opened lines to his prime minister, U.S. Trade Representative William Brock and Secretary of State George Shultz and pleaded for one more try. The next day, a new pact was sealed; the U.S. got large yearly increases in export tonnage but dropped its demand for eventual elimination of the quotas.

The size of Mr. Okawara's mission reflects its importance. He has 84 accredited diplomats in Washington—more than Britain, West Germany or the Soviet Union. One of his attaches does nothing but monitor U.S. environmental policies; another just keeps track of U.S. antitrust policies.

The Japanese chancellery on Massachusetts Avenue, Washington's Embassy Row, isn't pretentious. Two jerry-built annexes accommodate a staff that works late into the night to report the latest Washington news to Tokyo as it starts its day. If a Japanese newspaper "scoops" the embassy on a late-breaking Washington development, Mr. Okawara's staff promptly gets a scathing inquiry from the Foreign Ministry.

The ambassador's routine, like that of other emissaries, is cluttered with diplomatic ritual and dull, shrimp-cocktail receptions. But he turns obligations into opportunities. "His socials are often not so social after all," says Marshall Coyne, the Madison Hotel proprietor who often turn up as a guest of the ambassador and his Paris-born wife, Mitsuko. "Before you know it, the conversation turns to serious business."

Few turn down an invitation to the ambassador's official residence, a large, attractive evocation of old Japan surrounded by elegant gardens and containing a tennis court and swimming pool. Mr. Okawara sometimes invites U.S. reporters for a tempura lunch and a sounding of Washington's current mood.

Keeping track of the flood of Washington business is a crushing labor for any embassy. "It isn't enough to keep up with the administration," says Charles Anson, the British Embassy spokesman. "You have to deal with Congress, with the media, with the think tanks all over town."

Ambassador Okawara leaves most of the congressional work to his staff but handles many important contacts himself. He showed his diplomatic skill when Sen. Max Baucus of Montana invited him and his senior aides to a steak lunch to show what Japan is missing by limiting beef imports. The ambassador brought Japanse soy sauce to season the Montana sizzlers. "Most of the soy sauce we consume comes from U.S. soybeans," he told the gathering. "We're also doing something for your farm economy."

INVALUABLE FRIENDSHIPS

In Washington, friendships are invaluable. Ambassador Okawara had little trouble explaining Japan's sharing of the Asian defense burden to Congress because he has known leaders of congressional Armed Services committees for years.

Melvin Laird, President Nixon's defense secretary, also helps steer the ambassador around U.S. defense circles. They have been close friends since Mr. Okawara, as the Foreign Ministry's deputy director of North American affairs, arranged for the then-chief of the Pentagon to visit Japan in 1971. "That was a turning point in our security relations," says Mr. Laird, now senior counselor for Reader's Digest. "It started the tradition of annual consultations between our defense departments."

Now, the two men share golfing vacations together. Mr. Laird attests to the ambassador's negotiation ability—particularly on the first tee. "He'd complain about his long hours and lack of practice and ask for a high handicap. Then, he'd beat the pants off everybody."

Mr. Okawara's aides contend that he has access to most of the Reagan cabinet and other senior policy makers. He quickly reached Teasury Secretary Donald Regan and Federal Reserve Chairman Paul Volcker when some U.S. companies charged that Tokyo was manipulating the foreign-exchange market to keep the yen weak and thus promote Japanese exports. Mr. Okawara built a strong case to deny such intervention; both Mr. Regan and Mr. Volcker later supported his argument.

A FAILURE OF ACCESS

But access to President Reagan himself is difficult for an ambassador. Mr. Okawara once aroused the pique of his foreign minister, Shintaro Abe, for failing to get Mr. Abe an appointment in the White House, some Japanese lobbyists confide.

For all his success at winning American friends, Ambassador Okawara has to worry about being second-guessed and sometimes outflanked by bureaucratic rivals in Japan. The Ministry of International Trade and Industry, for instance, maintains its own listening post in New York—the "MITI Embassy," some Japanese businessmen call it. The MITI does its own covert lobbying because it doesn't think that the ambassador presses hard enough on issues affecting Japanese companies.

The MITI, for instance, would like the embassy to spend more time fighting buy-American laws designed to force the use of U.S. steel and other products. But at a time when Japan is running a $30 billion trade surplus with the U.S., Mr. Okawara worries about generating more tension. "We have to look at the totality of the relationship," he argues.

The ambassador can't control, either, the independent lobbying by hundreds of Japanese companies. These concerns spend millions of dollars a year on Washington lawyers, publicists and intelligence-gatherers. The Japanese business community is nearly as divided as its U.S. counterpart over certain issues. Toyota and Nissan, the two biggest auto makers, want the Reagan administration to extend auto-import limits because the ceilings keep their U.S. prices high. The smaller Japanese companies want to end the curbs so that they can increase their market shares.

PROMOTING UNDERSTANDING

It is in his role as educator, though, that Mr. Okawara has been most effective. "We were scapegoated for a lot of America's troubles because Americans had all sorts of misconceptions about Japan," says Yoshitake Sajima, vice president of Mitsui & Co.'s U.S. subsidiary. "Ambassador Okawara did a lot to make Americans understand us better."

On his informational missions, Mr. Okawara logs almost as much mileage as any barnstorming American politician. He talks to Detroit auto makers one day, to Harvard Business School graduates on another, and to U.S. navy midshipmen in Annapolis on a third occasion.

Lately, he has been stressing the "humanization" of Japan. "We're no longer the faceless robots who make cars and stereo sets," he says. "Japan is now known for its food and fashions. And what crossword solver doesn't know that 'obi' means a Japanese sash?"

He usually travels alone, for his English is nearly faultless and he knows airline schedules as well as any traveling executive. "I'd like to take an aide or two, but the Foreign Ministry keeps our budget tight," he says with a wink, while refusing to disclose any numbers.

WOOED BY HIS HOSTS

In the Sun Belt, where every governor is scrambling for Japanese investments, his hosts usually do the wooing. "The Japanese don't have to sell themselves to us. We have to sell ourselves to them," says Fred Lepick, the president of Frost National Bank of San Antonio.

Even in Bethlehem, Pa., a smokestack city whose economy has been battered by steel imports, the ambassador didn't run into a hostile audience. Students at the city's Lehigh University gave him a hand for his brave attempt to defend the free-trading system.

"It's hard to stay mad at them [the Japanese] when there are many things about Japan that you admire," admits Richard Copaken, a Washington lawyer who has fought a long trade case against Japanese machine-tool imports. "I've a love affair with my Datsun Z, and I also do some sumi (Japanese-ink) painting."

Mr. Okawara generously gives the Reagan administration much of the credit for the improved relationship. "The Reagan recovery put more Americans to work. That certainly made our job easier," he says. President Reagan also helped by getting on a first-name basis with Mr. Nakasone and avoiding public airings of differences. The second Reagan term is likely to see more of this low-key problem solving.

But the work of dispute settlement never ends. Mr. Reagan handed the ambassador another problem early this year when he promised Oregon plywood manufacturers to try to get Japan to reduce its tariffs on plywood. Tokyo is resisting because Japan's own plywood industry is in a recession.

Mr. MATSUNAGA. Mr. President, I yield the floor.

CALL TO CONSCIENCE VIGIL FOR SOVIET JEWRY

Mr. BOREN. Mr. President, again in 1985 I join with many of my colleagues in participating in the Call to Conscience Vigil for Soviet Jewry. I commend my colleague from Minnesota, Senator BOSCHWITZ, for his leadership in this effort in the coming year, and I urge all of us here in the Senate to raise our voices on behalf of Jews in the Soviet Union who wish to emigrate yet are denied that basic right.

While the problem which we will be discussing as this vigil continues over the coming year is not a new one, it continues to bring hardship and suffering to many people. Individuals are put at risk, their physical and mental health deteriorates, and families are split apart by virtue of unfair and unjustifiable policies of a government. Cases of imprisonment and "internal exile" are rampant, and the names of Anatoly Shchransky and Iosef Begun, Zacher Zunshine and many "refuseniks" are well known to us.

Most of us are well aware of the problems associated with Soviet emigration, particularly for Jews and other people who practice their religious beliefs in spite of Government pressure to the contrary. The statistics graphically demonstrate to all the world that the willingness of the Soviet Government to relax barriers to emigration was short-lived, and that in most recent years the doors leading out of the Soviet Union have been closed, particularly to Soviet Jews.

In response to this startling reversal, people of all faiths from around the world have joined together on behalf of those desiring to leave the Soviet Union. The size, diversity, and intensity of this group seems to be increasing all the time. In a unified and persistent voice, many of us have expressed our outrage and total dissatisfaction with the policies of the Soviet Government in this area. And, in spite of the tremendous problems which still face Soviet citizens who apply to emigrate, there have been some positive steps which appear at the very least to have been encouraged by this pressure from outside the Soviet Union. There have been a number of instances which demonstrate that we do indeed have some influence in this area. Therefore, it is incumbent upon us, Mr. President, to redouble our efforts on behalf of all those in the Soviet Union who are being denied their basic human rights, including the right to emigrate and live in the place of their own choosing.

Another encouraging element in this effort today is that in the past, there has been a correlation between levels of emigration from the Soviet Union and relations between the United States and the Soviet Union. In times of positive relations between our two Governments, levels of Soviet emigration have been higher than in times of poor relations. As arms control negotiations resume, we must hope and pray that this pattern will continue and that emigration from the Soviet Union will again increase. While we cannot and should not expect this trend to "solve" the problem at hand, it may indeed mean that the Soviet Union will be even more receptive to expressions from the United States and other countries on behalf of Soviet "refuseniks." Our work, then, in some respects, becomes even more critical.

The Call to Conscience Vigil, which is taking place both in the House and in the Senate, is one important way for the United States to serve notice to the Soviet Union that we are aware of this tremendous problem and that we will not rest until it is resolved. In the weeks ahead, many of us will be discussing the particular problems facing individual families in the Soviet Union, and asking for a direct response from the Soviet Government regarding these cases. The unfair and inhumane policies which the Soviet Government imposes on its own people do not go unnoticed. And if the Soviet Government persists in these practices, the governments and peoples of the world will continue to criticize the Soviet Government and to call upon the leaders of the Soviet Union to account for its actions. As we again bring this issue before the U.S. Congress, the American people and all the world on a daily basis, I hope that we will stir the conscience of the world.

REPRESENTATIVE GILLIS LONG

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, a few days ago, my family and I mourned the loss of my good friend and cousin, Representative Gillis Long, who served with distinction for eight terms as a Member of Congress from the Eighth District of Louisiana.

Those of us who knew him and worked beside him will always remember Gillis as a tireless champion of the everyday American, a man whose life was dedicated to creating a better world for those he represented. His dedication to the poor and underprivileged many times led his critics to unfairly label him a liberal. But we knew that Gillis would never allow any label—conservative or liberal—to influence the way he thought or acted. Gillis did not wear those labels. He concerned himself more with helping people around him, than worrying about whether he would be called a liberal because he had compassion in his heart.

His relatives and friends will always remember Gillis, not because he was an outstanding legislator or because he achieved fame and influence outside his hometown. Gillis' memory will be cherished by all of us because he left the world around him a better place as a result of his devotion to an ideal.

Recently, there appeared in the Washington Post a thoughtful article by Mark Shields discussing the motives and philosophy of Gillis Long. I commend it to the Congress:

A talented politician and one of the House's ablest legislators was how the authoritative "Almanac of American Politics" described Rep. Gillis Long, the Louisiana Democrat, who died this week at 61.

First elected to the House in 1962, Long lost his seat two years later after being accused by his conservative opponent of helping pass the Civil Rights Act by having voted, at the request of the Kennedy White House, to enlarge the House Rules Committee. Ten years passed before Gillis Long returned to Congress where he served so ably.

To its own disservice and eventual regret, Long's party in recent years chose to ignore his wise counsel that it was necessary for Democrats to demonstrate their "compassion to care, but also the toughness to govern." During and between recent campaigns, a lot of Democrats have seemed to emphasize compassion while simultaneously disdaining toughness.

One result of that decision will be that as of January 20, 1989, the Republicans will have held the presidency for 16 of the last 20 years. As Gillis Long understood, American voters prefer their political leaders competent as well as compassionate.

Throughout the most recent presidential campaign, Democratic optimists were invariably encouraged by the public opinion surveys, which almost uniformly showed the electorate's judgment that the Democratic candidate was more concerned with their personal well-being than was the Republican incumbent. One Washington Post/ABC News survey indicated that, by nearly a 2-to-1 margin, voters judged that Ronald Reagan sided "with special interests" rather than "with the average person." In the same survey, voters by a margin of 3 to 2 saw Walter Mondale on the side of "the average person."

In poll after poll, voters said that Democrat Mondale did "care more" about people like themselves, more about the elderly, more about the less fortunate and more about an arms limitation agreement with the Soviets. And, yes, said these very same voters, they were going to vote for Ronald Reagan, something they did do in record numbers.

But as political philosopher Alan Baron explains and Gillis Long understood, the logic of the voters is compelling. Consider Baron's analogy: In one hour, you are about to have 20 guests for an important dinner at your home. Your water pipe bursts. You have to make an immediate phone call. Now, who "cares more" about your about-to-be-ruined dinner and your predicament—your dear Mom or your local plumber? And who knows more about the theory of water pressure—the chairman of the local university's engineering department or the local plumber? Who has more personal charisma—Robert Redford or the plumber?

Whom do you call? You call the person with demonstrated competence, even if he does not care as much about your personal happiness and emotional well-being.

In a number of recent national elections, voters have understood that the Democrats have been more genuinely concerned with their happiness and more genuinely compassionate about the less fortunate than their opponents. But the opponents seemed to be much more likely to be able to fix the busted pipes before the evening was ruined, or worse.

Caring is a large help in winning congressional races. Americans are compassionate people, and they appreciate that quality in their elected representatives. But in their presidents, in addition to that compassion, the voters want, as Gillis Long told his fellow Democrats, "the toughness to govern" as well?

ELECTIN' POLITICIANS

Mr. KASTEN. Mr. President, I very much enjoyed reading the following poem "Electin' Politicians" which appeared in the January 4, 1985, issue of Agri-View.

I ask that the poem be printed in its entirety in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for the enjoyment of my colleagues. The poem was written by Robert Stowell, a farmer in Walworth, WI.

The poem follows:

ELECTIN' POLITICIANS

Electin' politicians can really
Be upsettin'
You cast your vote in a ballot box
And wonder what you're gettin'!

It's somethin' like a game of cards
Or maybe goin' fishin'
You never know what's comin' up
When you elect a politician!

Now I don't mind 'em shakin' hands
Or even doffin' hats
But why do they promise us so much
Then change their minds . . . like that!

One says he'll fix the national debt
The other'll curb inflation
But it costs as much to pay these men
As it did to run the nation!

They've got a cure for everything
From bussin' to pollution
But when the election's over
They've forgotten each solution!

"We'll lower the cost of livin'!"
They cry from stage and gallery
And then their first official act
Is . . . to raise their salary!

They say they're for the workin' man
They preach it all the time
Then spend a million dollars
Just to give him back a dime!

If we would run a business
The way the country's run
We'd all be takin' welfare
And baskin' in the sun!

They throw hundred dollar dinners
With folks dancin' and a 'drinkin'
Then hire twenty "experts"
To help 'em do their thinkin'!

And limousines may add prestige
When travellin' hill and holler
But I'd sure like a candidate
Who's thrifty with a dollar!

I guess I'm just a simple man
Indulgin' a suspicion
That I'd rather trust a nervous cow
Than trust a politician!

THE REAUTHORIZATION OF THE JUVENILE JUSTICE AND DELINQUENCY PREVENTION ACT OF 1974

Mr. DENTON. Mr. President, on October 12, 1984, President Reagan signed legislation which reauthorized the Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention Act through 1988. The extension indicates a continued commitment on the part of the Federal Government to juvenile justice.

With a strong Federal commitment, significant progress has been achieved in meeting the principal mandates of the Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention Act of 1974 of: First, deinstitutionalization of status offenders, such as running away or truancy, which would not be offenses if committed by an adult, and second, removal of juveniles from adult jails and lockups.

However, despite this progress, thousands of children are inappropriately incarcerated each year. According to a study prepared by the Office of Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention, based on 1978 figures, entitled, "Juvenile Suicides in Adult Secure Detention Facilities," an estimated 479,000 juveniles continue to be held in adult jails and lockups each year. Of these, approximately 20 percent are accused of status offenses. Statistics supplied by Alfred S. Regnery, Administrator of OJJDP at a Subcommittee on Juvenile Justice hearing, indicated that the number of youths held "in regular contact with adults" has been reduced to 27,552. This total does not include data from the four nonparticipating States. The number held in adult jails and lockups generally is much higher.

Other estimates of the number of status offenders held in secure facilities annually range from 35,000 to 50,000. Recent statistics supplied by Mr. Regnery indicate that in the 53 participating jurisdictions, 22,833 status offenders are annually held in secure detention.

Gary Turbak in an article entitled "Children in Jail: A Shocking Crime" which appeared in the January 1985 edition of Kiwanis, forcefully demonstrates what can happen to juveniles who are held in adult jails. With the reauthorization of the Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention Act and a recommitment by the Federal Government, the progress in meeting the mandates of the act of removing juveniles from adult jails and thereby preventing the tragedies cited by Mr. Turbak, will become more and more significant.

I ask unanimous consent that the Turbak article be printed in its entirety in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CHILDREN IN JAIL: A SHOCKING CRIME

(By Gary Turbak)

One December morning in 1981, Robert, thirteen, walked into a grocery store in a small town in western Tennessee. As he strolled the aisles of the tiny market, he slipped a ninety-nine-cent bag of candy into his pocket.

Suddenly, he felt the store owner's hand on his shoulder and in a few minutes a deputy sheriff arrived. Though the boy's only previous brush with the law had involved the shoplifting of a can of fishing bait, the police threw Robert into the county jail.

No detention hearing was held. No judge was notified. No charges were filed. On their own, the police decided that Robert needed to be kept in custody.

To separate Robert from adult inmates, jailers placed the boy in a dull gray, windowless, isolation cell measuring about eight feet by five feet. He was allowed no exercise or recreation. He left his cell only to go to the bathroom. A previous eye injury went untreated. Eventually, the boy's mother (who at first had been denied access to her son) was allowed to bring Robert clean clothes and a few other items.

For eight days, this thirteen-year-old suspected candy thief languished in solitary confinement. Only when a local public defender heard about Robert was a judge consulted and the boy released.

Robert's case was not an aberration, not a one-in-a-million foul-up. The seamy nether world of juvenile justice is full of such cases.

Each year in the United States alone, nearly 500,000 youngsters "do time" in adult jails and lockups. (A lockup is a facility, usually municipal, for temporary detention of accused prisoners.) These are the places—often old, dark, and dirty—where town drunks sleep it off and burglars, thieves, and other criminals serve their time. Sometimes, kids and criminals end up in the same cell.

A child's average stay in jail is 4.8 days, and nearly 10 percent of these kids are thirteen years old or younger, according to the US Department of Justice's Office of Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention.

As flotsam in what sometimes is a human cesspool, these kids are sometimes beaten, raped, and sodomized—and commit suicide at an alarming rate. Some are murdered.

They are also some times denied basic rights. Though adults in many jails are allowed a phone call, mail, and visitors, juveniles often are not. Many accused adults may post bail and go home. Juveniles may not.

About 20 percent of the children in adult jails are there because they have committed status offenses—running away, skipping school, drinking, being sexually promiscuous. Four percent of the kids behind bars are accused of no offense at all. They are in jail because they are the victims (of incest or abuse, for example), and authorities don't know what else to do with them.

Most of the remaining kids have been accused of relatively minor crimes—shoplifting, petty theft, vandalism. Only about 10 percent of the youngsters in jail are accused of serious crimes.

In a kind of bizarre, backward justice, convicted juvenile offenders usually cannot be sentenced to county jails or other adult facilities. They must serve their time in juvenile detention centers. Yet in some communities, a youngster who is only accused of a crime may be tossed in with the dregs of humanity.

"Certainly, some kids do commit serious offenses, and they need to be incarcerated," says James Brown, director of the Community Research Center at the University of Illinois. "But adult jails and municipal lockups are not the places to hold kids—especially not status offenders. Conditions in most country jails are not adequate for adults, let alone children."

Juveniles, who usually are smaller, weaker, and less aggressive than other prisoners, frequently become the targets of jailhouse abuse. One boy, fourteen, was shot in the face by a trusty guard. A fifteen-year-old girl was raped repeatedly by the adult women in her cell. Another girl, fifteen, was thrown into a cell with an adult male drunk who raped her.

Often, juveniles behind bars have even more to fear from their own tortured minds than from fellow prisoners.

"There's a high potential for self-destruction for kids in jail," says Brown. "The suicide rate for juveniles in adult jails is eight times higher than the suicide rate for children in separate juvenile detention centers. And these are kids who have been convicted of nothing."

Stephen was one of statistics. About a week before Christmas in 1982, Stephen, fifteen, argued with his mother about money that was missing from her purse. When the disagreement became heated, the woman took her son to the local sheriff's office and confessed that she didn't know what to do with the boy.

A local judge did. Stephen was placed in the county jail, where he had recently served a four-day sentence for being chronically absent from school. At 11 pm, the door slammed shut on the second-floor juvenile cell.

Out of sight and sound of the jail office one floor below, Stephen removed his long-sleeved shirt. One sleeve he tied securely to a cell bar high above the floor. Then he climbed on top of the shower fixture, knotted the other sleeve around his neck, and jumped. By 11:30 pm, Stephen was dead.

Out of every 100,000 kids put in jail, twelve will kill themselves there, according to the National Coalition for Jail Reform. And it is thought that each year as many as 1,500 kids attempt suicide while in an adult jail.

But even when children do not harm themselves and are separated from violent prisoners, jail can still be a very dangerous place. In February 1981, Barbara—a short, dark-haired honor student—and a girlfriend took her family car and, without their parents' permission, headed from Ohio toward South Carolina to visit Barbara's brother. Two days later, police in South Carolina spotted the girls, both fifteen, and they were returned to their parents.

Back in Ohio, Barbara's parents wanted the matter dropped, but the juvenile-court judge did not. He ordered the pair held in the county jail for five days to teach them a lesson.

Late on the third night, a twenty-one-year-old deputy jailer, a trusty inmate, and another immate released by the jailer, came to the girls' cell. Over the next hour, the men led Barbara and two other girls one by one into an adjacent cell block, where they sexually assaulted the teen-agers. Finally, on Tuesday morning, the girls were released, but the damage had been done.

Even if a child is not physically harmed by his stay in a county jail, he or she may walk out with another kind of scar.

Says the University of Illinois' James Brown: "A kid in a small town who gets thrown into the county jail will carry the jailbird stigma with him for a long time.

The 450 largest cities in the US have separate detention facilities for juveniles and do not mix adult offenders with children. In many rural and semiurban areas, however, kids are commonly held in a county jail or municipal lockup.

If you think there should be a law against this, you're right. There already is.

The US Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention Act, passed in 1974, prohibits the detention of juveniles in any institution in which they have contact with adult prisoners. Many jurisdictions attempt to comply with the law by separating juveniles from adults within a jail.

The statute also calls for states to begin removing juveniles entirely from adult jails by the end of 1985 and to complete that process by 1987. The problem is that the act has no sharp teeth. The only leverage it holds over noncomplying states is a cutoff of federal funds.

"Most states also have laws requiring the sight and sound separation of juveniles from adults in jails, but enforcement is another question," says Linda O'Neal, director of the Institute for Children's Resources in Tennessee. "For example, about 90 percent of the kids in Tennessee jails are not separated by sight and sound from adult prisoners. And it's not unusual to have adults and juveniles in the same cell."

But most experts agree that even separating juveniles from adults within a jail is not enough.

"Convicted prisoners—of any age—should not be held with juveniles who have only been accused of wrongdoing," says Barbara Fruchter, executive director of the Juvenile Justice Center of Pennsylvania. "Until he has had his trial, a child must be presumed innocent, and he should not be held with convicted criminals, even other juveniles."

In May 1982, police in an Idaho city served seventeen-year-old Paul with a contempt of court summons for not paying $73 in traffic fines and court costs. Paul, a lean, blond-haired high school drop-out, had a reputation as a good, hard-working youngster. He had never been in serious trouble with the law.

He talked the matter over with his parents, and together they decided that Paul should be accountable for his negligence and go to jail—the punishment in that city for not paying traffic fines.

Apprehensive about doing time in the county jail, Paul was relieved to see that his cellmates also were teen-agers. He told a visitor: "Tell Dad not to worry. I'm in a cell with five guys my own age. I'll be all right."

What Paul perhaps did not know was that two of the young men were convicted felons and that among them the teens faced fifty felony charges.

Less than twenty-four hours after locking the door behind Paul, jail guards found him slumped and bleeding in the cell shower stall. Over a period of fourteen hours, Paul had been brutalized by his cellmates.

They wrapped toilet paper around his feet and set it on fire. They held his head under water in a filthy toilet bowl and told him to blow bubbles. They smashed his nose with a shoe. They took turns kicking him in the head and groin.

At one point, they held his limp body up to a window so inmates in the exercise yard could view their work. Later that day, Paul died—for not paying $73 in traffic fines.

Why are kids held in adult jails? Who's responsible for this practice? There are no easy answers.

Very few people openly support the practice, and every major organization involved with juvenile justice stands opposed to it. In the US, the American Bar Association, the National Council of Juvenile and Family Court Judges, the National Sheriff's Association, the Department of Justice, and many other organizations have called for removal of juveniles from adult jails.

"Most sheriffs hate having kids in their jails and will do anything within reason to get them out," says attorney Mark Soler, director of the Youth Law Center in San Francisco, California. Children simply do not make good inmates. And officials know that law-suits may arise if anything goes wrong while youngsters are in their custody.

Many juvenile court judges also detest the jailing of children. "In most instances, it's a cruel and inhuman thing to do to the child." says Luke Quinn, probate judge in Flint, Michigan.

But some juvenile court judges have a different attitude. "A large number of judges think it's a good idea to punish kids by locking them up in jail," says Soler. "They believe the experience will teach the kids a lesson."

Before being ordered by the courts to stop the practice, the Ohio judge who jailed Barbara had routinely sentenced juveniles to jail for such offenses as smoking (tobacco) cigarettes, swearing in school, and skipping classes.

But the blame does not lie solely at the feet of individual jurists who send kids to jail. In large measure, it rests on the shoulders of society—and on parents.

Says Soler: "There's an institutional inertia that keeps sending kids to jail. It's a tradition in some areas. And parents are responsible, too. Some parents still believe jail will teach their kid something, but they don't really understand how terrifying it can be for a child."

In Canada, however, things are different. It has a long-standing national tradition of separating juveniles from adults.

"Since around the turn of the century, Canada has prohibited the jailing of juveniles in adult facilities," explains Anthony Doob, director of the University of Toronto's Center of Criminology. "With the rare exception of juveniles who commit very serious offenses, no children are held in adult jails in Canada. In fact, we don't even hold very many children in juvenile facilities prior to their court appearances."

In Canada, status offenders (the truants, runaways, drinking teens) are handled by provincial welfare—not law enforcement—agencies, and there is no provision for jailing these juveniles.

"A province such as British Columbia may have about 30,000 incarcerations in a year, but only about ten of them will involve juveniles under the age of seventeen," says Peter Elliott of the Canadian Center for Justice Statistics.

Perhaps the major reason for the difference between the two nations is that the US labors under a mosaic of state regulations, while Canada's entire juvenile justice system is governed by the sweeping Young Offenders Act.

According to the University of Illinois' James Brown, about ten states in the US have legislation or court decisions prohibiting the jailing of juveniles and have or are developing alternative programs. About thirty states have made a philosophical commitment to getting kids out of jails, but programs are still in the planning stages. About ten states have made no commitment.

Many areas are indeed developing effective alternatives. Maine, Utah, and Michigan operate regional detention centers that can serve even the remotest areas. In Annapolis, Maryland, police use citations similar to parking tickets to order minor offenders to court.

In New Bedford, Massachusetts, women are paid to take female juvenile offenders into their homes and provide twenty-four-hour supervision. In other places, juvenile suspects may live at home, but they must check in with trained supervisors once or twice each day.

Pennsylvania is one state where there are no juveniles in adult jails. In the early 1970s, a coalition of concerned people formed the Juvenile Justice Center (JJC) of Pennsylvania to educate citizens about the injustices foisted upon children in adult jails. The JJC organized tours of local jails for parents and other concerned community members.

"People seem to think that once a child is arrested, wise and kindly authorities determine what is best for the youngster and act as surrogate parents," says Barbara Fruchter, the JJC's executive director. "We know now that instead the children are sometimes brutalized, abused, neglected, and held with dangerous criminals."

Through the work of the JJC and other organizations, Pennsylvania passed a law in 1977 prohibiting the jailing of juveniles in adult facilities. A network of alternatives—group homes, foster care, and close supervision—now exists to care for nondangerous juvenile offenders. The state and communities share the cost of alternative care.

Pennsylvania has reduced its juvenile jail population from 3,300 to zero.

Even without sweeping legislation the number of juveniles in jail can be reduced dramatically by closely screening their admission. Often, the decision to jail a juvenile is a subjective judgment call. Kids thrown in to jail in one community may go free in another.

The American Bar Association has suggested that three factors be considered when determining whether a juvenile needs secure detention: First, what is the suspected offense? Second, what is the youngster's criminal record? And finally, has the juvenile failed to appear in court before?

Wherever citizens have become concerned about this problem, group homes, attention centers, runaway programs, evening-report centers, counseling programs, and other alternatives to jail emerge. And many communities have found alternative care to be significantly cheaper than putting kids in jail.

"Possible solutions," says James Brown, "are limited only by the creativity of a community and its desire to keep its kids out of jail."

THE STOCKHOLM CONFERENCE: A REPORT ON ITS FIRST YEAR

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, last November, I visited the Stockholm Conference on confidence-building measures in Europe. There I held detailed consultations with the U.S. delegation and had a thorough exchange of opinions with the chief of the Soviet delegation, Ambassador Oleg Grinevsky. Although there are many differences between our country and the Soviets, I came away from my discussions in Stockholm convinced that there are real possibilities there for taking practical steps to reduce the risk of war in Europe.

It is my profound belief that we have neglected for too long the vital task of putting into place in Europe arrangements which will help prevent miscalculations and crises, and by these means reducing the risks of war in Europe to the vanishing point. Such measures cannot be a substitute for substantial reductions in both conventional and nuclear forces. They can, however, complement other arms control measures in a way which would make the world truly safer for all of us.

Recently, the Stockholm Conference agreed unanimously to proceed to the next phase of the negotiations by establishing working groups to begin the process of detailed analysis and criticism which is the necessary precondition to the drafting of agreements. In my meeting with the Soviet Ambassador to the Stockholm Conference, I emphasized that the U.S. Senate solidly supports President Reagan's efforts to bring about meaningful and equitable agreements to reduce the risks of war. Let us hope that Soviet agreement to enter this new phase of the negotiations in Stockholm means that the Soviets are now also prepared for such agreements.

Recently, Ambassador Goodby, the head of our delegation in Stockholm gave a year-end report on the Conference to the French Institute of International Relations. I find this report to be a good succinct summary of the issues before the Conference and I ask unanimous consent that it be inserted in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the report was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE STOCKHOLM CONFERENCE: A REPORT ON ITS FIRST YEAR

(Ambassador James E. Goodby)

I. THE STAKES

Last July, your distinguished and talented Associate Director, Pierre Lellouche, wrote in Newsweek magazine that "The Soviets are quietly turning the Stockholm forum into a deadly machinery to alter to its advantage the postwar political and strategic order in Europe." Their method, he wrote, was to influence Western public opinion through "empty but nice sounding declarations"; their objective was to establish a "Pan-European security order from which the United States would ultimately be expelled." And he argued that "Western weakness . . . makes for the steady success of Moscow's strategy."

It is too seldom noticed that the Stockholm Conference, in fact, is addressing matters which could lead to profound changes in the present system of European security. Because the Conference is dealing with some of the most fundamental issues of Western security, it is no exaggeration to say that the essential agenda of Stockholm is the future political and strategic order in Europe. Stockholm is a part of the struggle between contending visions of the future. Ideas which are being discussed there must necessarily be seen as potentially contributing to the success of one or the other of these visions.

The Soviet vision we know well. As practiced in the past it has required limitations on the sovereignty of neighboring states; it is based on the expectation of endless confrontation and an impulse towards hegemony, as the ultimate requirement of security. The Western vision hopes that despite deep and persisting ideological differences, the walls which now divide the community of European nations can give way to a system more tolerant of diversity; that security can be found in balance and restraint. Of course, we are speaking of long historical processes, and, of course, the Stockholm Conference is only one of the arenas in which this "long twilight struggle" is being conducted. But when one hears of the seemingly trivial debate in Stockholm over obscure or arcane points, it is well to recall, as Mr. Lellouche has done, that the ultimate stakes are very high indeed.

II. THE BALANCE SHEET

If the stakes in this "Great Game" are so fateful, we must weigh what the Soviets have done to create a new strategic order in Europe and what degree of success they have achieved. As Pierre Lellouche suggests, some Soviet proposals at Stockholm are "empty but nice-sounding declarations." Others have more content, but it is of a nature designed to disadvantage the West. Some proposals, such as those relating to chemical weapons and military budgets, would cut across useful and promising work being done elsewhere. In these categories fall the following Soviet proposals: a pledge not to be the first to use nuclear weapons; nuclear-free zones; a freeze and reduction of military budgets; and a ban on chemical weapons in Europe. And, indeed, as Mr. Lellouche suggests, these proposals have the potential for altering the global balance of power.

But the fact is that there is no ground swell of support at Stockholm for this Soviet program nor for any individual proposal in it. The neutral and non-aligned countries have introduced a series of proposals, the thrust of which is quite different from the direction taken by Moscow. The countries of the Atlantic Alliance have patiently exposed the shortcomings in each of these Soviet proposals. No one can credibly contend that the Soviets have succeeded in turning Stockholm into a propaganda platform which has deceived public opinion. The press, when it covers Stockholm, quite sensibly has found the stock items of the Soviet program to be not very interesting. Moscow has tried hard to steer Stockholm toward a polemical debate about nuclear weapons. As the party which last year chose to turn its back on nuclear negotiations, however, the Soviet case has not seemed very plausible.

Now we should ask how Western ideas are faring at Stockholm. Norway's Johan Holst wrote recently that "Confidence-building measures should be viewed as elements in a process for peaceful change of the post-war political order in Europe toward a more open, equitable, and cooperative order." These words elegantly sum up the larger aims of the proposals which the Atlantic Alliance has introduced in Stockholm. The West has held that Stockholm can be a place for serious arms control business and that this should be based on the principle of cooperation among all participants on an equal footing. An approach based on mutual, rather than unilateral, advantage in the building of confidence and the enhancement of stability implies a relationship among all the nations of Europe which is antithetical to the instinct for hegemony. Among other things, the proposals of the Atlantic Alliance emphasize the need for accurate perceptions of the intent of military operations, as a remedy for miscalculation and a deterrent against surprise attack. This objective requires positive cooperation, since it concerns the act of reassurance. And that means greater openness, or as the Belgian Ambassador at Stockholm nicely put it, the "de-mystification" of military activities on the continent of Europe.

In contrast to the polite but rather indifferent reaction to the supposedly eye-catching wares of the Soviet Union, the down-to-earth ideas which have been advanced by the countries of the Atlantic Alliance are in the mainstream of the Conference. The neutral and non-aligned group has presented very similar proposals. The debate in the Conference has been focused primarily on the theme of how to strengthen the practical confidence-building measures first developed in the Helsinki Final Act of 1975. The press in Western Europe almost unanimously has seen the purpose of the Stockholm Conference as that of reducing the risk of war through implementing practical measures designed to prevent crises and foster practical forms of cooperation. In short, Western ideas and the specific methods of implementing those ideas seem to be accepted as the real business of Stockholm.

I turn now to a description of some of the specific Western proposals and objectives in Stockholm and to a few of the key developments of the year just passing.

III. A NEW APPROACH TO ARMS CONTROL

Stockholm is not only about political visions; it is also and most immediately about a new approach to arms control. In the last quarter of a century very few arms control efforts have been aimed at eliminating the proximate causes of war, such as crises arising from misperceptions. Arms control negotiations typically have dealt with reducing the perceived threat, whether that be the threat perceived from arsenals of nuclear warheads or from the levels of conventional forces in Central Europe. The few arms control attempts to deal directly with the "proximate" causes of war have been important but limited in scope and objectives, the Moscow-Washington "hot line" and the United States-Soviet "incidents at sea" agreement being two examples. No comprehensive negotiation has yet succeeded in putting into place arrangements designed to prevent crises or to contain or resolve them should they occur. This is, however, the aim of the Western nations represented at Stockholm. Success in achieving this goal would encourage natural and normal relations among the countries comprising the whole of Europe.

Another way of considering the difference between "classical" arms control and the new ideas being discussed in Stockholm is that the former has dealt with the levels of forces whereas the latter deals with the operations of military forces. "Classical" arms control negotiations typically try to establish long-term stability, for example, by providing greater predictability about the types and levels of strategic forces that will be maintained over a future span of time. But in Stockholm, the Allies are urging agreements which will promote short-term stability, that is, during periods of intense and possibly turbulent international political developments which might require urgent attention. The aim would be to have procedures in place which would prevent misunderstandings possibly leading to dangerous escalation and which would assist nations in keeping potentially dangerous situations under control. How well the West has done in rallying support for this point of view may be seen in the following review of other proposals introduced in Stockholm.

During 1984, five sets of proposals were submitted to the Stockholm Conference. In addition to those of the Atlantic Alliance, proposals were advanced by Romania, by the neutral and nonaligned countries, by the Soviet Union, and by Malta.

Romania's proposals were important for several reasons. Its ideas included elements based on the Warsaw Pact's political proposals, but also included were interesting approaches to confidence-building designed to strengthen the measures agreed to in the Helsinki Final Act. One of the Soviet Union's proposals also provided for improvements in "Helsinki-style" confidence-building measures. The proposals submitted by the neutral and nonaligned countries deserve special attention because they have helped to define the "center of gravity" of the Stockholm Conference. Nine of the twelve proposals included in their approach were similar to those introduced by the Allies. Three of them went beyond the Alliance's approach, in that they called for specific limitations, or constraints, on the way military forces could be deployed. In so doing, the neutral countries identified a "gray zone" that lies between the stabilizing intent of the Alliance's proposals and the arms reduction aims of "classical" arms control. Their approach deserves—and is receiving—serious study.

The point which emerges from this is clear: there is a significant degree of convergence between all of these proposals and those made by the Allies.

IV. THE MECHANICS OF UNDERWRITING STABILITY

The nations of the Atlantic Alliance have used as their common point of departure the confidence-building measures of the 1975 Final Act of Helsinki. Those measures were modest experiments; they needed to be improved substantially. In their proposals, the Western countries are seeking to negotiate agreements that will, among other things, build on the rudimentary notification and observation procedures in the Helsinki Final Act. By mandate, the Stockholm Conference is already advancing significantly from the Final Act: by mutual agreement of all the countries, Stockholm is dealing with the whole of Europe, from the Atlantic to the Urals, whereas the Final Act exempted most of the European part of the Soviet Union.

The countries of the Atlantic Alliance are seeking to extend notification of maneuvers to include alerts, amphibious operations, and mobilization. They are urging that military units, specifically the division rather than levels of manpower, should be the basis for notifications. They are proposing an exchange of information as a standard against which to judge the significance of out-of-garrison military activities. On-site inspection to clear up questions arising from implementation of this agreement and to defuse potential crises should be part of a strengthened regime for enhancing stability. Means for urgent communications among the participants in this system could also serve to deter or resolve crises. The Allies are seeking longer advance notice of military activities and a lower threshold for notification than was provided in the Helsinki Final Act. In addition, the Western countries are proposing to exchange annual forecasts of military operations within the zone. This annual forecast will have a constraining effect, in that it will be more difficult for a military exercise suddenly to be mounted for the purpose of political intimidation. Together with mandatory observation of all notified military activities, these measures would exert pressure for stability in Europe. By establishing normal patterns of military activities for military operations in Europe and arrangements for reacting jointly to situations outside these "norms", we would create conditions which could facilitate the resolution of potential crises.

Johan Holst has suggested that "We should look at confidence-building measures as management instruments designed to reduce the pressure from arms on the process of politics during peacetime and on decision-making in crisis and war." The Alliance's proposals are designed to do exactly that. If a system can be established which promotes stability, which damps down potential crises, which discourages the use of military force for political intimidation, and in which crises can be contained and quickly resolved, we will indeed have "reduced the pressures from arms on the process of politics".

V. SOME PERSPECTIVES ON 1984

The Foreign Ministers of the thirty-five participants opened the Conference in January 1984, a period that marked, in retrospect, the beginning of a transition in Soviet-American relations. President Reagan's major policy statement on Soviet-American relations was delivered on January 16; it was followed immediately by talks between Secretary Shultz and Foreign Minister Gromyko. Although icy winds from the East were lowering temperatures everywhere, the seeds of future negotiations were even then being planted.

Perhaps the most important political impetus which the Stockholm Conference received during the year was President Reagan's speech of June 4 in Dublin. In that speech the President, in effect, outlined the shape of an ultimate agreement when he mentioned the possibility of discussing a Soviet-sponsored proposal regarding nonuse of force if the Soviets would negotiate concrete confidence-building measures such as those which the Alliance and the neutral countries had been advocating.

In the four sessions which were held during 1984, however, the Soviets showed little inclination to accept the Alliance's invitation to a negotiation. But just today, December 3, all participants, including the Soviet Union, have agreed on a working structure which should encourage serious and detailed negotiations. This could be a turning point. The opportunity now exists, more than ever before, for the "flexible give-and-take negotiating process" President Reagan called for in September. The portents are increasingly favorable, and we hope that the Soviets will use this new opportunity to work out agreements within the range of proposals which are truly negotiable at Stockholm. There has existed for some time a substantive "point of departure" for negotiations which many delegations have already discerned; now there is available to the negotiators a structure to facilitate detailed comparison of proposals and to begin the process of bridging the gaps.

It should be noted that many delegations in Stockholm have remarked that all the problems to which individual nations attach high priority cannot possibly be dealt with in Stockholm. But these matters need not go unattended, quite the contrary. For example, President Reagan in speaking before the United Nations on September 24 offered some ideas which would help to build confidence bilaterally between the United States and the Soviet Union. It is obvious that the Stockholm Conference is not the universe. Many things can be done bilaterally or in other forums to improve confidence between states; these could reinforce measures agreed in Stockholm.

VI. SUMMING UP

Today, as we near the end of the Conference's first year, it seems that the West is not doing too badly, as measured against the basic thesis of Pierre Lellouche. The weakness to which he referred has not been in evidence. Perhaps we may even be permitted to say that the restoration of America's sense of strength, purpose, and confidence had something to do with this.

The Conference appears to have accepted a Western concept of security. Plenty of declarations have been heard from the East, but the majority of the Conference participants appear firmly committed to serious negotiations on practical measures designed to enhance stability in Europe. A consensus-building process has been at work which points to an outcome based on combining a reaffirmation of the renunciation of force with practical confidence-building measures intended to give real expression to that principle. And the idea of a more open continent is even more firmly entrenched than ever.

The Soviets, even if they use the new working structure to begin to hammer out a consensus, certainly will continue to offer the West self-serving panaceas for Europe's security problems. The temptation to seize easy results at the expense of meaningful results will always be there and it will always be exploited to the disadvantage of the West, if possible. But the first year of discussions suggests that if the West remains united, meaningful results are possible in Stockholm.

The meeting between Secretary Shultz and Foreign Minister Gromyko in January will, we hope, lead to a common understanding as to the subject and objectives of negotiations on a whole range of nuclear issues. We hope, also, that in this same spirit the nations participating in the Stockholm Conference may be able in the course of 1985 to make progress towards more stable and cooperative relations and an easing of military confrontation. Whatever the success of other negotiations in reducing the level of arms and men, formidable and potentially devastating military power will exist for a long time to come. While our nations strive to reduce the level of armaments, we must also strive in Stockholm to reduce to the vanishing point the risk of a war that no one wants.

As the Stockholm Conference convened nearly one year ago, President Reagan spoke of Soviet-American relations in a way which, I think, sums up the American attitude towards this enterprise. He said:

"Strength and dialogue go hand-in-hand. We are determined to deal with our differences peacefully, through negotiations. We are prepared to discuss the problems that divide us, and to work for practical, fair solutions on the basis of mutual compromise. We will never retreat from negotiations."

CONCLUSION OF MORNING BUSINESS

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further morning business? If not, morning business is closed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

NOMINATION OF JAMES A. BAKER, III, TO BE SECRETARY OF THE DEPARTMENT OF THE TREASURY

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senate will now proceed into executive session to consider the nomination of James A. Baker III, of Texas, to be Secretary of the Treasury.

The Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

Mr PROXMIRE. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from Oregon is recognized.

Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays on the pending nomination.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second? There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

(Mr. STEVENS assumed the chair.)

Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, I think everybody in the body knows Jim Baker quite well. We know him as a man of competence, as a man of honesty, as a man of integrity, and, certainly, as a man of fairness. Most of us who have been here any length of time had some dealings with him when he was Under Secretary of Commerce in the later years of the Ford administration. Most of us on the Republican side, at least, are intimately familiar with him because of his involvement in the 1976 campaign for the reelection of President Ford and in Vice President Bush's campaign for the Presidential nomination in 1980. In every sense, he has dealt with all of us fairly and openly.

As to his particular qualifications to be Secretary of the Treasury, they are as good as any who have been submitted to us in the past and superior to most. If the argument is to be made, has this man served as a chairman of one of the regional Federal Reserve Boards, the answer of course is no. Has he taught economics at the University of Michigan and has he a Ph.D. from Harvard? Of course he has not. Are those qualifications necessary to be Secretary of the Treasury? They indeed are not.

What you want is a man of intelligence and you have it in Jim Baker.

What you want is a man of balance and you have it in Jim Baker.

What you want is a man who has a good concept of what is doable, and that is Jim Baker.

I can think of no one that the President could have submitted to us who is better suited right now for this position than Jim Baker.

The President will, at some time, be submitting to us a tax reform bill. He has not yet; the only bill that has been discussed is a tentative Treasury proposal. I think it is fair to say that there will be changes made in that proposal before it comes to us, and it will not come to us for some time.

There is no question that that tax reform bill is controversial. I personally like most of it. I intend to fight for it, and I intend to try to get the great bulk of it passed. But for any of us to pretend that it is not controversial would be either fooling ourselves or fooling the public. In order to get that bill passed, the President is going to need as Secretary to the Treasury a man who is very wise to the ways of this Congress and Jim Baker is that.
